CONGRESSIONAL RECORD,

FIFTY-NINTH CONGRESS, SECOND SESSION.

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE FIFTY-NINTH CONGRESS.

SECOND SESSION.

SENATE.

MONDAY, December 3, 1906.

The first Monday of December being the day prescribed by the Constitution of the United States for the annual meeting of Congress, the second session of the Fifty-ninth Congress commenced this day.

The Senate assembled in its Chamber at the Capitol.

The Vice-President (Mr. CHARLES W. FAIRBANKS) called the Senate to order at 12 o'clock noon.

PRAYER.

The Chaplain, Rev. EDWARD E. HALE, offered the following prayer:

Blessing and honor and glory and power be unto Him that sitteth upon the throne; and unto the Lamb forever and ever.

We know that all things work together for good to them who love God; to them who are called according to His purpose.

This is the covenant that I will make, saith the Lord: I will put my laws into their mind and write them in their heart. And I will be to them a God and they shall be to me a people.

Let us pray.

Our Father, who art with us in the majesty of Thy heaven, how can we thank Thee that we, Thy children, have our Father's help in all moments of our endeavors?

In Thine infinite providence Thou hast called this Senate together to serve Thee in the months of this winter; and Thy children are here to consecrate every day and every hour to that service of Thine which is perfect freedom. That they may walk together with God, help them, Father, with Thine own infinite help. Teach them with Thine own infinite wisdom that Thy law may be the law of this nation, and this that happy people whose God is the Lord.

We pray for the country which Thou hast led through the desert, through the wilderness, and through the terrible temptations of prosperity—which Thou hast led as a father leads his children.

Father, we ask Thy blessing upon all the servants of administration, and upon this Congress as it meets together now. There are those whose faces we are not to see again. We ask Thee to consecrate the memory of their lives to us, and for to-day and to-morrow, that every man may bear his brother's burden, so that all may work together in Thine infinite service for God and for humanity.

Hear us, answer us, bless us as Thine own children, in Christ Jesus.

Join all with me in the Lord's prayer.

Our Father who art in heaven, hallowed be Thy name; Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done, on earth as it is done in heaven. Give us this day our daily bread, and forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those who trespass against us. Lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil, for Thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, forever. Amen.

NOTIFICATION TO THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. HALE submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That a committee consisting of two Senators be appointed to join such committee as may be appointed by the House of Representatives, to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that a quorum of each House is assembled, and that Congress is ready to receive any communication he may be pleased to make.

The VICE-PRESIDENT appointed as the committee Mr. HALE and Mr. PETTUS.

NOTIFICATION TO THE HOUSE.

Mr. CULLOM submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary inform the House of Representatives that a quorum of the Senate is assembled, and that the Senate is ready to proceed to business.

HOUR OF DAILY MEETING.

Mr. ALDRICH submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the hour of daily meeting of the Senate be 12 o'clock meridian until otherwise ordered.

DISMISSAL OF THREE COMPANIES OF TWENTY-FIFTH INFANTRY.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I submit a resolution asking for certain information, and if it is not out of order I would ask for its present consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is the usual practice not to consider miscellaneous business until after the message from the President has been received, but there is no rule to that effect.

Mr. PENROSE. I ask unanimous consent that I may offer the resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution. The resolution will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the President be requested to communicate to the Senate, if not incompatible with the public interests, full information bearing upon the recent order dismissing from the military service of the United States three companies of the Twenty-fifth Regiment of Infantry United States troops (colored).

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution just read?

Mr. FORAKER. I offer as a substitute the resolution which I send to the desk, and I will ask that both may go over for consideration on a subsequent day.

Mr. SPOONER. I ask that the resolution be again read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. At the request of the Senator from Wisconsin, the resolution proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania will be again read by the Secretary.

The Secretary again read the resolution.

Mr. WARREN. I ask that the resolution may lie over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Under objection, the resolution will lie over.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask, as a matter of courtesy to the Senator from Ohio, that his substitute may be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. At the request of the Senator from Rhode Island, the substitute offered by the Senator from Ohio will be read.

The Secretary read the proposed substitute, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to furnish the Senate copies of all official letters, telegrams, reports, orders, etc., filed in the War Department in connection with the recent discharge of the enlisted men of Companies B, C, and D, Twenty-fifth United States Infantry, together with a complete list of the men discharged, showing the record of each, the amount of retained pay (under section 1281 and following sections of the Revised Statutes), if any, to the credit of each man at the time of his discharge; the ruling of the War Department, if any has been made in this or any other similar case, as to the effect upon his right to such retained pay, and also the ruling of the War Department, if any has been made in this or any similar case, as to the effect of such discharge upon the right of an enlisted man to retire on three-fourths pay, with an allowance for subsistence and clothing (under section 1260 and following sections of the Revised Statutes), and his right to enter a National Soldiers' Home (under section 4821 and following sections of the Revised Statutes); his right to be buried in a national cemetery (under section 4878 and following sections of the Revised Statutes), and his right to receive transportation and subsistence from place of discharge to his home, as provided for in section 1290 and following sections of the Revised Statutes; also a complete official record of the Twenty-fifth Regiment, United States Infantry, from the time of its muster-in to the date of the discharge of Companies B, C, and D.

Mr. FORAKER. I ask that both resolutions may go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is so ordered.

RECESS.

Mr. HALE (at 12 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.). Mr. President, a message from the President transmitting certain nominations will be here in a few moments. I do not think it proper that we should proceed to any general business before receiving a message from the President. Therefore I move that the Senate take a recess for ten minutes.

The motion was agreed to; and at the expiration of the recess (at 12 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the Senate reassembled.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Several messages in writing were received from the President of the United States by Mr. M. C. LATTA, one of his secretaries.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After fifteen minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 12 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, December 4, 1906, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, December 3, 1906.

This being the day designated by the Constitution for the annual meeting of Congress, the Members of the House of Representatives assembled in their Hall for the second session of the Fifty-ninth Congress, and at 12 o'clock m. were called to order by the Speaker.

The Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D., Chaplain of the House, offered the following prayer:

Eternal God, our heavenly Father, source of all good, our hearts instinctively turn to Thee for wisdom, strength, and guidance as we thus gather from all sections of our Union here under the Dome of its Capitol to conclude the work of the Fifty-ninth Congress. We bless Thee for the laws with which Thou hast surrounded us, for the intelligence with which Thou hast endowed us, for the riches which have come down to us out of the past, for the splendid opportunities of the present, and for the bright hopes and promises of the future. Grant, O most merciful Father, that these Thy servants may strive diligently to conform their resolves and harmonize their enactments with the laws which Thou hast ordained.

Let Thy richest blessings descend upon the Speaker of this House, that with characteristic zeal, energy, and courage he may guide through all its deliberations to the highest and best results.

Illumine from on high the minds of those who sit in judgment upon the laws enacted by the Congress that their decisions may be wise and just. Bless, we beseech Thee, the President of these United States, his advisers, and all others in authority, that the affairs of state may be wisely administered and the laws of the land faithfully executed, that the coordinate branches of the Government, thus working together and working with Thee, may fulfill in larger measure the ideals conceived of our fathers in "a government of the people, by the people, and for the people," that righteousness, truth, justice, peace, and good will may obtain, to the honor and glory of Thy holy name.

The empty seats on the floor of this House remind us of the strong-minded, pure-hearted, noble men who occupied them, but have been called to the higher life since last we met. We thank Thee for their genial presence so long among us, the work they accomplished for State and nation, the sweet memory and illustrious examples left behind them. Be very near, O God, our Heavenly Father, to the bereaved families. Uphold, sustain, and comfort them by the blessed hope of the immortality of the soul.

Impart, we implore Thee, more of Thyself unto us all, that we may become in deed and in truth sons of the living God after the similitude of Thy Son Jesus Christ our Lord and Master. Amen.

The SPEAKER. The roll call discloses the presence of 314 Members—a quorum.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the Secretary inform the House of Representatives that a quorum of the Senate is assembled and that the Senate is ready to proceed to business.

Also:

Resolved, That a committee consisting of two Senators be appointed, to join such committee as may be appointed by the House of Representatives, to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that a quorum of each House is assembled and that Congress is ready to receive any communication he may be pleased to make.

And that in compliance with the foregoing the Vice-President had appointed as said committee Mr. HALE and Mr. PETTUS.

SWEARING IN OF NEW MEMBERS.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, Mr. John M. Nelson, who has been elected from the Second district of Wisconsin as the successor of H. C. Adams, deceased, is present, and I request that he may be permitted to take the oath of office.

The credentials of Mr. Nelson were read.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, the Representative elected from the First district of Georgia, Mr. J. W. Overstreet, is present, his credentials have been filed, and I ask that he be permitted to take the oath of office.

The credentials of Mr. Overstreet were read.

Mr. BOUTELL. Mr. Speaker, Mr. Frank O. Lowden has been elected a Representative to fill the vacancy in the Thirteenth district of Illinois. His credentials are at the desk, and I ask that they be read.

The Clerk read the credentials of Mr. Lowden.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present the credentials of Mr. John E. Reyburn, of the Second district of Pennsylvania, of Mr. J. Hampton Moore, of the Third district of Pennsylvania, and of Mr. Charles N. Brumm, of the Twelfth district of Pennsylvania.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers the credentials of these three gentlemen, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the credentials of Messrs. Reyburn, Moore, and Brumm.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present the credentials of Mr. Clarence C. Gilhams, of the Twelfth district of Indiana. Mr. Gilhams is present and desires to take the oath of office.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana presents the following credentials, which will be read.

The Clerk read the credentials of Mr. Gilhams.

The SPEAKER. These several gentlemen whose credentials have been read will, if present, come forward to the area in front of the desk and take the oath of office.

Messrs. Overstreet of Georgia, Nelson, Lowden, Gilhams, Reyburn, Moore, and Brumm appeared at the bar of the House, and the oath of office was administered to them by the Speaker.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that Mr. E. W. Saunders, a Member-elect from the Fifth Virginia district, be sworn in. His credentials have not arrived, but there is no question of his election, and I have been in communication with the secretary of state of Virginia, who tells me that the canvass of the votes has been made and that Mr. Saunders has been declared duly elected.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that Mr. Saunders be sworn in as a Member of the House. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request on behalf of Mr. Riordan, of the Eighth district of New York, who has been duly elected.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I unite with my colleague in this request. I understand Mr. Riordan has been elected by a large majority. There is no question as to the result, no contest, and I hope the request will be granted.

The SPEAKER. Unanimous consent is asked that Mr. Riordan, of New York, be sworn as a Member of the House. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Messrs. Saunders and Riordan, if present, will please present themselves at the bar of the House.

Mr. Saunders and Mr. Riordan appeared at the bar of the House, and the Speaker administered to them the oath of office.

DELEGATE FROM ALASKA.

Mr. CUSHMAN. Mr. Speaker, I announce the presence here to-day of Hon. Frank H. Waskey, of Nome, Alaska, who under the act of Congress approved May 7, 1906, was on the 14th day of August, 1906, duly elected as the first Delegate from Alaska to the House of Representatives, to serve during the remainder of this, the Fifty-ninth Congress. His credentials are at the desk, Mr. Speaker, and I ask that they be read.

The Clerk read the credentials of Mr. Waskey.

Mr. CUSHMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the oath of office be now administered to Mr. Waskey.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will present himself.

Mr. Waskey was escorted to the bar of the House by Mr. CUSHMAN [being greeted with general applause], and the Speaker administered the oath of office to him.

NOTIFICATION TO THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution for present consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York offers for present consideration a resolution which will be reported by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That a committee of three members be appointed on the part of the House to join the committee appointed by the Senate to wait upon the President and inform him that a quorum of the two Houses is assembled and that Congress is ready to receive any communication he may have to make.

The resolution was agreed to; and the Speaker announced as the committee on the part of the House Mr. PAYNE, Mr. BOUTELL, and Mr. WILLIAMS.

NOTIFICATION TO THE SENATE.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution for present consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota offers the following resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House inform the Senate that a quorum of the House of Representatives has appeared and that the House is ready to proceed to business.

The resolution was agreed to.

COUDREY v. WOOD.

By unanimous consent, at the request of Mr. BARTHOLDT, leave was granted to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of Coudrey v. Wood, Fifty-ninth Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted:

To Mr. BABCOCK, for two days, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. DARRAGH, indefinitely, on account of business.

To Mr. THOMAS of Ohio, for four weeks, on account of illness.

To Mr. COCKRAN, indefinitely, on account of business.

REGENT OF THE SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication:

SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION,
Washington, D. C., December 1, 1906.

SIR: It is with profound regret that I have to inform you of the existence of a vacancy in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution, on the part of the House of Representatives, caused by the death of the Hon. Robert R. Hitt.

In accordance with section 5581 of the Revised Statutes, a copy of which I inclose, the appointment to fill the vacancy thus occasioned is to be made by the Speaker from the membership of the House of Representatives.

I am, sir, very respectfully, yours,

RICHARD RATHBUN,
Acting Secretary.

The Hon. JOSEPH G. CANNON,
Speaker of the House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the communication will be laid upon the table. The Chair announces as a member of the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution, Mr. MANN, in place of Mr. Hitt, deceased.

RESIGNATION OF REPRESENTATIVE GILLETT, OF CALIFORNIA.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication; which was read by the Clerk:

To the governor, C. Pardee, governor of the State of California, and to the Hon. Joseph G. Cannon, Speaker of the House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

You and each of you will please take notice that I hereby tender my resignation as a Member of the House of Representatives of the United States of America for the First Congressional district of the State of California, said resignation to take effect on and after November 4, 1906.

Dated October 3, 1906.

J. N. GILLETT.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE HITT.

Mr. LOWDEN. Mr. Speaker, it becomes my painful duty to announce the death of the Hon. ROBERT R. HITT, Representative of the Thirteenth district of Illinois. At a later day I shall ask that a time be set apart for exercises in memory of Mr. HITT. I now offer the following resolution and move its adoption.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. ROBERT R. HITT, a Representative from the State of Illinois in thirteen successive Congresses.

The resolution was agreed to.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE KETCHAM.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, it becomes my sad duty to announce the death of the Hon. JOHN H. KETCHAM, one of the oldest Members of the House by length of service. At some future day I shall ask the House to set aside a time to pay tribute to his memory. At this time I offer the following resolution, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. JOHN H. KETCHAM, a Representative from the State of New York in seventeen Congresses.

The resolution was agreed to.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE ADAMS, OF WISCONSIN.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. Speaker, it becomes my painful duty to announce the death of my distinguished predecessor, Hon. H. C. ADAMS, of Wisconsin, who died on his homeward journey at the close of the last session of Congress. At some future day I will ask that a time be set aside in which the friends and associates of the deceased Member may offer suitable tribute to his memory and services. I now offer the following resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. H. C. ADAMS, a Representative from the State of Wisconsin.

The resolution was agreed to.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE HOAR, OF MASSACHUSETTS.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, two years ago to-day it was my sad duty to make formal announcement here of the death of Senator George F. Hoar. Now death has left vacant in this House the place of his son ROCKWOOD HOAR, who died at his home, in Worcester, Mass., on the 1st day of last November.

He was elected to Congress just as his father passed away, and I think all men rejoiced in the hope that the magnificent record of the father might be taken up and long continued by the son. We do not in this country yield honors to heredity, but our sentiment and our judgment alike are captivated when we see the talents and character of a great father renewed and perpetuated in a worthy son. Our late colleague gave promise of such an inheritance, and in our short association here gave us reason to expect as well as hope that the duty to which three generations of eminent public service inspired and pledged him would be faithfully and honorably and adequately performed.

The practice of this House does not permit now of eulogy, but later in the session we shall ask that a day be set apart for consideration of his life and public service.

I now offer the following resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. ROCKWOOD HOAR, a Representative from the State of Massachusetts.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the memory of those Representatives whose deaths have been announced this House do now adjourn.

The resolutions were agreed to. Accordingly, in pursuance thereof, the House (at 12 o'clock and 54 minutes) adjourned until to-morrow at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, December 4, 1906.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. EDWARD E. HALE.

LEVI ANKENY, a Senator from the State of Washington; JAMES P. CLARKE, a Senator from the State of Arkansas; ALFRED B. KITTREDGE, a Senator from the State of South Dakota; ROBERT M. LA FOLLETTE, a Senator from the State of Wisconsin; FURNIFOLD M. SIMMONS, a Senator from the State of North Carolina, and WILLIAM P. WHYTE, a Senator from the State of Maryland, appeared in their seats to-day.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

WILLIAM J. BROWNING, the Chief Clerk of the House of Representatives, appeared and delivered the following message:

Mr. President, I am directed by the House of Representatives to inform the Senate that a quorum of the House of Representatives has assembled, and that the House is ready to proceed to business.

Also, that a committee of three has been appointed by the Speaker on the part of the House of Representatives to join the committee appointed on the part of the Senate to wait on the President of the United States and to notify him that a quorum of each of the two Houses has assembled and that Congress is ready to receive any communication he may be pleased to make, and that Mr. PAYNE of New York, Mr. BOUTELL of Illinois, and Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi have been appointed such committee on the part of the House.

The message also communicated to the Senate the intelligence of the death of Hon. ROBERT R. HITT, late a Representative from the State of Illinois; of Hon. JOHN H. KETCHAM, late a Representative from the State of New York; of Hon. H. C. ADAMS, late a Representative from the State of Wisconsin, and of Hon. ROCKWOOD HOAR, late a Representative from the State of Massachusetts, and transmitted resolutions of the House thereon.

NOTIFICATION TO THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. HALE and Mr. PETTUS, the committee appointed to wait upon the President of the United States, appeared; and

Mr. HALE said: Mr. President, the committee of the Senate and the House of Representatives have visited the President and informed him of the organization of Congress, and that it is ready to proceed to public business, upon which the President said that he would forthwith send a message in writing to Congress.

PRESIDENT'S ANNUAL MESSAGE.

Mr. M. C. LATTA, one of the secretaries of the President of the United States, appeared and said:

Mr. President, I am directed by the President of the United States to deliver to the Senate a message in writing.

The message was received from the secretary and handed to the Vice-President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the annual message of the President of the United States, which the Secretary will read.

The Secretary read the message as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

As a nation we still continue to enjoy a literally unprecedented prosperity; and it is probable that only reckless speculation and disregard of legitimate business methods on the part of the business world can materially mar this prosperity.

No Congress in our time has done more good work of importance than the present Congress. There were several matters left unfinished at your last session, however, which I most earnestly hope you will complete before your adjournment.

CORPORATION CAMPAIGN CONTRIBUTIONS.

I again recommend a law prohibiting all corporations from contributing to the campaign expenses of any party. Such a bill has already passed one House of Congress. Let individuals contribute as they desire; but let us prohibit in effective fashion all corporations from making contributions for any political purpose, directly or indirectly.

GOVERNMENT'S RIGHT OF APPEAL IN CRIMINAL CASES.

Another bill which has just passed one House of the Congress and which it is urgently necessary should be enacted into law is that conferring upon the Government the right of appeal in criminal cases on questions of law. This right exists in many of the States; it exists in the District of Columbia by act of the Congress. It is of course not proposed that in any case a verdict for the defendant on the merits should be set aside. Recently in one district where the Government had indicted certain persons for conspiracy in connection with rebates, the court sustained the defendant's demurrer; while in another jurisdiction an indictment for conspiracy to obtain rebates has been sustained by the court, convictions obtained under it, and two defendants sentenced to imprisonment. The two cases referred to may not be in real conflict with each other, but it is unfortunate that there should even be an apparent conflict. At present there is no way by which the Government can cause such a conflict, when it occurs, to be solved by an appeal to a higher court; and the wheels of justice are blocked without any real decision of the question. I can not too strongly urge the passage of the bill in question. A failure to pass it will result in seriously hampering the Government in its effort to obtain justice, especially against wealthy individuals or corporations who do wrong; and may also prevent the Government from obtaining justice for wageworkers who are not themselves able effectively to contest a case where the judgment of an inferior court has been against them. I have specifically in view a recent decision by a district judge leaving railway employees without remedy for violation of a certain so-called labor statute. It seems an absurdity to permit a single district judge, against what may be the judgment of the immense majority of his colleagues on the bench, to declare a law solemnly enacted by the Congress to be "unconstitutional," and then to deny to the Government the right to have the Supreme Court definitely decide the question.

It is well to recollect that the real efficiency of the law often depends not upon the passage of acts as to which there is great public excitement, but upon the passage of acts of this nature as to which there is not much public excitement, because there is little public understanding of their importance, while the interested parties are keenly alive to the desirability of defeating them. The importance of enacting into law the particular bill in question is further increased by the fact that the Government has now definitely begun a policy of resorting to the criminal law in those trust and interstate commerce cases where such a course offers a reasonable chance of success. At first, as was proper, every effort was made to enforce these laws by civil proceedings; but it has become increasingly evident that the action of the Government in finally deciding, in certain cases, to undertake criminal proceedings was justifiable; and though there have been some conspicuous failures in these cases, we have had many successes, which have undoubtedly had a deterrent effect upon evil-doers, whether the penalty inflicted was in the shape of fine or imprisonment—and penalties of both kinds have already been inflicted by the courts. Of course, where the judge can see his way to inflict the penalty of imprisonment the deterrent effect of the punishment on other offenders is increased; but sufficiently heavy fines accomplish much. Judge Holt, of the New York district court, in a recent decision admirably stated the need for treating with just severity offenders of this kind. His opinion runs in part as follows:

"The Government's evidence to establish the defendant's guilt was clear, conclusive, and undisputed. The case was a flagrant one. The transactions which took place under this illegal contract were very large; the amounts of rebates returned were considerable; and the amount of the rebate itself was large, amounting to more than one-fifth of the entire tariff charge for the transportation of merchandise from this city to Detroit. It is not too much to say, in my opinion, that if this business was carried on for a considerable time on that basis—that is, if this discrimination in favor of this particular shipper was made with an 18 instead of a 23 cent rate and the tariff rate was maintained as against their competitors—the result might be and not improbably would be that their competitors would be driven out of business. This crime is one which in its nature is deliberate and premeditated. I think over a fortnight elapsed between the date of Palmer's letter requesting the reduced rate and the answer of the railroad company deciding to grant it, and then for months afterwards this business was carried on and these claims for rebates submitted month after month and checks in payment of them drawn month after month. Such a violation of the law, in my opinion, in its essential nature, is a very much more heinous act than the ordinary, common, vulgar crimes which come before criminal courts constantly for punishment and which arise from sudden passion or temptation. This crime in this case was committed by men of education and of large business experience, whose standing in the community was such that they might have been expected to set an example of obedience to law, upon the maintenance of which alone in this country the security of their property depends. It was committed on behalf of a great railroad corporation, which, like other railroad corporations, has received gratuitously from the State large and valuable privileges for the public's convenience and its own, which performs quasi public functions and which is charged with the highest obligation in the transaction of its business to treat the citizens of this country alike, and not to carry on its business with unjust discriminations between different citizens or different classes of citizens. This crime in its nature is one usually done with secrecy, and proof of which it is very difficult to obtain. The interstate commerce act was past in 1887, nearly twenty years ago. Ever since that time complaints of the granting of rebates by railroads has been common, urgent, and insistent, and although the Congress has repeatedly passed legislation endeavoring to put a stop to this evil, the difficulty of obtaining proof upon which to bring prosecution in these cases is so great that this is the first case that has ever been brought in this court, and, as I am informed, this case and one recently brought in Philadelphia are the only cases that have ever been brought in the eastern part of this country. In fact, but few cases of this kind have ever been brought in this country, East or West. Now, under these circumstances, I am forced to the conclusion, in a case in which the proof is so clear and the facts are so flagrant, it is the duty of the court to fix a penalty which shall in some degree be commensurate with the gravity of the offense. As between the two defendants, in my opinion, the principal penalty should be imposed on the corporation. The traffic manager in this case, presumably, acted without any advantage to himself and without any interest in the transaction, either by the direct authority or in accordance with what he understood to be the policy or the wishes of his employer.

"The sentence of this court in this case is, that the defendant Pomeroy, for each of the six offenses upon which he has been convicted, be fined the sum of $1,000, making six fines, amounting in all to the sum of $6,000; and the defendant, The New York Central and Hudson River Railroad Company, for each of the six crimes of which it has been convicted, be fined the sum of $18,000, making six fines amounting in the aggregate to the sum of $108,000, and judgment to that effect will be entered in this case."

SETTING ASIDE OF JUDGMENTS AND GRANTING OF NEW TRIALS.

In connection with this matter, I would like to call attention to the very unsatisfactory state of our criminal law, resulting in large part from the habit of setting aside the judgments of inferior courts on technicalities absolutely unconnected with the merits of the case, and where there is no attempt to show that there has been any failure of substantial justice. It would be well to enact a law providing something to the effect that:

No judgment shall be set aside or new trial granted in any cause, civil or criminal, on the ground of misdirection of the jury or the improper admission or rejection of evidence, or for error as to any matter of pleading or procedure unless, in the opinion of the court to which the application is made, after an examination of the entire cause, it shall affirmatively appear that the error complained of has resulted in a miscarriage of justice.

INJUNCTIONS.

In my last message I suggested the enactment of a law in connection with the issuance of injunctions, attention having been sharply drawn to the matter by the demand that the right of applying injunctions in labor cases should be wholly abolished. It is at least doubtful whether a law abolishing altogether the use of injunctions in such cases would stand the test of the courts; in which case of course the legislation would be ineffective. Moreover, I believe it would be wrong altogether to prohibit the use of injunctions. It is criminal to permit sympathy for criminals to weaken our hands in upholding the law; and if men seek to destroy life or property by mob violence there should be no impairment of the power of the courts to deal with them in the most summary and effective way possible. But so far as possible the abuse of the power should be provided against by some such law as I advocated last year.

In this matter of injunctions there is lodged in the hands of the judiciary a necessary power which is nevertheless subject to the possibility of grave abuse. It is a power that should be exercised with extreme care and should be subject to the jealous scrutiny of all men, and condemnation should be meted out as much to the judge who fails to use it boldly when necessary as to the judge who uses it wantonly or oppressively. Of course a judge strong enough to be fit for his office will enjoin any resort to violence or intimidation, especially by conspiracy, no matter what his opinion may be of the rights of the original quarrel. There must be no hesitation in dealing with disorder. But there must likewise be no such abuse of the injunctive power as is implied in forbidding laboring men to strive for their own betterment in peaceful and lawful ways; nor must the injunction be used merely to aid some big corporation in carrying out schemes for its own aggrandizement. It must be remembered that a preliminary injunction in a labor case, if granted without adequate proof (even when authority can be found to support the conclusions of law on which it is founded), may often settle the dispute between the parties; and therefore if improperly granted may do irreparable wrong. Yet there are many judges who assume a matter-of-course granting of a preliminary injunction to be the ordinary and proper judicial disposition of such cases; and there have undoubtedly been flagrant wrongs committed by judges in connection with labor disputes even within the last few years, although I think much less often than in former years. Such judges by their unwise action immensely strengthen the hands of those who are striving entirely to do away with the power of injunction; and therefore such careless use of the injunctive process tends to threaten its very existence, for if the American people ever become convinced that this process is habitually abused, whether in matters affecting labor or in matters affecting corporations, it will be well-nigh impossible to prevent its abolition.

It may be the highest duty of a judge at any given moment to disregard, not merely the wishes of individuals of great political or financial power, but the overwhelming tide of public sentiment; and the judge who does thus disregard public sentiment when it is wrong, who brushes aside the plea of any special interest when the pleading is not founded on righteousness, performs the highest service to the country. Such a judge is deserving of all honor; and all honor can not be paid to this wise and fearless judge if we permit the growth of an absurd convention which would forbid any criticism of the judge of another type, who shows himself timid in the presence of arrogant disorder, or who on insufficient grounds grants an injunction that does grave injustice, or who in his capacity as a construer, and therefore in part a maker, of the law, in flagrant fashion thwarts the cause of decent government. The judge has a power over which no review can be exercised; he himself sits in review upon the acts of both the executive and legislative branches of the Government; save in the most extraordinary cases he is amenable only at the bar of public opinion; and it is unwise to maintain that public opinion in reference to a man with such power shall neither be expressed nor led.

The best judges have ever been foremost to disclaim any immunity from criticism. This has been true since the days of the great English Lord Chancellor Parker, who said: "Let all people be at liberty to know what I found my judgment upon; that, so when I have given it in any cause, others may be at liberty to judge of me." The proprieties of the case were set forth with singular clearness and good temper by Judge W. H. Taft, when a United States circuit judge, eleven years ago, in 1895:

"The opportunity freely and publicly to criticize judicial action is of vastly more importance to the body politic than the immunity of courts and judges from unjust aspersions and attack. Nothing tends more to render judges careful in their decisions and anxiously solicitous to do exact justice than the consciousness that every act of theirs is to be subjected to the intelligent scrutiny and candid criticism of their fellow-men. Such criticism is beneficial in proportion as it is fair, dispassionate, discriminating, and based on a knowledge of sound legal principles. The comments made by learned text writers and by the acute editors of the various law reviews upon judicial decisions are therefore highly useful. Such critics constitute more or less impartial tribunals of professional opinion before which each judgment is made to stand or fall on its merits, and thus exert a strong influence to secure uniformity of decision. But non-professional criticism also is by no means without its uses, even if accompanied, as it often is, by a direct attack upon the judicial fairness and motives of the occupants of the bench; for if the law is but the essence of common sense, the protest of many average men may evidence a defect in a judicial conclusion, though based on the nicest legal reasoning and profoundest learning. The two important elements of moral character in a judge are an earnest desire to reach a just conclusion and courage to enforce it. In so far as fear of public comment does not affect the courage of a judge, but only spurs him on to search his conscience and to reach the result which approves itself to his inmost heart, such comment serves a useful purpose. There are few men, whether they are judges for life or for a shorter term, who do not prefer to earn and hold the respect of all, and who can not be reached and made to pause and deliberate by hostile public criticism. In the case of judges having a life tenure, indeed, their very independence makes the right freely to comment on their decisions of greater importance, because it is the only practical and available instrument in the hands of a free people to keep such judges alive to the reasonable demands of those they serve.

"On the other hand, the danger of destroying the proper influence of judicial decisions by creating unfounded prejudices against the courts justifies and requires that unjust attacks shall be met and answered. Courts must ultimately rest their defense upon the inherent strength of the opinions they deliver as the ground for their conclusions and must trust to the calm and deliberate judgment of all the people as their best vindication."

There is one consideration which should be taken into account by the good people who carry a sound proposition to an excess in objecting to any criticism of a judge's decision. The instinct of the American people as a whole is sound in this matter. They will not subscribe to the doctrine that any public servant is to be above all criticism. If the best citizens, those most competent to express their judgment in such matters, and above all those belonging to the great and honorable profession of the bar, so profoundly influential in American life, take the position that there shall be no criticism of a judge under any circumstances, their view will not be accepted by the American people as a whole. In such event the people will turn to, and tend to accept as justifiable, the intemperate and improper criticism uttered by unworthy agitators. Surely it is a misfortune to leave to such critics a function, right in itself, which they are certain to abuse. Just and temperate criticism, when necessary, is a safeguard against the acceptance by the people as a whole of that intemperate antagonism toward the judiciary which must be combated by every right-thinking man, and which, if it became widespread among the people at large, would constitute a dire menace to the Republic.

LYNCHING.

In connection with the delays of the law, I call your attention and the attention of the Nation to the prevalence of crime among us, and above all to the epidemic of lynching and mob violence that springs up, now in one part of our country, now in another. Each section, North, South, East, or West, has its own faults; no section can with wisdom spend its time jeering at the faults of another section; it should be busy trying to amend its own shortcomings. To deal with the crime of corruption it is necessary to have an awakened public conscience, and to supplement this by whatever legislation will add speed and certainty in the execution of the law. When we deal with lynching even more is necessary. A great many white men are lynched, but the crime is peculiarly frequent in respect to black men. The greatest existing cause of lynching is the perpetration, especially by black men, of the hideous crime of rape—the most abominable in all the category of crimes, even worse than murder. Mobs frequently avenge the commission of this crime by themselves torturing to death the man committing it; thus avenging in bestial fashion a bestial deed, and reducing themselves to a level with the criminal.

Lawlessness grows by what it feeds upon; and when mobs begin to lynch for rape they speedily extend the sphere of their operations and lynch for many other kinds of crimes, so that two-thirds of the lynchings are not for rape at all; while a considerable proportion of the individuals lynched are innocent of all crime. Governor Candler, of Georgia, stated on one occasion some years ago: "I can say of a verity that I have, within the last month, saved the lives of half a dozen innocent negroes who were pursued by the mob, and brought them to trial in a court of law in which they were acquitted." As Bishop Galloway, of Mississippi, has finely said: "When the rule of a mob obtains, that which distinguishes a high civilization is surrendered. The mob which lynches a negro charged with rape will in a little while lynch a white man suspected of crime. Every Christian patriot in America needs to lift up his voice in loud and eternal protest against the mob spirit that is threatening the integrity of this Republic." Governor Jelks, of Alabama, has recently spoken as follows: "The lynching of any person for whatever crime is inexcusable anywhere—it is a defiance of orderly government; but the killing of innocent people under any provocation is infinitely more horrible; and yet innocent people are likely to die when a mob's terrible lust is once aroused. The lesson is this: No good citizen can afford to countenance a defiance of the statutes, no matter what the provocation. The innocent frequently suffer, and, it is my observation, more usually suffer than the guilty. The white people of the South indict the whole colored race on the ground that even the better elements lend no assistance whatever in ferreting out criminals of their own color. The respectable colored people must learn not to harbor their criminals, but to assist the officers in bringing them to justice. This is the larger crime, and it provokes such atrocious offenses as the one at Atlanta. The two races can never get on until there is an understanding on the part of both to make common cause with the law-abiding against criminals of any color."

Moreover, where any crime committed by a member of one race against a member of another race is avenged in such fashion that it seems as if not the individual criminal, but the whole race, is attacked, the result is to exasperate to the highest degree race feeling. There is but one safe rule in dealing with black men as with white men; it is the same rule that must be applied in dealing with rich men and poor men; that is, to treat each man, whatever his color, his creed, or his social position, with even-handed justice on his real worth as a man. White people owe it quite as much to themselves as to the colored race to treat well the colored man who shows by his life that he deserves such treatment; for it is surely the highest wisdom to encourage in the colored race all those individuals who are honest, industrious, law-abiding, and who therefore make good and safe neighbors and citizens. Reward or punish the individual on his merits as an individual. Evil will surely come in the end to both races if we substitute for this just rule the habit of treating all the members of the race, good and bad, alike. There is no question of "social equality" or "negro domination" involved; only the question of relentlessly punishing bad men, and of securing to the good man the right to his life, his liberty, and the pursuit of his happiness as his own qualities of heart, head, and hand enable him to achieve it.

Every colored man should realize that the worst enemy of his race is the negro criminal, and above all the negro criminal who commits the dreadful crime of rape; and it should be felt as in the highest degree an offense against the whole country, and against the colored race in particular, for a colored man to fail to help the officers of the law in hunting down with all possible earnestness and zeal every such infamous offender. Moreover, in my judgment, the crime of rape should always be punished with death, as is the case with murder; assault with intent to commit rape should be made a capital crime, at least in the discretion of the court; and provision should be made by which the punishment may follow immediately upon the heels of the offense; while the trial should be so conducted that the victim need not be wantonly shamed while giving testimony, and that the least possible publicity shall be given to the details.

The members of the white race on the other hand should understand that every lynching represents by just so much a loosening of the bands of civilization; that the spirit of lynching inevitably throws into prominence in the community all the foul and evil creatures who dwell therein. No man can take part in the torture of a human being without having his own moral nature permanently lowered. Every lynching means just so much moral deterioration in all the children who have any knowledge of it, and therefore just so much additional trouble for the next generation of Americans.

Let justice be both sure and swift; but let it be justice under the law, and not the wild and crooked savagery of a mob.

There is another matter which has a direct bearing upon this matter of lynching and of the brutal crime which sometimes calls it forth and at other times merely furnishes the excuse for its existence. It is out of the question for our people as a whole permanently to rise by treading down any of their own number. Even those who themselves for the moment profit by such maltreatment of their fellows will in the long run also suffer. No more shortsighted policy can be imagined than, in the fancied interest of one class, to prevent the education of another class. The free public school, the chance for each boy or girl to get a good elementary education, lies at the foundation of our whole political situation. In every community the poorest citizens, those who need the schools most, would be deprived of them if they only received school facilities proportioned to the taxes they paid. This is as true of one portion of our country as of another. It is as true for the negro as for the white man. The white man, if he is wise, will decline to allow the negroes in a mass to grow to manhood and womanhood without education. Unquestionably education such as is obtained in our public schools does not do everything toward making a man a good citizen; but it does much. The lowest and most brutal criminals, those for instance who commit the crime of rape, are in the great majority men who have had either no education or very little; just as they are almost invariably men who own no property; for the man who puts money by out of his earnings, like the man who acquires education, is usually lifted above mere brutal criminality. Of course the best type of education for the colored man, taken as a whole, is such education as is conferred in schools like Hampton and Tuskegee; where the boys and girls, the young men and young women, are trained industrially as well as in the ordinary public school branches. The graduates of these schools turn out well in the great majority of cases, and hardly any of them become criminals, while what little criminality there is never takes the form of that brutal violence which invites lynch law. Every graduate of these schools—and for the matter of that every other colored man or woman—who leads a life so useful and honorable as to win the good will and respect of those whites whose neighbor he or she is, thereby helps the whole colored race as it can be helped in no other way; for next to the negro himself, the man who can do most to help the negro is his white neighbor who lives near him; and our steady effort should be to better the relations between the two. Great though the benefit of these schools has been to their colored pupils and to the colored people, it may well be questioned whether the benefit has not been at least as great to the white people among whom these colored pupils live after they graduate.

Be it remembered, furthermore, that the individuals who, whether from folly, from evil temper, from greed for office, or in a spirit of mere base demagogy, indulge in the inflammatory and incendiary speeches and writings which tend to arouse mobs and to bring about lynching, not only thus excite the mob, but also tend by what criminologists call "suggestion," greatly to increase the likelihood of a repetition of the very crime against which they are inveighing. When the mob is composed of the people of one race and the man lynched is of another race, the men who in their speeches and writings either excite or justify the action tend, of course, to excite a bitter race feeling and to cause the people of the opposite race to lose sight of the abominable act of the criminal himself; and in addition, by the prominence they give to the hideous deed they undoubtedly tend to excite in other brutal and depraved natures thoughts of committing it. Swift, relentless, and orderly punishment under the law is the only way by which criminality of this type can permanently be suppressed.

CAPITAL AND LABOR.

In dealing with both labor and capital, with the questions affecting both corporations and trades unions, there is one matter more important to remember than aught else, and that is the infinite harm done by preachers of mere discontent. These are the men who seek to excite a violent class hatred against all men of wealth. They seek to turn wise and proper movements for the better control of corporations and for doing away with the abuses connected with wealth, into a campaign of hysterical excitement and falsehood in which the aim is to inflame to madness the brutal passions of mankind. The sinister demagogues and foolish visionaries who are always eager to undertake such a campaign of destruction sometimes seek to associate themselves with those working for a genuine reform in governmental and social methods, and sometimes masquerade as such reformers. In reality they are the worst enemies of the cause they profess to advocate, just as the purveyors of sensational slander in newspaper or magazine are the worst enemies of all men who are engaged in an honest effort to better what is bad in our social and governmental conditions. To preach hatred of the rich man as such, to carry on a campaign of slander and invective against him, to seek to mislead and inflame to madness honest men whose lives are hard and who have not the kind of mental training which will permit them to appreciate the danger in the doctrines preached—all this is to commit a crime against the body politic and to be false to every worthy principle and tradition of American national life. Moreover, while such preaching and such agitation may give a livelihood and a certain notoriety to some of those who take part in it, and may result in the temporary political success of others, in the long run every such movement will either fail or else will provoke a violent reaction, which will itself result not merely in undoing the mischief wrought by the demagogue and the agitator, but also in undoing the good that the honest reformer, the true upholder of popular rights, has painfully and laboriously achieved. Corruption is never so rife as in communities where the demagogue and the agitator bear full sway, because in such communities all moral bands become loosened, and hysteria and sensationalism replace the spirit of sound judgment and fair dealing as between man and man. In sheer revolt against the squalid anarchy thus produced men are sure in the end to turn toward any leader who can restore order, and then their relief at being free from the intolerable burdens of class hatred, violence, and demagogy is such that they can not for some time be aroused to indignation against misdeeds by men of wealth; so that they permit a new growth of the very abuses which were in part responsible for the original outbreak. The one hope for success for our people lies in a resolute and fearless, but sane and cool-headed, advance along the path marked out last year by this very Congress. There must be a stern refusal to be misled into following either that base creature who appeals and panders to the lowest instincts and passions in order to arouse one set of Americans against their fellows, or that other creature, equally base but no baser, who in a spirit of greed, or to accumulate or add to an already huge fortune, seeks to exploit his fellow-Americans with callous disregard to their welfare of soul and body. The man who debauches others in order to obtain a high office stands on an evil equality of corruption with the man who debauches others for financial profit; and when hatred is sown the crop which springs up can only be evil.

The plain people who think—the mechanics, farmers, merchants, workers with head or hand, the men to whom American traditions are dear, who love their country and try to act decently by their neighbors, owe it to themselves to remember that the most damaging blow that can be given popular government is to elect an unworthy and sinister agitator on a platform of violence and hypocrisy. Whenever such an issue is raised in this country nothing can be gained by flinching from it, for in such case democracy is itself on trial, popular self-government under republican forms is itself on trial. The triumph of the mob is just as evil a thing as the triumph of the plutocracy, and to have escaped one danger avails nothing whatever if we succumb to the other. In the end the honest man, whether rich or poor, who earns his own living and tries to deal justly by his fellows, has as much to fear from the insincere and unworthy demagogue, promising much and performing nothing, or else performing nothing but evil, who would set on the mob to plunder the rich, as from the crafty corruptionist, who, for his own ends, would permit the common people to be exploited by the very wealthy. If we ever let this Government fall into the hands of men of either of these two classes, we shall show ourselves false to America's past. Moreover, the demagogue and the corruptionist often work hand in hand. There are at this moment wealthy reactionaries of such obtuse morality that they regard the public servant who prosecutes them when they violate the law, or who seeks to make them bear their proper share of the public burdens, as being even more objectionable than the violent agitator who hounds on the mob to plunder the rich. There is nothing to choose between such a reactionary and such an agitator; fundamentally they are alike in their selfish disregard of the rights of others; and it is natural that they should join in opposition to any movement of which the aim is fearlessly to do exact and even justice to all.

RAILROAD EMPLOYEES' HOURS AND EIGHT-HOUR LAW.

I call your attention to the need of passing the bill limiting the number of hours of employment of railroad employees. The measure is a very moderate one and I can conceive of no serious objection to it. Indeed, so far as it is in our power, it should be our aim steadily to reduce the number of hours of labor, with as a goal the general introduction of an eight-hour day. There are industries in which it is not possible that the hours of labor should be reduced; just as there are communities not far enough advanced for such a movement to be for their good, or, if in the Tropics, so situated that there is no analogy between their needs and ours in this matter. On the Isthmus of Panama, for instance, the conditions are in every way so different from what they are here that an eight-hour day would be absurd; just as it is absurd, so far as the Isthmus is concerned, where white labor can not be employed, to bother as to whether the necessary work is done by alien black men or by alien yellow men. But the wageworkers of the United States are of so high a grade that alike from the merely industrial standpoint and from the civic standpoint it should be our object to do what we can in the direction of securing the general observance of an eight-hour day. Until recently the eight-hour law on our Federal statute books has been very scantily observed. Now, however, largely through the instrumentality of the Bureau of Labor, it is being rigidly enforced, and I shall speedily be able to say whether or not there is need of further legislation in reference thereto; for our purpose is to see it obeyed in spirit no less than in letter. Half holidays during summer should be established for Government employees; it is as desirable for wage-workers who toil with their hands as for salaried officials whose labor is mental that there should be a reasonable amount of holiday.

LABOR OF WOMEN AND CHILDREN.

The Congress at its last session wisely provided for a truant court for the District of Columbia; a marked step in advance on the path of properly caring for the children. Let me again urge that the Congress provide for a thorough investigation of the conditions of child labor and of the labor of women in the United States. More and more our people are growing to recognize the fact that the questions which are not merely of industrial but of social importance outweigh all others; and these two questions most emphatically come in the category of those which affect in the most far-reaching way the home life of the Nation. The horrors incident to the employment of young children in factories or at work anywhere are a blot on our civilization. It is true that each State must ultimately settle the question in its own way; but a thorough official investigation of the matter, with the results published broadcast, would greatly help toward arousing the public conscience and securing unity of State action in the matter. There is, however, one law on the subject which should be enacted immediately, because there is no need for an investigation in reference thereto, and the failure to enact it is discreditable to the National Government. A drastic and thoroughgoing child-labor law should be enacted for the District of Columbia and the Territories.

EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY.

Among the excellent laws which the Congress past at the last session was an employers' liability law. It was a marked step in advance to get the recognition of employers' liability on the statute books; but the law did not go far enough. In spite of all precautions exercised by employers there are unavoidable accidents and even deaths involved in nearly every line of business connected with the mechanic arts. This inevitable sacrifice of life may be reduced to a minimum, but it can not be completely eliminated. It is a great social injustice to compel the employee, or rather the family of the killed or disabled victim, to bear the entire burden of such an inevitable sacrifice. In other words, society shirks its duty by laying the whole cost on the victim, whereas the injury comes from what may be called the legitimate risks of the trade. Compensation for accidents or deaths due in any line of industry to the actual conditions under which that industry is carried on, should be paid by that portion of the community for the benefit of which the industry is carried on—that is, by those who profit by the industry. If the entire trade risk is placed upon the employer he will promptly and properly add it to the legitimate cost of production and assess it proportionately upon the consumers of his commodity. It is therefore clear to my mind that the law should place this entire "risk of a trade" upon the employer. Neither the Federal law, nor, as far as I am informed, the State laws dealing with the question of employers' liability are sufficiently thoroughgoing. The Federal law should of course include employees in navy-yards, arsenals, and the like.

INVESTIGATION OF DISPUTES BETWEEN CAPITAL AND LABOR.

The commission appointed by the President October 16, 1902, at the request of both the anthracite coal operators and miners, to inquire into, consider, and pass upon the questions in controversy in connection with the strike in the anthracite regions of Pennsylvania and the causes out of which the controversy rose, in their report, findings, and award expressed the belief "that the State and Federal governments should provide the machinery for what may be called the compulsory investigation of controversies between employers and employees when they arise." This expression of belief is deserving of the favorable consideration of the Congress and the enactment of its provisions into law. A bill has already been introduced to this end.

Records show that during the twenty years from January 1, 1881, to December 31, 1900, there were strikes affecting 117,509 establishments, and 6,105,694 employees were thrown out of employment. During the same period there were 1,005 lockouts, involving nearly 10,000 establishments, throwing over one million people out of employment. The strikes and lockouts involved an estimated loss to employees of $307,000,000 and to employers of $143,000,000, a total of $450,000,000. The public suffered directly and indirectly probably as great additional loss. But the money loss, great as it was, did not measure the anguish and suffering endured by the wives and children of employees whose pay stopped when their work stopped, or the disastrous effect of the strike or lockout upon the business of employers, or the increase in the cost of products and the inconvenience and loss to the public.

Many of these strikes and lockouts would not have occurred had the parties to the dispute been required to appear before an unprejudiced body representing the nation and, face to face, state the reasons for their contention. In most instances the dispute would doubtless be found to be due to a misunderstanding by each of the other's rights, aggravated by an unwillingness of either party to accept as true the statements of the other as to the justice or injustice of the matters in dispute. The exercise of a judicial spirit by a disinterested body representing the Federal Government, such as would be provided by a commission on conciliation and arbitration, would tend to create an atmosphere of friendliness and conciliation between contending parties; and the giving each side an equal opportunity to present fully its case in the presence of the other would prevent many disputes from developing into serious strikes or lockouts, and, in other cases, would enable the commission to persuade the opposing parties to come to terms.

In this age of great corporate and labor combinations, neither employers nor employees should be left completely at the mercy of the stronger party to a dispute, regardless of the righteousness of their respective claims. The proposed measure would be in the line of securing recognition of the fact that in many strikes the public has itself an interest which can not wisely be disregarded; an interest not merely of general convenience, for the question of a just and proper public policy must also be considered. In all legislation of this kind it is well to advance cautiously, testing each step by the actual results; the step proposed can surely be safely taken, for the decisions of the commission would not bind the parties in legal fashion, and yet would give a chance for public opinion to crystallize and thus to exert its full force for the right.

WITHDRAWAL OF COAL LANDS.

It is not wise that the Nation should alienate its remaining coal lands. I have temporarily withdrawn from settlement all the lands which the Geological Survey has indicated as containing, or in all probability containing, coal. The question, however, can be properly settled only by legislation, which in my judgment should provide for the withdrawal of these lands from sale or from entry, save in certain especial circumstances. The ownership would then remain in the United States, which should not, however, attempt to work them, but permit them to be worked by private individuals under a royalty system, the Government keeping such control as to permit it to see that no excessive price was charged consumers. It would, of course, be as necessary to supervise the rates charged by the common carriers to transport the product as the rates charged by those who mine it; and the supervision must extend to the conduct of the common carriers, so that they shall in no way favor one competitor at the expense of another. The withdrawal of these coal lands would constitute a policy analogous to that which has been followed in withdrawing the forest lands from ordinary settlement. The coal, like the forests, should be treated as the property of the public and its disposal should be under conditions which would inure to the benefit of the public as a whole.

CORPORATIONS.

The present Congress has taken long strides in the direction of securing proper supervision and control by the National Government over corporations engaged in interstate business—and the enormous majority of corporations of any size are engaged in interstate business. The passage of the railway rate bill, and only to a less degree the passage of the pure food bill, and the provision for increasing and rendering more effective national control over the beef-packing industry, mark an important advance in the proper direction. In the short session it will perhaps be difficult to do much further along this line; and it may be best to wait until the laws have been in operation for a number of months before endeavoring to increase their scope, because only operation will show with exactness their merits and their shortcomings and thus give opportunity to define what further remedial legislation is needed. Yet in my judgment it will in the end be advisable in connection with the packing house inspection law to provide for putting a date on the label and for charging the cost of inspection to the packers. All these laws have already justified their enactment. The interstate commerce law, for instance, has rather amusingly falsified the predictions, both of those who asserted that it would ruin the railroads and of those who asserted that it did not go far enough and would accomplish nothing. During the last five months the railroads have shown increased earnings and some of them unusual dividends; while during the same period the mere taking effect of the law has produced an unprecedented, a hitherto unheard of, number of voluntary reductions in freights and fares by the railroads. Since the founding of the Commission there has never been a time of equal length in which anything like so many reduced tariffs have been put into effect. On August 27, for instance, two days before the new law went into effect, the Commission received notices of over five thousand separate tariffs which represented reductions from previous rates.

It must not be supposed, however, that with the passage of these laws it will be possible to stop progress along the line of increasing the power of the National Government over the use of capital in interstate commerce. For example, there will ultimately be need of enlarging the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission along several different lines, so as to give it a larger and more efficient control over the railroads.

It can not too often be repeated that experience has conclusively shown the impossibility of securing by the actions of nearly half a hundred different State legislatures anything but ineffective chaos in the way of dealing with the great corporations which do not operate exclusively within the limits of any one State. In some method, whether by a national license law or in other fashion, we must exercise, and that at an early date, a far more complete control than at present over these great corporations—a control that will among other things prevent the evils of excessive overcapitalization, and that will compel the disclosure by each big corporation of its stockholders and of its properties and business, whether owned directly or through subsidiary or affiliated corporations. This will tend to put a stop to the securing of inordinate profits by favored individuals at the expense whether of the general public, the stockholders, or the wageworkers. Our effort should be not so much to prevent consolidation as such, but so to supervise and control it as to see that it results in no harm to the people. The reactionary or ultraconservative apologists for the misuse of wealth assail the effort to secure such control as a step toward socialism. As a matter of fact it is these reactionaries and ultraconservatives who are themselves most potent in increasing socialistic feeling. One of the most efficient methods of averting the consequences of a dangerous agitation, which is 80 per cent wrong, is to remedy the 20 per cent of evil as to which the agitation is well founded. The best way to avert the very undesirable move for the governmental ownership of railways is to secure by the Government on behalf of the people as a whole such adequate control and regulation of the great interstate common carriers as will do away with the evils which give rise to the agitation against them. So the proper antidote to the dangerous and wicked agitation against the men of wealth as such is to secure by proper legislation and executive action the abolition of the grave abuses which actually do obtain in connection with the business use of wealth under our present system—or rather no system—of failure to exercise any adequate control at all. Some persons speak as if the exercise of such governmental control would do away with the freedom of individual initiative and dwarf individual effort. This is not a fact. It would be a veritable calamity to fail to put a premium upon individual initiative, individual capacity and effort; upon the energy, character, and foresight which it is so important to encourage in the individual. But as a matter of fact the deadening and degrading effect of pure socialism, and especially of its extreme form communism, and the destruction of individual character which they would bring about, are in part achieved by the wholly unregulated competition which results in a single individual or corporation rising at the expense of all others until his or its rise effectually checks all competition and reduces former competitors to a position of utter inferiority and subordination.

In enacting and enforcing such legislation as this Congress already has to its credit, we are working on a coherent plan, with the steady endeavor to secure the needed reform by the joint action of the moderate men, the plain men who do not wish anything hysterical or dangerous, but who do intend to deal in resolute common-sense fashion with the real and great evils of the present system. The reactionaries and the violent extremists show symptoms of joining hands against us. Both assert, for instance, that if logical, we should go to government ownership of railroads and the like; the reactionaries, because on such an issue they think the people would stand with them, while the extremists care rather to preach discontent and agitation than to achieve solid results. As a matter of fact, our position is as remote from that of the Bourbon reactionary as from that of the impracticable or sinister visionary. We hold that the Government should not conduct the business of the nation, but that it should exercise such supervision as will insure its being conducted in the interest of the nation. Our aim is, so far as may be, to secure, for all decent, hard working men, equality of opportunity and equality of burden.

The actual working of our laws has shown that the effort to prohibit all combination, good or bad, is noxious where it is not ineffective. Combination of capital like combination of labor is a necessary element of our present industrial system. It is not possible completely to prevent it; and if it were possible, such complete prevention would do damage to the body politic. What we need is not vainly to try to prevent all combination, but to secure such rigorous and adequate control and supervision of the combinations as to prevent their injuring the public, or existing in such form as inevitably to threaten injury—for the mere fact that a combination has secured practically complete control of a necessary of life would under any circumstances show that such combination was to be presumed to be adverse to the public interest. It is unfortunate that our present laws should forbid all combinations, instead of sharply discriminating between those combinations which do good and those combinations which do evil. Rebates, for instance, are as often due to the pressure of big shippers (as was shown in the investigation of the Standard Oil Company and as has been shown since by the investigation of the tobacco and sugar trusts) as to the initiative of big railroads. Often railroads would like to combine for the purpose of preventing a big shipper from maintaining improper advantages at the expense of small shippers and of the general public. Such a combination, instead of being forbidden by law, should be favored. In other words, it should be permitted to railroads to make agreements, provided these agreements were sanctioned by the Interstate Commerce Commission and were published. With these two conditions complied with it is impossible to see what harm such a combination could do to the public at large. It is a public evil to have on the statute books a law incapable of full enforcement because both judges and juries realize that its full enforcement would destroy the business of the country; for the result is to make decent railroad men violators of the law against their will, and to put a premium on the behavior of the willful wrongdoers. Such a result in turn tends to throw the decent man and the willful wrongdoer into close association, and in the end to drag down the former to the latter's level; for the man who becomes a lawbreaker in one way unhappily tends to lose all respect for law and to be willing to break it in many ways. No more scathing condemnation could be visited upon a law than is contained in the words of the Interstate Commerce Commission when, in commenting upon the fact that the numerous joint traffic associations do technically violate the law, they say: "The decision of the United States Supreme Court in the Trans-Missouri case and the Joint Traffic Association case has produced no practical effect upon the railway operations of the country. Such associations, in fact, exist now as they did before these decisions, and with the same general effect. In justice to all parties, we ought probably to add that it is difficult to see how our interstate railways could be operated with due regard to the interest of the shipper and the railway without concerted action of the kind afforded through these associations."

This means that the law as construed by the Supreme Court is such that the business of the country can not be conducted without breaking it. I recommend that you give careful and early consideration to this subject, and if you find the opinion of the Interstate Commerce Commission justified, that you amend the law so as to obviate the evil disclosed.

INHERITANCE AND INCOME TAX.

The question of taxation is difficult in any country, but it is especially difficult in ours with its Federal system of government. Some taxes should on every ground be levied in a small district for use in that district. Thus the taxation of real estate is peculiarly one for the immediate locality in which the real estate is found. Again, there is no more legitimate tax for any State than a tax on the franchises conferred by that State upon street railroads and similar corporations which operate wholly within the State boundaries, sometimes in one and sometimes in several municipalities or other minor divisions of the State. But there are many kinds of taxes which can only be levied by the General Government so as to produce the best results, because, among other reasons, the attempt to impose them in one particular State too often results merely in driving the corporation or individual affected to some other locality or other State. The National Government has long derived its chief revenue from a tariff on imports and from an internal or excise tax. In addition to these there is every reason why, when next our system of taxation is revised, the National Government should impose a graduated inheritance tax, and, if possible, a graduated income tax. The man of great wealth owes a peculiar obligation to the State, because he derives special advantages from the mere existence of government. Not only should he recognize this obligation in the way he leads his daily life and in the way he earns and spends his money, but it should also be recognized by the way in which he pays for the protection the State gives him. On the one hand, it is desirable that he should assume his full and proper share of the burden of taxation; on the other hand, it is quite as necessary that in this kind of taxation, where the men who vote the tax pay but little of it, there should be clear recognition of the danger of inaugurating any such system save in a spirit of entire justice and moderation. Whenever we, as a people, undertake to remodel our taxation system along the lines suggested, we must make it clear beyond peradventure that our aim is to distribute the burden of supporting the Government more equitably than at present; that we intend to treat rich man and poor man on a basis of absolute equality, and that we regard it as equally fatal to true democracy to do or permit injustice to the one as to do or permit injustice to the other.

I am well aware that such a subject as this needs long and careful study in order that the people may become familiar with what is proposed to be done, may clearly see the necessity of proceeding with wisdom and self-restraint, and may make up their minds just how far they are willing to go in the matter; while only trained legislators can work out the project in necessary detail. But I feel that in the near future our national legislators should enact a law providing for a graduated inheritance tax by which a steadily increasing rate of duty should be put upon all moneys or other valuables coming by gift, bequest, or devise to any individual or corporation. It may be well to make the tax heavy in proportion as the individual benefited is remote of kin. In any event, in my judgment the pro rata of the tax should increase very heavily with the increase of the amount left to any one individual after a certain point has been reached. It is most desirable to encourage thrift and ambition, and a potent source of thrift and ambition is the desire on the part of the breadwinner to leave his children well off. This object can be attained by making the tax very small on moderate amounts of property left; because the prime object should be to put a constantly increasing burden on the inheritance of those swollen fortunes which it is certainly of no benefit to this country to perpetuate.

There can be no question of the ethical propriety of the Government thus determining the conditions upon which any gift or inheritance should be received. Exactly how far the inheritance tax would, as an incident, have the effect of limiting the transmission by devise or gift of the enormous fortunes in question it is not necessary at present to discuss. It is wise that progress in this direction should be gradual. At first a permanent national inheritance tax, while it might be more substantial than any such tax has hitherto been, need not approximate, either in amount or in the extent of the increase by graduation, to what such a tax should ultimately be.

This species of tax has again and again been imposed, although only temporarily, by the National Government. It was first imposed by the act of July 6, 1797, when the makers of the Constitution were alive and at the head of affairs. It was a graduated tax; though small in amount, the rate was increased with the amount left to any individual, exceptions being made in the case of certain close kin. A similar tax was again imposed by the act of July 1, 1862; a minimum sum of one thousand dollars in personal property being excepted from taxation, the tax then becoming progressive according to the remoteness of kin. The war-revenue act of June 13, 1898, provided for an inheritance tax on any sum exceeding the value of ten thousand dollars, the rate of the tax increasing both in accordance with the amounts left and in accordance with the legatee's remoteness of kin. The Supreme Court has held that the succession tax imposed at the time of the civil war was not a direct tax but an impost or excise which was both constitutional and valid. More recently the court, in an opinion delivered by Mr. Justice White, which contained an exceedingly able and elaborate discussion of the powers of the Congress to impose death duties, sustained the constitutionality of the inheritance-tax feature of the war-revenue act of 1898.

In its incidents, and apart from the main purpose of raising revenue, an income tax stands on an entirely different footing from an inheritance tax; because it involves no question of the perpetuation of fortunes swollen to an unhealthy size. The question is in its essence a question of the proper adjustment of burdens to benefits. As the law now stands it is undoubtedly difficult to devise a national income tax which shall be constitutional. But whether it is absolutely impossible is another question; and if possible it is most certainly desirable. The first purely income-tax law was passed by the Congress in 1861, but the most important law dealing with the subject was that of 1894. This the court held to be unconstitutional.

The question is undoubtedly very intricate, delicate, and troublesome. The decision of the court was only reached by one majority. It is the law of the land, and of course is accepted as such and loyally obeyed by all good citizens. Nevertheless, the hesitation evidently felt by the court as a whole in coming to a conclusion, when considered together with the previous decisions on the subject, may perhaps indicate the possibility of devising a constitutional income-tax law which shall substantially accomplish the results aimed at. The difficulty of amending the Constitution is so great that only real necessity can justify a resort thereto. Every effort should be made in dealing with this subject, as with the subject of the proper control by the National Government over the use of corporate wealth in interstate business, to devise legislation which without such action shall attain the desired end; but if this fails, there will ultimately be no alternative to a constitutional amendment.

TECHNICAL AND INDUSTRIAL TRAINING.

It would be impossible to overstate (though it is of course difficult quantitatively to measure) the effect upon a nation's growth to greatness of what may be called organized patriotism, which necessarily includes the substitution of a national feeling for mere local pride; with as a resultant a high ambition for the whole country. No country can develop its full strength so long as the parts which make up the whole each put a feeling of loyalty to the part above the feeling of loyalty to the whole. This is true of sections and it is just as true of classes. The industrial and agricultural classes must work together, capitalists and wageworkers must work together, if the best work of which the country is capable is to be done. It is probable that a thoroughly efficient system of education comes next to the influence of patriotism in bringing about national success of this kind. Our federal form of government, so fruitful of advantage to our people in certain ways, in other ways undoubtedly limits our national effectiveness. It is not possible, for instance, for the National Government to take the lead in technical industrial education, to see that the public school system of this country develops on all its technical, industrial, scientific, and commercial sides. This must be left primarily to the several States. Nevertheless, the National Government has control of the schools of the District of Columbia, and it should see that these schools promote and encourage the fullest development of the scholars in both commercial and industrial training. The commercial training should in one of its branches deal with foreign trade. The industrial training is even more important. It should be one of our prime objects as a Nation, so far as feasible, constantly to work toward putting the mechanic, the wageworker who works with his hands, on a higher plane of efficiency and reward, so as to increase his effectiveness in the economic world, and the dignity, the remuneration, and the power of his position in the social world. Unfortunately, at present the effect of some of the work in the public schools is in the exactly opposite direction. If boys and girls are trained merely in literary accomplishments, to the total exclusion of industrial, manual, and technical training, the tendency is to unfit them for industrial work and to make them reluctant to go into it, or unfitted to do well if they do go into it. This is a tendency which should be strenuously combated. Our industrial development depends largely upon technical education, including in this term all industrial education, from that which fits a man to be a good mechanic, a good carpenter, or blacksmith, to that which fits a man to do the greatest engineering feat. The skilled mechanic, the skilled workman, can best become such by technical industrial education. The far-reaching usefulness of institutes of technology and schools of mines or of engineering, is now universally acknowledged, and no less far-reaching is the effect of a good building or mechanical trades school, a textile, or watchmaking, or engraving school. All such training must develop not only manual dexterity but industrial intelligence. In international rivalry this country does not have to fear the competition of pauper labor as much as it has to fear the educated labor of specially trained competitors; and we should have the education of the hand, eye, and brain which will fit us to meet such competition.

In every possible way we should help the wageworker who toils with his hands and who must (we hope in a constantly increasing measure) also toil with his brain. Under the Constitution the National Legislature can do but little of direct importance for his welfare save where he is engaged in work which permits it to act under the interstate commerce clause of the Constitution; and this is one reason why I so earnestly hope that both the legislative and judicial branches of the Government will construe this clause of the Constitution in the broadest possible manner. We can, however, in such a matter as industrial training, in such a matter as child labor and factory laws, set an example to the States by enacting the most advanced legislation that can wisely be enacted for the District of Columbia.

AGRICULTURE.

The only other persons whose welfare is as vital to the welfare of the whole country as is the welfare of the wageworkers are the tillers of the soil, the farmers. It is a mere truism to say that no growth of cities, no growth of wealth, no industrial development can atone for any falling off in the character and standing of the farming population. During the last few decades this fact has been recognized with ever-increasing clearness. There is no longer any failure to realize that farming, at least in certain branches, must become a technical and scientific profession. This means that there must be open to farmers the chance for technical and scientific training, not theoretical merely but of the most severely practical type. The farmer represents a peculiarly high type of American citizenship, and he must have the same chance to rise and develop as other American citizens have. Moreover, it is exactly as true of the farmer, as it is of the business man and the wageworker, that the ultimate success of the Nation of which he forms a part must be founded not alone on material prosperity but upon high moral, mental, and physical development. This education of the farmer—self-education by preference, but also education from the outside, as with all other men—is peculiarly necessary here in the United States, where the frontier conditions even in the newest States have now nearly vanished, where there must be a substitution of a more intensive system of cultivation for the old wasteful farm management, and where there must be a better business organization among the farmers themselves.

Several factors must cooperate in the improvement of the farmer's condition. He must have the chance to be educated in the widest possible sense—in the sense which keeps ever in view the intimate relationship between the theory of education and the facts of life. In all education we should widen our aims. It is a good thing to produce a certain number of trained scholars and students; but the education superintended by the State must seek rather to produce a hundred good citizens than merely one scholar, and it must be turned now and then from the class book to the study of the great book of nature itself. This is especially true of the farmer, as has been pointed out again and again by all observers most competent to pass practical judgment on the problems of our country life. All students now realize that education must seek to train the executive powers of young people and to confer more real significance upon the phrase "dignity of labor," and to prepare the pupils so that in addition to each developing in the highest degree his individual capacity for work, they may together help create a right public opinion, and show in many ways social and cooperative spirit. Organization has become necessary in the business world; and it has accomplished much for good in the world of labor. It is no less necessary for farmers. Such a movement as the grange movement is good in itself and is capable of a well-nigh infinite further extension for good so long as it is kept to its own legitimate business. The benefits to be derived by the association of farmers for mutual advantage are partly economic and partly sociological.

Moreover, while in the long run voluntary effort will prove more efficacious than government assistance, while the farmers must primarily do most for themselves, yet the Government can also do much. The Department of Agriculture has broken new ground in many directions, and year by year it finds how it can improve its methods and develop fresh usefulness. Its constant effort is to give the governmental assistance in the most effective way; that is, through associations of farmers rather than to or through individual farmers. It is also striving to coordinate its work with the agricultural departments of the several States, and so far as its own work is educational, to coordinate it with the work of other educational authorities. Agricultural education is necessarily based upon general education, but our agricultural educational institutions are wisely specializing themselves, making their courses relate to the actual teaching of the agricultural and kindred sciences to young country people or young city people who wish to live in the country.

Great progress has already been made among farmers by the creation of farmers' institutes, of dairy associations, of breeders' associations, horticultural associations, and the like. A striking example of how the Government and the farmers can cooperate is shown in connection with the menace offered to the cotton growers of the Southern States by the advance of the boll weevil. The Department is doing all it can to organize the farmers in the threatened districts, just as it has been doing all it can to organize them in aid of its work to eradicate the cattle fever tick in the South. The Department can and will cooperate with all such associations, and it must have their help if its own work is to be done in the most efficient style.

IRRIGATION AND FOREST PRESERVATION.

Much is now being done for the States of the Rocky Mountains and Great Plains through the development of the national policy of irrigation and forest preservation; no Government policy for the betterment of our internal conditions has been more fruitful of good than this. The forests of the White Mountains and Southern Appalachian regions should also be preserved; and they can not be unless the people of the States in which they lie, through their representatives in the Congress, secure vigorous action by the National Government.

MEMORIAL AMPHITHEATER AT ARLINGTON.

I invite the attention of the Congress to the estimate of the Secretary of War for an appropriation to enable him to begin the preliminary work for the construction of a memorial amphitheater at Arlington. The Grand Army of the Republic in its national encampment has urged the erection of such an amphitheater as necessary for the proper observance of Memorial Day and as a fitting monument to the soldier and sailor dead buried there. In this I heartily concur and commend the matter to the favorable consideration of the Congress.

MARRIAGE AND DIVORCE.

I am well aware of how difficult it is to pass a constitutional amendment. Nevertheless in my judgment the whole question of marriage and divorce should be relegated to the authority of the National Congress. At present the wide differences in the laws of the different States on this subject result in scandals and abuses; and surely there is nothing so vitally essential to the welfare of the nation, nothing around which the nation should so bend itself to throw every safeguard, as the home life of the average citizen. The change would be good from every standpoint. In particular it would be good because it would confer on the Congress the power at once to deal radically and efficiently with polygamy; and this should be done whether or not marriage and divorce are dealt with. It is neither safe nor proper to leave the question of polygamy to be dealt with by the several States. Power to deal with it should be conferred on the National Government.

When home ties are loosened; when men and women cease to regard a worthy family life, with all its duties fully performed, and all its responsibilities lived up to, as the life best worth living; then evil days for the commonwealth are at hand. There are regions in our land, and classes of our population, where the birth rate has sunk below the death rate. Surely it should need no demonstration to show that willful sterility is, from the standpoint of the nation, from the standpoint of the human race, the one sin for which the penalty is national death, race death; a sin for which there is no atonement; a sin which is the more dreadful exactly in proportion as the men and women guilty thereof are in other respects, in character, and bodily and mental powers, those whom for the sake of the state it would be well to see the fathers and mothers of many healthy children, well brought up in homes made happy by their presence. No man, no woman, can shirk the primary duties of life, whether for love of ease and pleasure, or for any other cause, and retain his or her self-respect.

AMERICAN SHIPPING.

Let me once again call the attention of the Congress to two subjects concerning which I have frequently before communicated with them. One is the question of developing American shipping. I trust that a law embodying in substance the views, or a major part of the views, expressed in the report on this subject laid before the House at its last session will be passed. I am well aware that in former years objectionable measures have been proposed in reference to the encouragement of American shipping; but it seems to me that the proposed measure is as nearly unobjectionable as any can be. It will of course benefit primarily our seaboard States, such as Maine, Louisiana, and Washington; but what benefits part of our people in the end benefits all; just as Government aid to irrigation and forestry in the West is really of benefit, not only to the Rocky Mountain States, but to all our country. If it prove impracticable to enact a law for the encouragement of shipping generally, then at least provision should be made for better communication with South America, notably for fast mail lines to the chief South American ports. It is discreditable to us that our business people, for lack of direct communication in the shape of lines of steamers with South America, should in that great sister continent be at a disadvantage compared to the business people of Europe.

CURRENCY REFORM.

I especially call your attention to the second subject, the condition of our currency laws. The national-bank act has ably served a great purpose in aiding the enormous business development of the country; and within ten years there has been an increase in circulation per capita from $21.41 to $33.08. For several years evidence has been accumulating that additional legislation is needed. The recurrence of each crop season emphasizes the defects of the present laws. There must soon be a revision of them, because to leave them as they are means to incur liability of business disaster. Since your body adjourned there has been a fluctuation in the interest on call money from 2 per cent to 30 per cent; and the fluctuation was even greater during the preceding six months. The Secretary of the Treasury had to step in and by wise action put a stop to the most violent period of oscillation. Even worse than such fluctuation is the advance in commercial rates and the uncertainty felt in the sufficiency of credit even at high rates. All commercial interests suffer during each crop period. Excessive rates for call money in New York attract money from the interior banks into the speculative field; this depletes the fund that would otherwise be available for commercial uses, and commercial borrowers are forced to pay abnormal rates; so that each fall a tax, in the shape of increased interest charges, is placed on the whole commerce of the country.

The mere statement of these facts shows that our present system is seriously defective. There is need of a change. Unfortunately, however, many of the proposed changes must be ruled from consideration because they are complicated, are not easy of comprehension, and tend to disturb existing rights and interests. We must also rule out any plan which would materially impair the value of the United States 2 per cent bonds now pledged to secure circulation, the issue of which was made under conditions peculiarly creditable to the Treasury. I do not press any especial plan. Various plans have recently been proposed by expert committees of bankers. Among the plans which are possibly feasible and which certainly should receive your consideration is that repeatedly brought to your attention by the present Secretary of the Treasury, the essential features of which have been approved by many prominent bankers and business men. According to this plan national banks should be permitted to issue a specified proportion of their capital in notes of a given kind, the issue to be taxed at so high a rate as to drive the notes back when not wanted in legitimate trade. This plan would not permit the issue of currency to give banks additional profits, but to meet the emergency presented by times of stringency.

I do not say that this is the right system. I only advance it to emphasize my belief that there is need for the adoption of some system which shall be automatic and open to all sound banks, so as to avoid all possibility of discrimination and favoritism. Such a plan would tend to prevent the spasms of high money and speculation which now obtain in the New York market; for at present there is too much currency at certain seasons of the year, and its accumulation at New York tempts bankers to lend it at low rates for speculative purposes; whereas at other times when the crops are being moved there is urgent need for a large but temporary increase in the currency supply. It must never be forgotten that this question concerns business men generally quite as much as bankers; especially is this true of stockmen, farmers, and business men in the West; for at present at certain seasons of the year the difference in interest rates between the East and the West is from 6 to 10 per cent, whereas in Canada the corresponding difference is but 2 per cent. Any plan must, of course, guard the interests of western and southern bankers as carefully as it guards the interests of New York or Chicago bankers; and must be drawn from the standpoints of the farmer and the merchant no less than from the standpoints of the city banker and the country banker.

The law should be amended so as specifically to provide that the funds derived from customs duties may be treated by the Secretary of the Treasury as he treats funds obtained under the internal-revenue laws. There should be a considerable increase in bills of small denominations. Permission should be given banks, if necessary under settled restrictions, to retire their circulation to a larger amount than three millions a month.

PHILIPPINE TARIFF.

I most earnestly hope that the bill to provide a lower tariff for or else absolute free trade in Philippine products will become a law. No harm will come to any American industry; and while there will be some small but real material benefit to the Filipinos, the main benefit will come by the showing made as to our purpose to do all in our power for their welfare. So far our action in the Philippines has been abundantly justified, not mainly and indeed not primarily because of the added dignity it has given us as a nation by proving that we are capable honorably and efficiently to bear the international burdens which a mighty people should bear, but even more because of the immense benefit that has come to the people of the Philippine Islands. In these islands we are steadily introducing both liberty and order to a greater degree than their people have ever before known. We have secured justice. We have provided an efficient police force, and have put down ladronism. Only in the islands of Leyte and Samar is the authority of our Government resisted and this by wild mountain tribes under the superstitious inspiration of fakirs and pseudo-religious leaders. We are constantly increasing the measure of liberty accorded the islanders, and next spring, if conditions warrant, we shall take a great stride forward in testing their capacity for self-government by summoning the first Filipino legislative assembly; and the way in which they stand this test will largely determine whether the self-government thus granted will be increased or decreased; for if we have erred at all in the Philippines it has been in proceeding too rapidly in the direction of granting a large measure of self-government. We are building roads. We have, for the immeasurable good of the people, arranged for the building of railroads. Let us also see to it that they are given free access to our markets. This nation owes no more imperative duty to itself and mankind than the duty of managing the affairs of all the islands under the American flag—the Philippines, Porto Rico, and Hawaii—so as to make it evident that it is in every way to their advantage that the flag should fly over them.

PORTO RICAN AFFAIRS.

American citizenship should be conferred on the citizens of Porto Rico. The harbor of San Juan in Porto Rico should be dredged and improved. The expenses of the federal court of Porto Rico should be met from the Federal Treasury. The administration of the affairs of Porto Rico, together with those of the Philippines, Hawaii, and our other insular possessions, should all be directed under one executive department; by preference the Department of State or the Department of War.

HAWAII.

The needs of Hawaii are peculiar; every aid should be given the islands; and our efforts should be unceasing to develop them along the lines of a community of small freeholders, not of great planters with coolie-tilled estates. Situated as this Territory is, in the middle of the Pacific, there are duties imposed upon this small community which do not fall in like degree or manner upon any other American community. This warrants our treating it differently from the way in which we treat Territories contiguous to or surrounded by sister Territories or other States, and justifies the setting aside of a portion of our revenues to be expended for educational and internal improvements therein. Hawaii is now making an effort to secure immigration fit in the end to assume the duties and burdens of full American citizenship, and whenever the leaders in the various industries of those islands finally adopt our ideals and heartily join our administration in endeavoring to develop a middle class of substantial citizens, a way will then be found to deal with the commercial and industrial problems which now appear to them so serious. The best Americanism is that which aims for stability and permanency of prosperous citizenship, rather than immediate returns on large masses of capital.

ALASKA.

Alaska's needs have been partially met, but there must be a complete reorganization of the governmental system, as I have before indicated to you. I ask your especial attention to this. Our fellow-citizens who dwell on the shores of Puget Sound with characteristic energy are arranging to hold in Seattle the Alaska Yukon Pacific Exposition. Its special aims include the upbuilding of Alaska and the development of American commerce on the Pacific Ocean. This exposition, in its purposes and scope, should appeal not only to the people of the Pacific slope, but to the people of the United States at large. Alaska since it was bought has yielded to the Government eleven millions of dollars of revenue, and has produced nearly three hundred millions of dollars in gold, furs, and fish. When properly developed it will become in large degree a land of homes. The countries bordering the Pacific Ocean have a population more numerous than that of all the countries of Europe; their annual foreign commerce amounts to over three billions of dollars, of which the share of the United States is some seven hundred millions of dollars. If this trade were thoroughly understood and pushed by our manufacturers and producers, the industries not only of the Pacific slope, but of all our country, and particularly of our cotton growing States, would be greatly benefited. Of course, in order to get these benefits, we must treat fairly the countries with which we trade.

INTERNATIONAL MORALITY.

It is a mistake, and it betrays a spirit of foolish cynicism, to maintain that all international governmental action is, and must ever be, based upon mere selfishness, and that to advance ethical reasons for such action is always a sign of hypocrisy. This is no more necessarily true of the action of governments than of the action of individuals. It is a sure sign of a base nature always to ascribe base motives for the actions of others. Unquestionably no nation can afford to disregard proper considerations of self-interest any more than a private individual can so do. But it is equally true that the average private individual in any really decent community does many actions with reference to other men in which he is guided, not by self-interest, but by public spirit, by regard for the rights of others, by a disinterested purpose to do good to others, and to raise the tone of the community as a whole. Similarly, a really great nation must often act, and as a matter of fact often does act, toward other nations in a spirit not in the least of mere self-interest, but paying heed chiefly to ethical reasons; and as the centuries go by this disinterestedness in international action, this tendency of the individuals comprising a nation to require that nation to act with justice toward its neighbors, steadily grows and strengthens. It is neither wise nor right for a nation to disregard its own needs, and it is foolish—and may be wicked—to think that other nations will disregard theirs. But it is wicked for a nation only to regard its own interest, and foolish to believe that such is the sole motive that actuates any other nation. It should be our steady aim to raise the ethical standard of national action just as we strive to raise the ethical standard of individual action.

Not only must we treat all nations fairly, but we must treat with justice and good will all immigrants who come here under the law. Whether they are Catholic or Protestant, Jew or Gentile; whether they come from England or Germany, Russia, Japan, or Italy, matters nothing. All we have a right to question is the man's conduct. If he is honest and upright in his dealings with his neighbor and with the State, then he is entitled to respect and good treatment. Especially do we need to remember our duty to the stranger within our gates. It is the sure mark of a low civilization, a low morality, to abuse or discriminate against or in any way humiliate such stranger who has come here lawfully and who is conducting himself properly. To remember this is incumbent on every American citizen, and it is of course peculiarly incumbent on every Government official, whether of the nation or of the several States.

I am prompted to say this by the attitude of hostility here and there assumed toward the Japanese in this country. This hostility is sporadic and is limited to a very few places. Nevertheless, it is most discreditable to us as a people, and it may be fraught with the gravest consequences to the nation. The friendship between the United States and Japan has been continuous since the time, over half a century ago, when Commodore Perry, by his expedition to Japan, first opened the islands to western civilization. Since then the growth of Japan has been literally astounding. There is not only nothing to parallel it, but nothing to approach it in the history of civilized mankind. Japan has a glorious and ancient past. Her civilization is older than that of the nations of northern Europe—the nations from whom the people of the United States have chiefly sprung. But fifty years ago Japan's development was still that of the Middle Ages. During that fifty years the progress of the country in every walk in life has been a marvel to mankind, and she now stands as one of the greatest of civilized nations; great in the arts of war and in the arts of peace; great in military, in industrial, in artistic development and achievement. Japanese soldiers and sailors have shown themselves equal in combat to any of whom history makes note. She has produced great generals and mighty admirals; her fighting men, afloat and ashore, show all the heroic courage, the unquestioning, unfaltering loyalty, the splendid indifference to hardship and death, which marked the Loyal Ronins; and they show also that they possess the highest ideal of patriotism. Japanese artists of every kind see their products eagerly sought for in all lands. The industrial and commercial development of Japan has been phenomenal; greater than that of any other country during the same period. At the same time the advance in science and philosophy is no less marked. The admirable management of the Japanese Red Cross during the late war, the efficiency and humanity of the Japanese officials, nurses, and doctors, won the respectful admiration of all acquainted with the facts. Through the Red Cross the Japanese people sent over $100,000 to the sufferers of San Francisco, and the gift was accepted with gratitude by our people. The courtesy of the Japanese, nationally and individually, has become proverbial. To no other country has there been such an increasing number of visitors from this land as to Japan. In return, Japanese have come here in great numbers. They are welcome, socially and intellectually, in all our colleges and institutions of higher learning, in all our professional and social bodies. The Japanese have won in a single generation the right to stand abreast of the foremost and most enlightened peoples of Europe and America; they have won on their own merits and by their own exertions the right to treatment on a basis of full and frank equality. The overwhelming mass of our people cherish a lively regard and respect for the people of Japan, and in almost every quarter of the Union the stranger from Japan is treated as he deserves; that is, he is treated as the stranger from any part of civilized Europe is and deserves to be treated. But here and there a most unworthy feeling has manifested itself toward the Japanese—the feeling that has been shown in shutting them out from the common schools in San Francisco, and in mutterings against them in one or two other places, because of their efficiency as workers. To shut them out from the public schools is a wicked absurdity, when there are no first-class colleges in the land, including the universities and colleges of California, which do not gladly welcome Japanese students and on which Japanese students do not reflect credit. We have as much to learn from Japan as Japan has to learn from us; and no nation is fit to teach unless it is also willing to learn. Throughout Japan Americans are well treated, and any failure on the part of Americans at home to treat the Japanese with a like courtesy and consideration is by just so much a confession of inferiority in our civilization.

Our nation fronts on the Pacific, just as it fronts on the Atlantic. We hope to play a constantly growing part in the great ocean of the Orient. We wish, as we ought to wish, for a great commercial development in our dealings with Asia; and it is out of the question that we should permanently have such development unless we freely and gladly extend to other nations the same measure of justice and good treatment which we expect to receive in return. It is only a very small body of our citizens that act badly. Where the Federal Government has power it will deal summarily with any such. Where the several States have power I earnestly ask that they also deal wisely and promptly with such conduct, or else this small body of wrongdoers may bring shame upon the great mass of their innocent and right-thinking fellows—that is, upon our nation as a whole. Good manners should be an international no less than an individual attribute. I ask fair treatment for the Japanese as I would ask fair treatment for Germans or Englishmen, Frenchmen, Russians, or Italians. I ask it as due to humanity and civilization. I ask it as due to ourselves because we must act uprightly toward all men.

I recommend to the Congress that an act be passed specifically providing for the naturalization of Japanese who come here intending to become American citizens. One of the great embarrassments attending the performance of our international obligations is the fact that the statutes of the United States are entirely inadequate. They fail to give to the National Government sufficiently ample power, through United States courts and by the use of the Army and Navy, to protect aliens in the rights secured to them under solemn treaties which are the law of the land. I therefore earnestly recommend that the criminal and civil statutes of the United States be so amended and added to as to enable the President, acting for the United States Government, which is responsible in our international relations, to enforce the rights of aliens under treaties. Even as the law now is something can be done by the Federal Government toward this end, and in the matter now before me affecting the Japanese, everything that it is in my power to do will be done, and all the forces, military and civil, of the United States which I may lawfully employ will be so employed. There should, however, be no particle of doubt as to the power of the National Government completely to perform and enforce its own obligations to other nations. The mob of a single city may at any time perform acts of lawless violence against some class of foreigners which would plunge us into war. That city by itself would be powerless to make defense against the foreign power thus assaulted, and if independent of this Government it would never venture to perform or permit the performance of the acts complained of. The entire power and the whole duty to protect the offending city or the offending community lies in the hands of the United States Government. It is unthinkable that we should continue a policy under which a given locality may be allowed to commit a crime against a friendly nation, and the United States Government limited, not to preventing the commission of the crime, but, in the last resort, to defending the people who have committed it against the consequences of their own wrongdoing.

CUBA.

Last August an insurrection broke out in Cuba which it speedily grew evident that the existing Cuban Government was powerless to quell. This Government was repeatedly asked by the then Cuban Government to intervene, and finally was notified by the President of Cuba that he intended to resign; that his decision was irrevocable; that none of the other constitutional officers would consent to carry on the Government, and that he was powerless to maintain order. It was evident that chaos was impending, and there was every probability that if steps were not immediately taken by this Government to try to restore order, the representatives of various European nations in the island would apply to their respective governments for armed intervention in order to protect the lives and property of their citizens. Thanks to the preparedness of our Navy, I was able immediately to send enough ships to Cuba to prevent the situation from becoming hopeless; and I furthermore dispatched to Cuba the Secretary of War and the Assistant Secretary of State, in order that they might grapple with the situation on the ground. All efforts to secure an agreement between the contending factions, by which they should themselves come to an amicable understanding and settle upon some modus vivendi—some provisional government of their own—failed. Finally the President of the Republic resigned. The quorum of Congress assembled failed by deliberate purpose of its members, so that there was no power to act on his resignation, and the Government came to a halt. In accordance with the so-called Platt amendment, which was embodied in the constitution of Cuba, I thereupon proclaimed a provisional government for the island, the Secretary of War acting as provisional governor until he could be replaced by Mr. Magoon, the late minister to Panama and governor of the Canal Zone on the Isthmus; troops were sent to support them and to relieve the Navy, the expedition being handled with most satisfactory speed and efficiency. The insurgent chiefs immediately agreed that their troops should lay down their arms and disband; and the agreement was carried out. The provisional government has left the personnel of the old government and the old laws, so far as might be, unchanged, and will thus administer the island for a few months until tranquillity can be restored, a new election properly held, and a new government inaugurated. Peace has come in the island; and the harvesting of the sugar-cane crop, the great crop of the island, is about to proceed.

When the election has been held and the new government inaugurated in peaceful and orderly fashion the provisional government will come to an end. I take this opportunity of expressing upon behalf of the American people, with all possible solemnity, our most earnest hope that the people of Cuba will realize the imperative need of preserving justice and keeping order in the island. The United States wishes nothing of Cuba except that it shall prosper morally and materially, and wishes nothing of the Cubans save that they shall be able to preserve order among themselves and therefore to preserve their independence. If the elections become a farce, and if the insurrectionary habit becomes confirmed in the island, it is absolutely out of the question that the island should continue independent; and the United States, which has assumed the sponsorship before the civilized world for Cuba's career as a nation, would again have to intervene and to see that the government was managed in such orderly fashion as to secure the safety of life and property. The path to be trodden by those who exercise self-government is always hard, and we should have every charity and patience with the Cubans as they tread this difficult path. I have the utmost sympathy with, and regard for, them; but I most earnestly adjure them solemnly to weigh their responsibilities and to see that when their new government is started it shall run smoothly, and with freedom from flagrant denial of right on the one hand, and from insurrectionary disturbances on the other.

THE RIO CONFERENCE.

The Second International Conference of American Republics, held in Mexico in the years 1901–2, provided for the holding of the Third Conference within five years, and committed the fixing of the time and place and the arrangements for the conference to the governing board of the Bureau of American Republics, composed of the representatives of all the American nations in Washington. That board discharged the duty imposed upon it with marked fidelity and painstaking care, and upon the courteous invitation of the United States of Brazil, the conference was held at Rio de Janeiro, continuing from the 23d of July to the 29th of August last. Many subjects of common interest to all the American nations were discussed by the conference, and the conclusions reached, embodied in a series of resolutions and proposed conventions, will be laid before you upon the coming in of the final report of the American delegates. They contain many matters of importance relating to the extension of trade, the increase of communication, the smoothing away of barriers to free intercourse, and the promotion of a better knowledge and good understanding between the different countries represented. The meetings of the conference were harmonious and the conclusions were reached with substantial unanimity. It is interesting to observe that in the successive conferences which have been held the representatives of the different American nations have been learning to work together effectively, for, while the First Conference in Washington in 1889, and the Second Conference in Mexico in 1901–2, occupied many months, with much time wasted in an unregulated and fruitless discussion, the Third Conference at Rio exhibited much of the facility in the practical dispatch of business which characterizes permanent deliberative bodies, and completed its labors within the period of six weeks originally allotted for its sessions.

Quite apart from the specific value of the conclusions reached by the conference, the example of the representatives of all the American nations engaging in harmonious and kindly consideration and discussion of subjects of common interest is itself of great and substantial value for the promotion of reasonable and considerate treatment of all international questions. The thanks of this country are due to the Government of Brazil and to the people of Rio de Janeiro for the generous hospitality with which our delegates, in common with the others, were received, entertained, and facilitated in their work.

Incidentally to the meeting of the conference, the Secretary of State visited the city of Rio de Janeiro and was cordially received by the conference, of which he was made an honorary president. The announcement of his intention to make this visit was followed by most courteous and urgent invitations from nearly all the countries of South America to visit them as the guest of their Governments. It was deemed that by the acceptance of these invitations we might appropriately express the real respect and friendship in which we hold our sister Republics of the southern continent, and the Secretary, accordingly, visited Brazil, Uruguay, Argentina, Chile, Peru, Panama, and Colombia. He refrained from visiting Paraguay, Bolivia, and Ecuador only because the distance of their capitals from the seaboard made it impracticable with the time at his disposal. He carried with him a message of peace and friendship, and of strong desire for good understanding and mutual helpfulness; and he was everywhere received in the spirit of his message. The members of government, the press, the learned professions, the men of business, and the great masses of the people united everywhere in emphatic response to his friendly expressions and in doing honor to the country and cause which he represented.

In many parts of South America there has been much misunderstanding of the attitude and purposes of the United States toward the other American Republics. An idea had become prevalent that our assertion of the Monroe Doctrine implied, or carried with it, an assumption of superiority, and of a right to exercise some kind of protectorate over the countries to whose territory that doctrine applies. Nothing could be farther from the truth. Yet that impression continued to be a serious barrier to good understanding, to friendly intercourse, to the introduction of American capital and the extension of American trade. The impression was so widespread that apparently it could not be reached by any ordinary means.

It was part of Secretary Root's mission to dispel this unfounded impression, and there is just cause to believe that he has succeeded. In an address to the Third Conference at Rio on the 31st of July—an address of such note that I send it in, together with this message—he said:

"We wish for no victories but those of peace; for no territory except our own; for no sovereignty except the sovereignty over ourselves. We deem the independence and equal rights of the smallest and weakest member of the family of nations entitled to as much respect as those of the greatest empire, and we deem the observance of that respect the chief guaranty of the weak against the oppression of the strong. We neither claim nor desire any rights or privileges or powers that we do not freely concede to every American Republic. We wish to increase our prosperity, to extend our trade, to grow in wealth, in wisdom, and in spirit, but our conception of the true way to accomplish this is not to pull down others and profit by their ruin, but to help all friends to a common prosperity and a common growth, that we may all become greater and stronger together. Within a few months for the first time the recognized possessors of every foot of soil upon the American continents can be and I hope will be represented with the acknowledged rights of equal sovereign states in the great World Congress at The Hague. This will be the world's formal and final acceptance of the declaration that no part of the American continents is to be deemed subject to colonization. Let us pledge ourselves to aid each other in the full performance of the duty to humanity which that accepted declaration implies, so that in time the weakest and most unfortunate of our Republics may come to march with equal step by the side of the stronger and more fortunate. Let us help each other to show that for all the races of men the liberty for which we have fought and labored is the twin sister of justice and peace. Let us unite in creating and maintaining and making effective an all-American public opinion, whose power shall influence international conduct and prevent international wrong, and narrow the causes of war, and forever preserve our free lands from the burden of such armaments as are massed behind the frontiers of Europe, and bring us ever nearer to the perfection of ordered liberty. So shall come security and prosperity, production and trade, wealth, learning, the arts, and happiness for us all."

These words appear to have been received with acclaim in every part of South America. They have my hearty approval, as I am sure they will have yours, and I can not be wrong in the conviction that they correctly represent the sentiments of the whole American people. I can not better characterize the true attitude of the United States in its assertion of the Monroe Doctrine than in the words of the distinguished former minister of foreign affairs of Argentina, Doctor Drago, in his speech welcoming Mr. Root at Buenos Ayres. He spoke of—

"The traditional policy of the United States (which) without accentuating superiority or seeking preponderance, condemned the oppression of the nations of this part of the world and the control of their destinies by the great powers of Europe."

It is gratifying to know that in the great city of Buenos Ayres, upon the arches which spanned the streets, entwined with Argentine and American flags for the reception of our representative, there were emblazoned not only the names of Washington and Jefferson and Marshall, but also, in appreciative recognition of their services to the cause of South American independence, the names of James Monroe, John Quincy Adams, Henry Clay, and Richard Rush. We take especial pleasure in the graceful courtesy of the Government of Brazil, which has given to the beautiful and stately building first used for the meeting of the conference the name of "Palacio Monroe." Our grateful acknowledgments are due to the Governments and the people of all the countries visited by the Secretary of State for the courtesy, the friendship, and the honor shown to our country in their generous hospitality to him.

In my message to you on the 5th of December, 1905, I called your attention to the embarrassment that might be caused to this Government by the assertion by foreign nations of the right to collect by force of arms contract debts due by American republics to citizens of the collecting nation, and to the danger that the process of compulsory collection might result in the occupation of territory tending to become permanent. I then said:

"Our own Government has always refused to enforce such contractual obligations on behalf of its citizens by an appeal to arms. It is much to be wished that all foreign governments would take the same view."

This subject was one of the topics of consideration at the conference at Rio and a resolution was adopted by that conference recommending to the respective governments represented "to consider the advisability of asking the Second Peace Conference at The Hague to examine the question of the compulsory collection of public debts, and in general, means tending to diminish among nations conflicts of purely pecuniary origin."

This resolution was supported by the representatives of the United States in accordance with the following instructions:

"It has long been the established policy of the United States not to use its armed forces for the collection of ordinary contract debts due to its citizens by other governments. We have not considered the use of force for such a purpose consistent with that respect for the independent sovereignty of other members of the family of nations, which is the most important principle of international law and the chief protection of weak nations against the oppression of the strong. It seems to us that the practice is injurious in its general effect upon the relations of nations and upon the welfare of weak and disordered states, whose development ought to be encouraged in the interests of civilization; that it offers frequent temptation to bullying and oppression and to unnecessary and unjustifiable warfare. We regret that other powers, whose opinions and sense of justice we esteem highly, have at times taken a different view and have permitted themselves, though we believe with reluctance, to collect such debts by force. It is doubtless true that the nonpayment of public debts may be accompanied by such circumstances of fraud and wrongdoing or violation of treaties as to justify the use of force. This Government would be glad to see an international consideration of the subject which shall discriminate between such cases and the simple nonperformance of a contract with a private person, and a resolution in favor of reliance upon peaceful means in cases of the latter class.

"It is not felt, however, that the conference at Rio should undertake to make such a discrimination or to resolve upon such a rule. Most of the American countries are still debtor nations, while the countries of Europe are the creditors. If the Rio conference, therefore, were to take such action it would have the appearance of a meeting of debtors resolving how their creditors should act, and this would not inspire respect. The true course is indicated by the terms of the program, which proposes to request the Second Hague Conference, where both creditors and debtors will be assembled, to consider the subject."

CENTRAL AMERICA.

Last June trouble which had existed for some time between the Republics of Salvador, Guatemala, and Honduras culminated in war—a war which threatened to be ruinous to the countries involved and very destructive to the commercial interests of Americans, Mexicans, and other foreigners who are taking an important part in the development of these countries. The thoroughly good understanding which exists between the United States and Mexico enabled this Government and that of Mexico to unite in effective mediation between the warring Republics; which mediation resulted, not without long-continued and patient effort, in bringing about a meeting of the representatives of the hostile powers on board a United States warship as neutral territory, and peace was there concluded; a peace which resulted in the saving of thousands of lives and in the prevention of an incalculable amount of misery and the destruction of property and of the means of livelihood. The Rio Conference passed the following resolution in reference to this action:

"That the Third International American Conference shall address to the Presidents of the United States of America and of the United States of Mexico a note in which the conference which is being held at Rio expresses its satisfaction at the happy results of their meditation for the celebration of peace between the Republics of Guatemala, Honduras, and Salvador."

This affords an excellent example of one way in which the influence of the United States can properly be exercised for the benefit of the peoples of the Western Hemisphere; that is, by action taken in concert with other American republics and therefore free from those suspicions and prejudices which might attach if the action were taken by one alone. In this way it is possible to exercise a powerful influence toward the substitution of considerate action in the spirit of justice for the insurrectionary or international violence which has hitherto been so great a hindrance to the development of many of our neighbors. Repeated examples of united action by several or many American republics in favor of peace, by urging cool and reasonable, instead of excited and belligerent, treatment of international controversies, can not fail to promote the growth of a general public opinion among the American nations which will elevate the standards of international action, strengthen the sense of international duty among governments, and tell in favor of the peace of mankind.

PANAMA TRIP.

I have just returned from a trip to Panama and shall report to you at length later on the whole subject of the Panama Canal.

THE ALGECIRAS CONVENTION.

The Algeciras Convention, which was signed by the United States as well as by most of the powers of Europe, supersedes the previous convention of 1880, which was also signed both by the United States and a majority of the European powers. This treaty confers upon us equal commercial rights with all European countries and does not entail a single obligation of any kind upon us, and I earnestly hope it may be speedily ratified. To refuse to ratify it would merely mean that we forfeited our commercial rights in Morocco and would not achieve another object of any kind. In the event of such refusal we would be left for the first time in a hundred and twenty years without any commercial treaty with Morocco; and this at a time when we are everywhere seeking new markets and outlets for trade.

FUR SEALS.

The destruction of the Pribilof Islands fur seals by pelagic sealing still continues. The herd which, according to the surveys made in 1874 by direction of the Congress, numbered 4,700,000, and which, according to the survey of both American and Canadian commissioners in 1891, amounted to 1,000,000, has now been reduced to about 180,000. This result has been brought about by Canadian and some other sealing vessels killing the female seals while in the water during their annual pilgrimage to and from the south, or in search of food. As a rule the female seal when killed is pregnant, and also has an unweaned pup on land, so that, for each skin taken by pelagic sealing, as a rule, three lives are destroyed—the mother, the unborn offspring, and the nursing pup, which is left to starve to death. No damage whatever is done to the herd by the carefully regulated killing on land; the custom of pelagic sealing is solely responsible for all of the present evil, and is alike indefensible from the economic standpoint and from the standpoint of humanity.

In 1896 over 16,000 young seals were found dead from starvation on the Pribilof Islands. In 1897 it was estimated that since pelagic sealing began upward of 400,000 adult female seals had been killed at sea, and over 300,000 young seals had died of starvation as the result. The revolting barbarity of such a practice, as well as the wasteful destruction which it involves, needs no demonstration and is its own condemnation. The Bering Sea Tribunal, which sat in Paris in 1893, and which decided against the claims of the United States to exclusive jurisdiction in the waters of Bering Sea and to a property right in the fur seals when outside of the three mile limit, determined also upon certain regulations which the Tribunal considered sufficient for the proper protection and preservation of the fur seal in, or habitually resorting to, the Bering Sea. The Tribunal by its regulations established a close season, from the 1st of May to the 31st of July, and excluded all killing in the waters within 60 miles around the Pribilof Islands. They also provided that the regulations which they had determined upon, with a view to the protection and preservation of the seals, should be submitted every five years to new examination, so as to enable both interested Governments to consider whether, in the light of past experience, there was occasion for any modification thereof.

The regulations have proved plainly inadequate to accomplish the object of protection and preservation of the fur seals, and for a long time this Government has been trying in vain to secure from Great Britain such revision and modification of the regulations as were contemplated and provided for by the award of the Tribunal of Paris.

The process of destruction has been accelerated during recent years by the appearance of a number of Japanese vessels engaged in pelagic sealing. As these vessels have not been bound even by the inadequate limitations prescribed by the Tribunal of Paris, they have paid no attention either to the close season or to the sixty-mile limit imposed upon the Canadians, and have prosecuted their work up to the very islands themselves. On July 16 and 17 the crews from several Japanese vessels made raids upon the island of St. Paul, and before they were beaten off by the very meager and insufficiently armed guard, they succeeded in killing several hundred seals and carrying off the skins of most of them. Nearly all the seals killed were females and the work was done with frightful barbarity. Many of the seals appear to have been skinned alive and many were found half skinned and still alive. The raids were repelled only by the use of firearms, and five of the raiders were killed, two were wounded, and twelve captured, including the two wounded. Those captured have since been tried and sentenced to imprisonment. An attack of this kind had been wholly unlooked for, but such provision of vessels, arms, and ammunition will now be made that its repetition will not be found profitable.

Suitable representations regarding the incident have been made to the Government of Japan, and we are assured that all practicable measures will be taken by that country to prevent any recurrence of the outrage. On our part, the guard on the island will be increased, and better equipped and organized, and a better revenue-cutter patrol service about the islands will be established; next season a United States war vessel will also be sent there.

We have not relaxed our efforts to secure an agreement with Great Britain for adequate protection of the seal herd, and negotiations with Japan for the same purpose are in progress.

The laws for the protection of the seals within the jurisdiction of the United States need revision and amendment. Only the islands of St. Paul and St. George are now, in terms, included in the Government reservation, and the other islands are also to be included. The landing of aliens as well as citizens upon the islands, without a permit from the Department of Commerce and Labor, for any purpose except in case of stress of weather or for water, should be prohibited under adequate penalties. The approach of vessels for the excepted purposes should be regulated. The authority of the Government agents on the islands should be enlarged, and the chief agent should have the powers of a committing magistrate. The entrance of a vessel into the territorial waters surrounding the islands with intent to take seals should be made a criminal offense and cause of forfeiture. Authority for seizures in such cases should be given and the presence on any such vessel of seals or sealskins, or the paraphernalia for taking them, should be made prima facie evidence of such intent. I recommend what legislation is needed to accomplish these ends; and I commend to your attention the report of Mr. Sims, of the Department of Commerce and Labor, on this subject.

In case we are compelled to abandon the hope of making arrangements with other governments to put an end to the hideous cruelty now incident to pelagic sealing, it will be a question for your serious consideration how far we should continue to protect and maintain the seal herd on land with the result of continuing such a practice, and whether it is not better to end the practice by exterminating the herd ourselves in the most humane way possible.

SECOND HAGUE CONFERENCE.

In my last message I advised you that the Emperor of Russia had taken the initiative in bringing about a second peace conference at The Hague. Under the guidance of Russia the arrangement of the preliminaries for such a conference has been progressing during the past year. Progress has necessarily been slow, owing to the great number of countries to be consulted upon every question that has arisen. It is a matter of satisfaction that all of the American Republics have now, for the first time, been invited to join in the proposed conference.

The close connection between the subjects to be taken up by the Red Cross Conference held at Geneva last summer, and the subjects which naturally would come before The Hague Conference, made it apparent that it was desirable to have the work of the Red Cross Conference completed and considered by the different powers before the meeting at The Hague. The Red Cross Conference ended its labors on the 6th day of July, and the revised and amended convention, which was signed by the American delegates, will be promptly laid before the Senate.

By the special and highly appreciated courtesy of the Governments of Russia and the Netherlands, a proposal to call The Hague Conference together at a time which would conflict with the conference of the American Republics at Rio de Janeiro in August was laid aside. No other date has yet been suggested. A tentative programme for the conference has been proposed by the Government of Russia, and the subjects which it enumerates are undergoing careful examination and consideration in preparation for the conference.

PEACE AND RIGHTEOUSNESS.

It must ever be kept in mind that war is not merely justifiable, but imperative, upon honorable men, upon an honorable nation, where peace can only be obtained by the sacrifice of conscientious conviction or of national welfare. Peace is normally a great good, and normally it coincides with righteousness; but it is righteousness and not peace which should bind the conscience of a nation as it should bind the conscience of an individual; and neither a nation nor an individual can surrender conscience to another's keeping. Neither can a nation, which is an entity, and which does not die as individuals die, refrain from taking thought for the interest of the generations that are to come, no less than for the interest of the generation of to-day; and no public men have a right, whether from shortsightedness, from selfish indifference, or from sentimentality, to sacrifice national interests which are vital in character. A just war is in the long run far better for a nation's soul than the most prosperous peace obtained by acquiescence in wrong or injustice. Moreover, though it is criminal for a nation not to prepare for war, so that it may escape the dreadful consequences of being defeated in war, yet it must always be remembered that even to be defeated in war may be far better than not to have fought at all. As has been well and finely said, a beaten nation is not necessarily a disgraced nation; but the nation or man is disgraced if the obligation to defend right is shirked.

We should as a nation do everything in our power for the cause of honorable peace. It is morally as indefensible for a nation to commit a wrong upon another nation, strong or weak, as for an individual thus to wrong his fellows. We should do all in our power to hasten the day when there shall be peace among the nations—a peace based upon justice and not upon cowardly submission to wrong. We can accomplish a good deal in this direction, but we can not accomplish everything, and the penalty of attempting to do too much would almost inevitably be to do worse than nothing; for it must be remembered that fantastic extremists are not in reality leaders of the causes which they espouse, but are ordinarily those who do most to hamper the real leaders of the cause and to damage the cause itself. As yet there is no likelihood of establishing any kind of international power, of whatever sort, which can effectively check wrongdoing, and in these circumstances it would be both a foolish and an evil thing for a great and free nation to deprive itself of the power to protect its own rights and even in exceptional cases to stand up for the rights of others. Nothing would more promote iniquity, nothing would further defer the reign upon earth of peace and righteousness, than for the free and enlightened peoples which, though with much stumbling and many shortcomings, nevertheless strive toward justice, deliberately to render themselves powerless while leaving every despotism and barbarism armed and able to work their wicked will. The chance for the settlement of disputes peacefully, by arbitration, now depends mainly upon the possession by the nations that mean to do right of sufficient armed strength to make their purpose effective.

THE NAVY AND ARMY.

The United States Navy is the surest guarantor of peace which this country possesses. It is earnestly to be wished that we would profit by the teachings of history in this matter. A strong and wise people will study its own failures no less than its triumphs, for there is wisdom to be learned from the study of both, of the mistake as well as of the success. For this purpose nothing could be more instructive than a rational study of the war of 1812, as it is told, for instance, by Captain Mahan. There was only one way in which that war could have been avoided. If during the preceding twelve years a navy relatively as strong as that which this country now has had been built up, and an army provided relatively as good as that which the country now has, there never would have been the slightest necessity of fighting the war; and if the necessity had arisen the war would under such circumstances have ended with our speedy and overwhelming triumph. But our people during those twelve years refused to make any preparations whatever, regarding either the Army or the Navy. They saved a million or two of dollars by so doing; and in mere money paid a hundredfold for each million they thus saved during the three years of war which followed—a war which brought untold suffering upon our people, which at one time threatened the gravest national disaster, and which, in spite of the necessity of waging it, resulted merely in what was in effect a drawn battle, while the balance of defeat and triumph was almost even.

I do not ask that we continue to increase our Navy. I ask merely that it be maintained at its present strength; and this can be done only if we replace the obsolete and outworn ships by new and good ones, the equals of any afloat in any navy. To stop building ships for one year means that for that year the Navy goes back instead of forward. The old battle ship Texas, for instance, would now be of little service in a stand-up fight with a powerful adversary. The old double-turret monitors have outworn their usefulness, while it was a waste of money to build the modern single-turret monitors. All these ships should be replaced by others; and this can be done by a well-settled programme of providing for the building each year of at least one first-class battle ship equal in size and speed to any that any nation is at the same time building; the armament presumably to consist of as large a number as possible of very heavy guns of one caliber, together with smaller guns to repel torpedo attack; while there should be heavy armor, turbine engines, and in short, every modern device. Of course, from time to time, cruisers, colliers, torpedo-boat destroyers or torpedo boats, will have to be built also. All this, be it remembered, would not increase our Navy, but would merely keep it at its present strength. Equally of course, the ships will be absolutely useless if the men aboard them are not so trained that they can get the best possible service out of the formidable but delicate and complicated mechanisms intrusted to their care. The marksmanship of our men has so improved during the last five years that I deem it within bounds to say that the Navy is more than twice as efficient, ship for ship, as half a decade ago. The Navy can only attain proper efficiency if enough officers and men are provided, and if these officers and men are given the chance (and required to take advantage of it) to stay continually at sea and to exercise the fleets singly and above all in squadron, the exercise to be of every kind and to include unceasing practice at the guns, conducted under conditions that will test marksmanship in time of war.

In both the Army and the Navy there is urgent need that everything possible should be done to maintain the highest standard for the personnel, alike as regards the officers and the enlisted men. I do not believe that in any service there is a finer body of enlisted men and of junior officers than we have in both the Army and the Navy, including the Marine Corps. All possible encouragement to the enlisted men should be given, in pay and otherwise, and everything practicable done to render the service attractive to men of the right type. They should be held to the strictest discharge of their duty, and in them a spirit should be encouraged which demands not the mere performance of duty, but the performance of far more than duty, if it conduces to the honor and the interest of the American nation; and in return the amplest consideration should be theirs.

West Point and Annapolis already turn out excellent officers. We do not need to have these schools made more scholastic. On the contrary we should never lose sight of the fact that the aim of each school is to turn out a man who shall be above everything else a fighting man. In the Army in particular it is not necessary that either the cavalry or infantry officer should have special mathematical ability. Probably in both schools the best part of the education is the high standard of character and of professional morale which it confers.

But in both services there is urgent need for the establishment of a principle of selection which will eliminate men after a certain age if they can not be promoted from the subordinate ranks, and which will bring into the higher ranks fewer men, and these at an earlier age. This principle of selection will be objected to by good men of mediocre capacity who are fitted to do well while young in the lower positions, but who are not fitted to do well when at an advanced age they come into positions of command and of great responsibility. But the desire of these men to be promoted to positions which they are not competent to fill should not weigh against the interests of the Navy and the country. At present our men, especially in the Navy, are kept far too long in the junior grades, and then, at much too advanced an age, are put quickly through the senior grades, often not attaining to these senior grades until they are too old to be of real use in them; and if they are of real use, being put through them so quickly that little benefit to the Navy comes from their having been in them at all.

The Navy has one great advantage over the Army in the fact that the officers of high rank are actually trained in the continual performance of their duties; that is, in the management of the battle ships and armored cruisers gathered into fleets. This is not true of the army officers, who rarely have corresponding chances to exercise command over troops under service conditions. The conduct of the Spanish war showed the lamentable loss of life, the useless extravagance, and the inefficiency certain to result, if during peace the high officials of the War and Navy Departments are praised and rewarded only if they save money at no matter what cost to the efficiency of the service, and if the higher officers are given no chance whatever to exercise and practice command. For years prior to the Spanish war the Secretaries of War were praised chiefly if they practiced economy; which economy, especially in connection with the quartermaster, commissary, and medical departments, was directly responsible for most of the mismanagement that occurred in the war itself—and parenthetically be it observed that the very people who clamored for the misdirected economy in the first place were foremost to denounce the mismanagement, loss, and suffering which were primarily due to this same misdirected economy and to the lack of preparation it involved. There should soon be an increase in the number of men for our coast defenses; these men should be of the right type and properly trained; and there should therefore be an increase of pay for certain skilled grades, especially in the coast artillery. Money should be appropriated to permit troops to be massed in body and exercised in maneuvers, particularly in marching. Such exercise during the summer just past has been of incalculable benefit to the Army and should under no circumstances be discontinued. If on these practice marches and in these maneuvers elderly officers prove unable to bear the strain, they should be retired at once, for the fact is conclusive as to their unfitness for war; that is, for the only purpose because of which they should be allowed to stay in the service. It is a real misfortune to have scores of small company or regimental posts scattered throughout the country; the Army should be gathered in a few brigade or division posts; and the generals should be practiced in handling the men in masses. Neglect to provide for all of this means to incur the risk of future disaster and disgrace.

The readiness and efficiency of both the Army and Navy in dealing with the recent sudden crisis in Cuba illustrate afresh their value to the Nation. This readiness and efficiency would have been very much less had it not been for the existence of the General Staff in the Army and the General Board in the Navy; both are essential to the proper development and use of our military forces afloat and ashore. The troops that were sent to Cuba were handled flawlessly. It was the swiftest mobilization and dispatch of troops over sea ever accomplished by our Government. The expedition landed completely equipped and ready for immediate service, several of its organizations hardly remaining in Havana over night before splitting up into detachments and going to their several posts. It was a fine demonstration of the value and efficiency of the General Staff. Similarly, it was owing in large part to the General Board that the Navy was able at the outset to meet the Cuban crisis with such instant efficiency, ship after ship appearing on the shortest notice at any threatened point, while the Marine Corps in particular performed indispensable service. The Army and Navy War Colleges are of incalculable value to the two services, and they cooperate with constantly increasing efficiency and importance.

The Congress has most wisely provided for a National Board for the promotion of rifle practice. Excellent results have already come from this law, but it does not go far enough. Our Regular Army is so small that in any great war we should have to trust mainly to volunteers; and in such event these volunteers should already know how to shoot; for if a soldier has the fighting edge, and ability to take care of himself in the open, his efficiency on the line of battle is almost directly proportionate to excellence in marksmanship. We should establish shooting galleries in all the large public and military schools, should maintain national target ranges in different parts of the country, and should in every way encourage the formation of rifle clubs throughout all parts of the land. The little Republic of Switzerland offers us an excellent example in all matters connected with building up an efficient citizen soldiery.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
December 3, 1906.

APPENDIX.

Address by the Secretary of State of the United States of America as honorary president of the Third Conference of American Republics at Rio de Janeiro, July 31, 1906.

Mr. President and Gentlemen of the Third Conference of American Republics:

I beg you to believe that I highly appreciate and thank you for the honor you do me.

I bring from my country a special greeting to her elder sisters in the civilization of America.

Unlike as we are in many respects, we are alike in this, that we are all engaged under new conditions, and free from the traditional forms and limitations of the Old World, in working out the same problem of popular self-government.

It is a difficult and laborious task for each of us. Not in one generation nor in one century can the effective control of a superior sovereign, so long deemed necessary to government, be rejected and effective self-control by the governed be perfected in its place. The first fruits of democracy are many of them crude and unlovely; its mistakes are many, its partial failures many, its sins not few. Capacity for self-government does not come to man by nature. It is an art to be learned, and it is also an expression of character to be developed among all the thousands of men who exercise popular sovereignty.

To reach the goal toward which we are pressing forward, the governing multitude must first acquire knowledge that comes from universal education, wisdom that follows practical experience, personal independence and self-respect befitting men who acknowledge no superior, self-control to replace that external control which a democracy rejects, respect for law, obedience to the lawful expressions of the public will, consideration for the opinions and interests of others equally entitled to a voice in the state, loyalty to that abstract conception—one's country—as inspiring as that loyalty to personal sovereigns which has so illumined the pages of history, subordination of personal interests to the public good, love of justice and mercy, of liberty and order. All these we must seek by slow and patient effort; and of how many shortcomings in his own land and among his own people each one of us is conscious.

Yet no student of our times can fail to see that not America alone but the whole civilized world is swinging away from its old governmental moorings and intrusting the fate of the civilization to the capacity of the popular mass to govern. By this pathway mankind is to travel, whithersoever it leads. Upon the success of this our great undertaking the hope of humanity depends.

Nor can we fail to see that the world makes substantial progress toward more perfect popular self-government.

I believe it to be true that, viewed against the background of conditions a century, a generation, a decade ago, government in my own country has advanced, in the intelligent participation of the great mass of the people, in the fidelity and honesty with which they are represented, in respect for law, in obedience to the dictates of a sound morality, and in effectiveness and purity of administration.

Nowhere in the world has this progress been more marked than in Latin America. Out of the wrack of Indian fighting and race conflicts and civil wars, strong and stable governments have arisen. Peaceful succession in accord with the people's will has replaced the forcible seizure of power permitted by the people's indifference. Loyalty to country, its peace, its dignity, its honor, has arisen above partizanship for individual leaders. The rule of law supersedes the rule of man. Property is protected and the fruits of enterprise are secure. Individual liberty is respected. Continuous public policies are followed; national faith is held sacred. Progress has not been equal everywhere, but there has been progress everywhere. The movement in the right direction is general. The right tendency is not exceptional; it is continental. The present affords just cause for satisfaction; the future is bright with hope.

It is not by national isolation that these results have been accomplished, or that this progress can be continued. No nation can live unto itself alone and continue to live. Each nation's growth is a part of the development of the race. There may be leaders and there may be laggards, but no nation can long continue very far in advance of the general progress of mankind, and no nation that is not doomed to extinction can remain very far behind. It is with nations as it is with individual men; intercourse, association, correction of egotism by the influence of other's judgment, broadening of views by the experience and thought of equals, acceptance of the moral standards of a community the desire for whose good opinion lends a sanction to the rules of right conduct—these are the conditions of growth in civilization. A people whose minds are not open to the lessons of the world's progress, whose spirits are not stirred by the aspirations and the achievements of humanity struggling the world over for liberty and justice, must be left behind by civilization in its steady and beneficent advance.

To promote this mutual interchange and assistance between the American republics, engaged in the same great task, inspired by the same purpose, and professing the same principles, I understand to be the function of the American Conference now in session. There is not one of all our countries that can not benefit the others; there is not one that can not receive benefit from the others; there is not one that will not gain by the prosperity, the peace, the happiness of all.

According to your programme no great and impressive single thing is to be done by you; no political questions are to be discussed; no controversies are to be settled; no judgment is to be passed upon the conduct of any State; but many subjects are to be considered which afford the possibility of removing barriers to intercourse; of ascertaining for the common benefit what advances have been made by each nation in knowledge, in experience, in enterprise, in the solution of difficult questions of government, and in ethical standards; of perfecting our knowledge of each other; and of doing away with the misconceptions, the misunderstandings, and the resultant prejudices that are such fruitful sources of controversy.

And there are some subjects in the programme which invite discussion that may lead the American republics toward an agreement upon principles, the general practical application of which can come only in the future through long and patient effort. Some advance at least may be made here toward the complete rule of justice and peace among nations in lieu of force and war.

The association of so many eminent men from all the republics, leaders of opinion in their own homes; the friendships that will arise among you; the habit of temperate and kindly discussion of matters of common interest; the ascertainment of common sympathies and aims; the dissipation of misunderstandings; the exhibition to all the American peoples of this peaceful and considerate method of conferring upon international questions—this alone, quite irrespective of the resolutions you may adopt and the conventions you may sign, will mark a substantial advance in the direction of international good understanding.

These beneficent results the Government and the people of the United States of America greatly desire. We wish for no victories but those of peace; for no territory except our own; for no sovereignty except the sovereignty over ourselves. We deem the independence and equal rights of the smallest and weakest member of the family of nations entitled to as much respect as those of the greatest empire, and we deem the observance of that respect the chief guaranty of the weak against the oppression of the strong. We neither claim nor desire any rights, or privileges, or powers that we do not freely concede to every American republic. We wish to increase our prosperity, to expand our trade, to grow in wealth, in wisdom, and in spirit, but our conception of the true way to accomplish this is not to pull down others and profit by their ruin, but to help all friends to a common prosperity and a common growth, that we may all become greater and stronger together.

Within a few months, for the first time the recognized possessors of every foot of soil upon the American continents can be and I hope will be represented with the acknowledged rights of equal sovereign states in the great World Congress at The Hague. This will be the world's formal and final acceptance of the declaration that no part of the American continents is to be deemed subject to colonization. Let us pledge ourselves to aid each other in the full performance of the duty to humanity which that accepted declaration implies; so that in time the weakest and most unfortunate of our republics may come to march with equal step by the side of the stronger and more fortunate. Let us help each other to show that for all the races of men the liberty for which we have fought and labored is the twin sister of justice and peace. Let us unite in creating and maintaining and making effective an all-American public opinion, whose power shall influence international conduct and prevent international wrong, and narrow the causes of war, and forever preserve our free lands from the burden of such armaments as are massed behind the frontiers of Europe, and bring us ever nearer to the perfection of ordered liberty. So shall come security and prosperity, production and trade, wealth, learning, the arts, and happiness for us all.

Not in a single conference, nor by a single effort, can very much be done. You labor more for the future than for the present; but if the right impulse be given, if the right tendency be established, the work you do here will go on among all the millions of people in the American continents long after your final adjournment, long after your lives, with incalculable benefit to all our beloved countries, which may it please God to continue free and independent and happy for ages to come.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The message will be printed and lie on the table.

STATE PUBLIC SCHOOL SYSTEMS.

Mr. RAYNER submitted the following resolutions, which were read:

Resolved, That in the opinion of the Senate this Government has no right to enter into any treaty with any foreign government relating in any manner to any of the public school systems of any of the States of the Union; and

Resolved further, That in the opinion of the Senate there is no provision in the treaty between the United States and the Government of Japan that relates in any manner to this subject or in any way interferes with the right of the State of California to conduct and administer its system of public schools in accordance with its own legislation; and

Resolved further, That it is the duty of the President of the United States to notify the Government of Japan and notify any foreign government with whom the question may arise that the public educational institutions of the States are not within the jurisdiction of the United States, and that the United States has no power to regulate or supervise their administration.

Mr. RAYNER. I ask that the resolutions may lie on the table.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is so ordered.

SENATOR FROM UTAH.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that a week from to-day I shall call up the report of the Committee on Privileges and Elections and the accompanying resolution in relation to the right of the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] to a seat in this body.

DISMISSAL OF THREE COMPANIES OF TWENTY-FIFTH INFANTRY.

Mr. FORAKER. Yesterday I introduced a resolution relative to the dismissal of three companies of the Twenty-fifth Infantry. On looking at it in the RECORD this morning I observe that there are some inaccuracies as to the citation of sections. I ask that the resolution may be reprinted as I have corrected it, and on the suggestion of the Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS] I ask that it also be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The resolution as modified is as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to furnish the Senate copies of all official letters, telegrams, reports, orders, and so forth, filed in the War Department in connection with the recent discharge of the enlisted men of Companies B, C, and D, Twenty-fifth United States Infantry, together with a complete list of the men discharged, showing the record of each, the amount of retained pay (under section 1281 and following sections of the Compiled Statutes, vol. 1, p. 912, edition of 1901), if any, to the credit of each man at the time of his discharge; the ruling of the War Department, if any has been made in this or any other similar case, as to the effect upon his right to such retained pay, and also the ruling of the War Department, if any has been made in this or any similar case, as to the effect of such discharge upon the right of an enlisted man to retire on three-fourths pay, with an allowance for subsistence and clothing (under section 1260 and following sections of the Compiled Statutes, vol. 1, p. 890, edition of 1901), and his right to enter a National Soldiers' Home (under section 4821 and following sections of the Compiled Statutes, vol. 3, p. 3332, edition of 1901), his right to be buried in a national cemetery (under section 4878 and following sections of the Compiled Statutes, vol. 3, p. 3378, edition of 1901), and his right to receive transportation and subsistence from place of discharge to his home, as provided for in section 1290 and following sections of the Compiled Statutes, vol. 1, p. 916, edition of 1901; also a complete official record of the Twenty-fifth Regiment, United States Infantry, from the time of its muster in to the date of the discharge of Companies B, C, and D.

Mr. FORAKER. I also ask that the resolution on this subject introduced yesterday by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], and the one submitted by me, shall remain on the table before the Senate, to be called up for consideration at any time, instead of going to the Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, it will be so ordered.

THE FIVE CIVILIZED TRIBES.

On motion of Mr. CLARK of Wyoming, it was Ordered, That the time for the report of the Select Committee to Investigate Matters Connected with the Five Civilized Tribes be extended until the first Monday in January, 1907.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVES HITT, KETCHAM, ADAMS, AND HOAR.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, I ask that the resolutions of the House of Representatives relative to the death of certain Members of that body may be laid before the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate resolutions of the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolutions, as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
December 3, 1906.

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. ROBERT R. HITT, a Representative from the State of Illinois in thirteen successive Congresses.

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. JOHN H. KETCHAM, a Representative from the State of New York in seventeen Congresses.

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. H. C. ADAMS, a Representative from the State of Wisconsin.

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. ROCKWOOD HOAR, a Representative from the State of Massachusetts.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the memory of those Representatives whose deaths have been announced this House do now adjourn.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, I submit a resolution, and ask for its present consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Illinois submits a resolution, and asks for its present consideration. The resolution will be read.

The resolution was read, and unanimously agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with deep sensibility the announcement of the death of Hon. ROBERT R. HITT, a Representative from the State of Illinois in thirteen successive Congresses.

Mr. DEPEW. Mr. President, I offer the resolution I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New York proposes a resolution, which will be read.

The resolution was read, and unanimously agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with deep sensibility the announcement of the death of Hon. JOHN H. KETCHAM, a Representative from the State of New York in seventeen Congresses.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I offer the resolution I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wisconsin proposes a resolution, which will be read.

The resolution was read, and unanimously agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with deep sensibility the announcement of the death of Hon. H. C. ADAMS, a Representative from the State of Wisconsin.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I offer a resolution for present consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts submits a resolution, which will be read.

The resolution was read, and unanimously agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with deep sensibility of the death of Hon. ROCKWOOD HOAR, a Representative from the State of Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I also offer another resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts proposes an additional resolution, which will be read.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That as an additional mark of respect to the memory of those Representatives whose deaths have been announced the Senate do now adjourn.

The resolution was unanimously agreed to; and (at 2 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, December 5, 1906, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, December 4, 1906.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read.

CORRECTIONS.

Mr. COOPER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I notice by the RECORD this morning that I am recorded as among those not present on yesterday. I was present, and I ask that the RECORD and Journal be corrected accordingly.

Mr. GRANGER. Mr. Speaker, I notice by the RECORD this morning that I am recorded as among those present on yesterday. I was not present, and I ask that the RECORD and Journal be corrected accordingly.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the RECORD and the Journal will be corrected in accordance with the statements of the gentleman from Pennsylvania and the gentleman from Rhode Island.

There was no objection.

COMMITTEE APPOINTMENTS.

The SPEAKER announced the following committee appointments:

Mr. COUSINS, chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. LOWDEN, member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE TO NOTIFY THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, the committee appointed by the House to join a similar committee on the part of the Senate, to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that a quorum of each House of Congress has appeared and is ready to receive any communication he might make, report that they have performed that duty, and the President has requested us to say that he will communicate with the Congress in writing.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. RIXEY, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

RECESS.

At 12 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m., on motion of Mr. PAYNE, the House took a recess until 12.25 p. m.

The recess having expired, the House was called to order by the Speaker.

ANNUAL MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. LATTA, one of his secretaries.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the message from the President of the United States.

[For message see Senate proceedings of this date.]

REFERENCE OF THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS and Mr. PAYNE rose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LACEY). The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I wish to offer a resolution in regard to the message.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands that the gentleman from Indiana desires to offer a resolution in regard to the President's message.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That 10,000 copies of the President's message be printed for the use of Members of the House of Representatives, to be distributed through the folding room of the House.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that that go to the Committee on Printing. I offer the usual resolution that the message and accompanying documents be referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and printed.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a question for information. Does this folding-room distribution, provided for in the resolution offered by the gentleman from Indiana, put these messages where we can get them pro rata?

Mr. PAYNE. Oh, that is a matter to be considered when it is reported.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The resolution as to printing has not been acted upon. The Chair will recognize the motion of the gentleman from New York as one having precedence over the motion offered by the gentleman from Indiana. The question is on the resolution offered by the gentleman from New York, that the message and accompanying documents be referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and be printed.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. Mr. Speaker, I now ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I sent to the desk and which has been read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which has been read. Is there objection?

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I ask the gentleman from Indiana why this unusual haste?

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. There is no unusual haste about it. I would say that this is the custom that has been followed always—to have 10,000 copies of the message printed.

Mr. PAYNE. Why, I think not; such a resolution has always gone to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. I think not. I think it has been customary to order the additional number of 10,000 copies to be printed and distributed through the folding room.

Mr. PAYNE. I have no recollection of such a motion ever having been made before at the time of the reading of the message. The usual course has been the resolution which has just been adopted, which prints the message. Then afterwards if the House needs additional copies the Committee on Printing bring in a resolution. I think the resolution ought to go to the Committee on Printing.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from New York object?

Mr. PAYNE. I do.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York objects, and the resolution will be referred to the Committee on Printing.

PERSONAL REQUEST.

By unanimous consent, Mr. MOON of Tennessee was granted leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of William G. Humbard, Fifty-seventh Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 2 o'clock and 53 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned to meet at 12 o'clock to-morrow.

PRINTING OF BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS.

Mr. PLATT. I submit a brief majority report from the Committee on Printing and ask that it be printed in the RECORD, together with the letter accompanying the same.

There being no objection, the report was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The Committee on Printing, having been directed by Senate resolution No. 175, Fifty-ninth Congress, first session, to inquire into the reasons for the delay in the Government Printing Office in sending to the Senate, especially in the last days of the session, printed copies of bills and joint resolutions pending and awaiting action on the part of Congress, respectfully submits a communication from its clerk, Mr. Albert H. Howe, hereto attached, which, with its accompanying data, this committee adopts as its report. Since the findings herein are, in the judgment of the committee, accurately, comprehensively, and clearly stated, the committee has nothing to add thereto.

T. C. PLATT.
S. B. ELKINS.

Inquiry into the causes of delay in completing the work of the first session of the Fifty-ninth Congress.

UNITED STATES SENATE, COMMITTEE ON PRINTING,
August 15, 1906.

Hon. T. C. PLATT,
Chairman Committee on Printing,
U. S. Senate, Washington, D. C.

SIR: By your direction and in pursuance of the provisions of Senate resolution No. 175, first session, Fifty-ninth Congress, wherein the Committee on Printing is "directed to inquire into the reasons for the delay in the Government Printing Office in sending to the Senate, especially in the last days of the session, printed copies of bills and joint resolutions pending and awaiting action on the part of Congress," I visited Washington and conducted as thorough an investigation as was possible under the terms of the resolution. Considerable testimony was taken, calculated to define the procedure of handling bills and to reveal the causes of the alleged delays of which complaint had been made, a transcription of which testimony is hereto annexed.

Attention is respectfully drawn to the character of the resolution under which the investigation has been conducted, which, by its failure to empower your committee to summon witnesses, places at your disposal in many cases second-hand testimony leading to inference rather than to proven fact. The absence of some necessary witnesses and the disinclination of others to testify has served in several instances to hamper and circumscribe the action of your committee. Again, the absence of provision for the defrayment of the expense of the investigation will necessitate provision hereafter for the payment of stenographic and other services.

At the risk of being didactic, the results of this inquiry will be better understood by illustrating at the outset the processes involved in the handling of supply bills by Congress; and in the illustration of these processes it will be interesting to note the frequency with which the functions of the Government Printing Office are exercised and the respects in which the work of that office is accelerated or impeded by the character of the engrossing and enrolling work of Congress.

It is understood that an appropriation or supply bill invariably originates in a subcommittee of a House committee. During the progress of consideration by the House subcommittee such bills are frequently printed confidentially once or several times for the use of the subcommittee, and when such a bill has attained the form in which the subcommittee determines finally to report to the full committee, the tentative measure is definitely though confidentially printed for report to the full committee.

The full committee ratify or amend the work of the subcommittee and, taking the print supplied by the Government Printing Office for this purpose, report a ratified or amended draft of the measure to the House of Representatives, which reported bill is given a number, and following which the measure is then printed for the use of Congress. When the House of Representatives considers the measure in Committee of the Whole, the amendments of the committee and the sporadic amendments issuing from the floor having been agreed to or rejected, as the case may be, the measure is passed. In the form in which it passes the House it is engrossed by the clerical force of the House and printed in engrossed form on blue ledger paper, in which form it is messaged over to the Senate.

The testimony accompanying this report will show that in cases of this kind the clerical force of the House, and the Government Printing Office as well, proceed with an anticipatory engrossment and preparation of the measure with a view to its ultimate expedition; hence when the final action of the House upon its bill is taken the engrossment and printing of the measure are already tremendously advanced. When the measure is messaged to the Senate it is again printed, carrying the action of being referred to the proper Senate committee.

In the Senate committee very much the same procedure is followed as has been followed in the House. A subcommittee of the Senate committee first considers the House measure, possibly requiring for its confidential uses several prints thereof. The subcommittee report to the full committee, who in turn finally make their report to the Senate, in which form the bill is again, officially, printed for the use of the Senate, with or without amendments, as reported by the Senate committee. This is the print showing certain matter lined out with italicized additions.

After being passed by the Senate with the committee and other amendments the changes are indicated in a separate print called the engrossed amendments of the Senate. In the accomplishment of this print the method of anticipation is again practiced with great effect, both by the clerical force of the Senate and the bill force of the Government Printing Office, to the end that the absolute minimal time may be attained in making the measure available for the use of Congress. When the measure gets back to the House, where it originated, with the engrossed amendments of the Senate, those amendments are numbered, and when the measure with the numbered amendments is referred to the House the bill is ordered printed with the numbered amendments of the Senate dovetailed into the bill.

The measure in this form is considered by conferees, who reach fractional agreement or agreement en masse, as the case may be. Frequently several conferences are ordered. At this point the enrolling clerk of the House makes up the copy for the enrolled bill, which is then printed on parchment, and after the same has been signed by the presiding officers of both Houses, and finally by the President of the United States, it is printed as a public law, which is the final disposition until it is embodied in the statutes.

Apropos of the foregoing the enrolling clerk of the House of Representatives, in written testimony contained in the exhibits accompanying this report, makes the following statement:

"When a bill passes both Houses it is not ready by any means to be sent to the President. The fact is that the actual work in perfecting it only begins, as it must be prepared by the enrolling clerk, and, with the amendments, if any, sent to the Printing Office (the distance between the Capitol and the Printing Office being great) for proof; returned to the enrolling clerk, read, sent back to be returned on parchment for another reading by the enrolling clerk. If errors are found on one or more sheets, those sheets are returned for correction and reprinting. When the corrections are all made, the parchment, with the original papers—the engrossed copy, the amendments, and the conference reports—are all turned over to the Committee on Enrolled Bills, which committee repeat the work of the enrolling clerk and his assistants. If found correct, the bill is then taken to the Speaker of the House, etc."

At the risk of repetition, it may be stated that the enrolling clerk of the House, in making his enrollment, compiles his copy for the printer from, first, the desk copy; second, the blue print; third, the engrossed amendments of the Senate, and, finally, the conference reports, varying in number; so that he is practically making his enrollment from five or more different pieces of copy. In a bill having many pages and many amendments, the work of enrollment is complicated and magnitudinous in the extreme, and, considering the care necessary to be exercised in order that not only the language of the bill, but every punctuation mark and capital letter as well, may be absolutely accurate, much time must necessarily be consumed. In emphasis of this point, it may also be stated that, in the preparation and acceptance of each print of the bill, in addition to the preparation of copy, proof must be read, and the work of both the clerical forces of Congress and the bill force of the Government Printing Office has to be fully verified.

In the light of this procedure, let us consider the two measures leading to this investigation, namely, the general deficiency bill and the public buildings bill.

The criticism attaching to the general deficiency bill concerns a delay experienced by the conferees in securing what is known as the numbered amendment print for consideration, this being the print ordered by the House after the bill has been returned to the House by the Senate with the engrossed amendments of the latter dovetailed into the bill. Omitting the preliminary steps involved in the handling of the measure, testimony attached will show that the bill passed the Senate late Thursday night, June 28, 1906.

A preliminary copy, containing the Senate committee amendments only, was sent to the Printing Office at 9 o'clock p. m. of that day by the enrolling clerk of the Senate, who requested that proof be sent him on the following morning. Proof was delivered to him on the following morning (Friday) at 9.20 o'clock. Meanwhile the enrolling clerk of the Senate was engaged until after midnight in compiling his full copy of the engrossed amendments. Upon receipt of the aforesaid partial proof, the enrolling clerk of the Senate completed his comparison of the proof with the copy and returned corrected proof to the Printing Office containing the Senate floor amendments to the bill (about twenty in all), at 10 a. m. of the same morning (Friday). Proof of this latter copy was returned to the Senate by the Government Printing Office at 11.30 a. m. for proper verification and necessary correction.

In this shape the bill was messaged over to the House some time after noon. This official copy for the numbered amendments, which is the form in which the measure is printed for the use of the conferees, and which is prepared by the printing clerk of the House following the receipt by the House of the bill from the Senate with the engrossed amendments, was received at the Government Printing Office at 2.35 p. m., same day, and the completed bill delivered at the Capitol at 3.25 p. m., or within fifty minutes' time.

The Government Printing Office anticipated the action on this bill and, without waiting for the official copy, sent seven forms to press before the official copy reached the Printing Office. The other five forms were either on the press or on the way down to the press when copy was received, and fifty minutes after the receipt of copy by the Printing Office the print desired by the conferees was sent back to Congress. The bill contained 96 pages and 95 amendments. The enrolling clerk of the Senate, in his testimony, asserts that had the proper clerk of the House sent to the Printing Office earlier in the day the conferees might have received the desired print an hour earlier than they actually did receive it.

The testimony of the enrolling clerk of the Senate on this point is as follows:

"Mr. HOWE. Now, the print of the bill that Senator HALE wanted to use in conference of course could not have been supplied to him before it was messaged to the House and enrolled by the House?

"Mr. PLATT. Yes; it could have been, because the man who makes up the bills with the Senate amendments numbered could have gone to the Printing Office, which we have done time and time again, and have made out his amendments there, and then they probably would have received that bill at the House some little time earlier than they did receive it.

"Mr. HOWE. And you think the conferees would have gotten that print more quickly if some attaché of the House had taken the trouble to go and get an advance copy?

"Mr. PLATT. Yes. I telephoned to that gentleman, I think, in the morning, that I had the amendments ready and had sent them back to the Printing Office, and I presumed that he would go down there, because the night before he asked me if he went down there if it would do any good on that night. * * * I think there may have possibly been an hour lost there, but I would not say that for sure; but I think there was some little time lost there."

With regard to the public buildings bill, it should be stated at the outset that the procedure employed in the handling of supply bills was followed in the consideration of that measure. The bill passed the House on the Monday before adjournment, June 25, was messaged to the Senate Tuesday morning and referred to the Senate Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, which committee met on Wednesday, its regular meeting day, to take it up. The committee completed its consideration of the measure Wednesday night and reported the same to the Senate Thursday morning with approximately one hundred and sixty-seven amendments.

As the measure was not privileged, its consideration by the Senate during the day (Thursday) was considerably obstructed, and it was not finally passed until late Thursday night. It was messaged to the House Friday morning. The House promptly disagreed to the amendments of the Senate and asked for a conference, to which the Senate assented, and the conferees met at 3 o'clock, remaining in session until 10 o'clock that night (Friday), at which time they reached a partial agreement. The action of the Senate on this fractional conference report was prompt, but the House, owing to a parliamentary situation, did not act until 12 o'clock midnight.

From fourteen to twenty items remained in disagreement, as to which the House asked for a second conference, to which the Senate agreed, which conference was held at 10 o'clock Saturday morning. It was at this point that suggestions of delay were made. It is doubtless true, and the testimony will show, that if the conferees had met after midnight Friday, instead of at 10 o'clock Saturday morning, two hours might have been saved and the final adjournment of Congress advanced to that extent; but the testimony additionally shows that the conferees had been for the two preceding nights engaged in the discharge of Congressional duty until after midnight and were too greatly exhausted to confer on this bill on the night of Friday.

After the final agreement of the conferees on Saturday morning at 10.30 o'clock, the clerks of the conference committee were obliged to draft the conference report. This work consumed two hours and a half. It was exacting work, involving the maximum of accuracy. Testimony shows that the clerks of the conference committee were subjected to some interruption by Members of Congress during the progress of their compilation of the conference report, while the final check of the report with the committee's data, which was deemed necessary in the interest of absolute accuracy, made by the two committee clerks with Senator WARREN and Representative BARTHOLDT, consumed from a half to three-quarters of an hour.

Some time after the completion of the work of the clerks of the conference committee the report was submitted to the House—approximately at 1.45 p. m. A well-defined rumor tended to show that delay in the submission of the final conference report to the House, between the moment of agreement by the conferees at 10.30 a. m. and the moment of the submission of the conference report to the House at approximately 1.45 p. m., was occasioned by a confusion in the minds of those officials of the House who define the parliamentary procedure of that body as to the right of the House to first submit this second conference report, the impression prevailing that the report should first be submitted to the Senate.

This confusion appeared to have resulted in each House waiting some time for the other House to act. The written testimony of General Parkinson, the reading clerk of the Senate, whose duties carried him to the House at this time, will show that upward of an hour was lost as a result of this confusion. On this point General Parkinson testifies as follows:

"The House authorities labored under erroneous impression that the Senate conferees should submit their report first. At the suggestion of Mr. McDonald and Mr. Platt, made in the presence and with the acquiescence of, I think, Senator HALE or some other excellent authority on the matter of conference reports, I told the House people at least twice that the Senate was waiting for the House conferees to make their report first, which they finally did, but after a wait and delay of an hour or more."

After the submission in the House of the conference report, however, the same was promptly messaged to the Senate and, with equal promptness, agreed to by that body and then entered the hands of the enrolling clerk of the House, from which he proceeded to prepare the copy for the official parchment proof. It is shown in the testimony that this copy reached the Government Printing Office at 4 o'clock p. m., Saturday, June 30, and the printed copy (proof) delivered to the Capitol, signed for by W. J. Browning, at 5.35 p. m. It should be stated that the bill contained twenty pages and approximately one hundred and sixty-seven amendments.

The enrolling force of the House, it is assumed, proceeded to read this proof and found errors therein requiring correction. Testimony shows that there were nine pages requiring to be reprinted, on two of which were errors attributable to the Government Printing Office and on seven of which were errors attributable to the enrolling officer of the House. These pages were returned to the Printing Office singly for reprinting as fast as errors were discovered. The first page reached the Printing Office at 6.16 p. m.

The last one was returned to the Capitol at 7.37 p. m. It should not be assumed that these errors operated to delay the work of Congress, for the reason that the act of reprinting the corrected pages was performed with such celerity by the Government Printing Office that the last corrected page, numbered 15, had been returned by the Government Printing Office before the enrolling clerk of the House had completed the reading of the last five pages of the bill; hence when the enrolling clerk had finally completed his comparison of the bill all errors had been rectified and a corrected print was in his possession.

It will be interesting to note that in respect of one page returned to the Government Printing Office a second time for correction of an error discovered later, for which the Capitol was responsible, the Printing Office completed the work of reprinting in exactly eight minutes. This final correction was made in the neighborhood of 9 p. m., after which the bill had to be compared by the Committee on Enrolled Bills before being signed by the Speaker of the House, the President of the Senate, and the President of the United States.

From the foregoing description of the handling of these two measures, necessarily lengthy and involved, the following facts and conditions prominently appear:

As to the work of the Government Printing Office, testimony shows that the bill force is composed of experienced men, its personnel being the same as it has been for years. Congressional work is invariably given the preference over all other work. The amount of work performed by the Office during the first session of the Fifty-ninth Congress exceeded by approximately three times the amount of work performed at the preceding long session and exceeded approximately by 5 per cent the amount of work performed during all three sessions of the Fifty-eighth Congress. A table appearing on page 27 of the testimony gives the details of this work. The bill force of the Printing Office during the last session of Congress was smaller by seven men than during the previous Congress.

The amount of time consumed by the Printing Office in the handling of the two measures around which criticism centered seems to have been not unreasonable, but rather positively expeditious. Allegations of witnesses as to delays on the part of the Printing Office have been investigated as carefully as practicable, and have been found to be too general to merit censure. In fact, they are in the main trivial and in some cases react upon those making them. The enrolling clerk of the House and the enrolling clerk of the Senate, whose duties bring them into close relationship with the work of the Printing Office, and who would be probably greater sufferers than any others through delinquencies on the part of the Printing Office, pronounce the work of the Government Printing Office during the closing days of the last session as being essentially good. Mr. McKenney, the enrolling clerk of the House, thus characterizes the work of the Government Printing Office and, incidentally, his own:

"The public buildings bill reached me about 2.30 p. m., June 30, I think, but I paid no attention to time, and it may have been an hour before or an hour later. The bill was given immediate attention, and it was sent to the Printing Office as soon as possible, was returned to me for comparison with the original papers without unnecessary delay. Corrections were made on some sheets, which were sent to the Printing Office and corrected sheets returned to me.

"When I had completed reading the bill, every sheet sent to the Printing Office for correction had been returned; thus showing the efficiency and promptness of the bill and messenger forces of the Printing Office. The bill was then turned over to the Committee on Enrolled Bills for comparison. As every word, punctuation mark, and even capital letters are read aloud in comparison, much time is of necessity consumed, especially in reading the large sheets of parchment, each equal to two sheets of an engrossed bill. Then came the bill for engrossment and enrollment authorizing the expenditure of money for various public buildings, which went through the same process as every bill does in engrossment and enrollment. There was no unnecessary delay with either of these bills, the deficiency bill, or other bills, at any time during the session of the Fifty-ninth Congress to cause censure or even unfavorable comment so far as the Printing Office is concerned with my work. * * * Personally, I was nearly worn-out. The forty-eight hours preceding adjournment I did not have one minute's sleep, did not have one mouthful to eat from one breakfast until another, and I think the Printing Office force suffered an equally strenuous time. They are heroes, every one of them."

Mr. Platt, the enrolling clerk of the Senate, thus characterizes the work of the Printing Office when asked to state whether, as a result of his experience in dealing with the Printing Office, he could allege reasonable alacrity on the part of the office:

"Yes. I have not any hesitation in saying that I think the Printing Office, on the whole, is very expeditious, and, as a general thing, very correct. There is occasionally a short delay sometimes, when we think there ought not to be, and there may be a little fault to find in the proof reading sometimes, but those things will happen in the best-regulated families. You can not help it. I have never lost anything on account of delay in the Printing Office since we commenced to enroll bills by printing; never. I have always found that the Printing Office has been, I think, equal to the emergency."

From the practice of anticipation by the Government Printing Office of the work of Congress much good has been shown to result. If the Printing Office were to wait for the receipt of copy from the Capitol before setting up bill matter the work of Congress would be greatly prolonged. An illustration of the utility of this practice is shown in the handling of the supplemental bill, H. R. 20511, making appropriations for certain public buildings authorized by the act approved June 30, 1906, etc., which act after being messaged to the Senate was passed at 6.17 p. m. on Saturday, June 30.

The Printing Office realizing that the Senate would in all probability pass the measure in the same form in which it passed the House, proceeded to print the enrolled copy and sent the same to the Senate at 5.49 p. m., or an hour and eight minutes before the Senate had acted upon the measure. This, of course, could only be possible in respect of a measure which the Senate would in all probability pass without amendment.

Nothing has been developed in the course of this investigation which would justify a conclusion that the present administration of the Government Printing Office is not distinctly creditable.

As to the performances of the enrolling offices of Congress, it can be safely asserted, without fear of contradiction, that considering the magnitude and complexity of their work it was performed with all possible expedition consistent with exactness. The testimony would tend to show that the enrolling force of the House, upon which the bulk of the work of enrollment falls, is undermanned, and that a proper increase in that force would be promotive of greater celerity in the performance of work devolving upon that office.

Attention is respectfully called to the fact that in the transmission of copy, proofs, and other printed matter between the Capitol and the Government Printing Office and in some instances between the Government Printing Office and the Executive Departments, the messenger force of the Government Printing Office is largely availed of. This force consists of a maximum of six bicycle messengers—usually four. Congress should not be dependent upon this mesenger force, reliable and efficient as it has been shown to be, but should have messengers attached to its enrolling offices, especially during the closing days of the sessions of Congress, when the congestion of public business is great. Moreover, the efficiency of the messenger force of the Government Printing Office should not be depleted by the calls of the Executive Departments.

I venture the opinion that the inauguration of a time-record system which would show the precise time of receipt and delivery of copy, proof, etc., both at the Capitol and the Government Printing Office, would, by the facility it might afford in fixing responsibility for delays, tend to maximum efficiency in work and preclude much irresponsible criticism. Congress should at least be as well equipped for the proper and precise conduct of its business as a commercial institution. It is safe to assume that no commercial institution would for one moment tolerate methods as irresponsible as those which now obtain in the handling of Congressional bill work.

It may be remarked, in conclusion, that during the closing days of the first session of the Fifty-ninth Congress there was an unusual congestion of important legislation, which may have to a degree, though not unnecessarily, retarded the completion of the work of Congress.

Very respectfully,

A. H. HOWE.

APPEALS IN CRIMINAL PROSECUTIONS.

JAPANESE IN SAN FRANCISCO PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

Mr. FLINT. I submit a resolution and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Department of Commerce and Labor be, and he is hereby, directed to furnish the Senate copies of all official letters, telegrams, reports, etc., filed in the Department of Commerce and Labor in connection with the investigation of the matter of Japanese attending the public schools in the city of San Francisco, Cal., if not incompatible with the public interests.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution just read?

Mr. SPOONER. Let it be again read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. At the request of the Senator from Wisconsin the resolution will be again read.

The resolution was again read; and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

RELIEF WORK AT SAN FRANCISCO.

Mr. FLINT submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

PANAMA RAILROAD.

Mr. PETTUS. For my colleague [Mr. MORGAN] I submit a resolution. I ask that it be read and lie over, and I give notice that my colleague desires to speak to the resolution to-morrow.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Interoceanic Canals is directed to inquire and report, by bill or otherwise, whether any or what action of Congress is necessary to bring the alleged corporation of the Panama Railroad within the direct control of the Isthmian Canal Commission or of the Government of the United States.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. At the request of the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS] the resolution offered by him on behalf of his colleague [Mr. MORGAN] will lie over and be printed.

DISMISSAL OF THREE COMPANIES OF TWENTY-FIFTH INFANTRY.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, there are a great many nominations before the committees, and I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. FORAKER. If the Senator will withhold that motion for a moment, I want to call up a resolution which I offered a few days ago calling for some facts which I should be glad to have brought to the notice of the Senate.

Mr. HALE. I will waive the motion for the present.

Mr. FORAKER. The resolution to which I refer went over under the rule. I ask that it be laid before the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution as requested by the Senator from Ohio. It will be read by the Secretary.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. PENROSE on the 3d instant, as follows:

Resolved, That the President be requested to communicate to the Senate, if not incompatible with the public interests, full information bearing upon the recent order dismissing from the military service of the United States three companies of the Twenty-fifth Regiment of Infantry, United States troops (colored).

The VICE-PRESIDENT. To this resolution the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] has proposed an amendment in the nature of a substitute, which will be read by the Secretary.

The Secretary read the proposed substitute of Mr. FORAKER, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to furnish the Senate copies of all official letters, telegrams, reports, orders, and so forth, filed in the War Department in connection with the recent discharge of the enlisted men of Companies B, C, and D, Twenty-fifth United States Infantry, together with a complete list of the men discharged, showing the record of each, the amount of retained pay (under section 1281 and following sections of the Compiled Statutes, vol. 1, p. 912, edition of 1901), if any, to the credit of each man at the time of his discharge; the ruling of the War Department, if any has been made in this or any other similar case, as to the effect upon his right to such retained pay, and also the ruling of the War Department, if any has been made in this or any similar case, as to the effect of such discharge upon the right of an enlisted man to retire on three-fourths pay, with an allowance for subsistence and clothing (under section 1260 and following sections of the Compiled Statutes, vol. 1, p. 890, edition of 1901), and his right to enter a National Soldiers' Home (under section 4821 and following sections of the Compiled Statutes, vol. 3, p. 3332, edition of 1901); his right to be buried in a national cemetery (under section 4878 and following sections of the Compiled Statutes, vol. 3, p. 3378, edition of 1901), and his right to receive transportation and subsistence from place of discharge to his home (as provided for in section 1290 and following sections of the Compiled Statutes, vol. 1, p. 916, edition of 1901); also a complete official record of the Twenty-fifth Regiment, United States Infantry, from the time of its muster in to the date of the discharge of Companies B, C, and D.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I desire to amend the resolution as I offered it by inserting in line 6, on page 1, after the word "infantry," the words "including the form of discharge."

I now observe that the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], who offered resolution No. 180, is not in the Chamber. I do not like to take up the matter for consideration in his absence so far as his own resolution is concerned, but if there be no objection, I will modify my resolution so as to offer it as an independent resolution by itself. I ask consideration for it, if there be no objection to that modification.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Ohio asks unanimous consent that his proposed amendment to the resolution of the Senator from Pennsylvania may be offered as an independent resolution, and that it may be considered. Is there objection?

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Ohio a question. As the Senator has remarked, the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] is absent. I should like to offer a substitute which will substantially cover the matter contained in both the others. It in fact embodies both of them in one resolution, and takes in the resolution of the Senator from Ohio exactly as it now reads, excepting that it calls on the President for all the information instead of having two resolutions, one directed to the President and the other to the Secretary of War.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, to that I am opposed. I do not care to call upon the President about the matter. I do not feel disposed to bother him any further. All I want is certain specific information, which is on file in the War Department, in the custody of the Secretary of War, and I specify what it is we want. We want all of it, and we want it without regard to whether somebody might think it was incompatible with the public interest or not.

I have no objection to the resolution which has been offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania being adopted. It calls upon the President for any information he may see fit to give or for any communication he may desire to make to the Senate. The resolution I have offered is entirely impersonal in every sense of the word. It calls for nothing except facts—facts that are essential to the proper consideration of the questions that may arise in connection with this matter, questions which I think all Senators here realize are likely to be to a greater or less degree discussed in the Chamber at an early date.

There is no reason why there should be any calling upon the President for the information that I have asked for. If the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] wants to offer his resolution as a substitute for the resolution of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], I do not object to that, but I do not want to have my own resolution disposed of in that manner.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. LODGE. I beg pardon. I thought the Senator was through.

Mr. FORAKER. I yield.

Mr. LODGE. I do not desire to interrupt the Senator.

Mr. FORAKER. Not at all.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator from Pennsylvania is, I know, very anxious for the consideration of his resolution, which was the first one offered; and I do not think it would be quite fair to him in his absence to set that resolution aside without action. My own opinion is that that resolution is the most desirable one to pass. It is one calling upon the President for information.

I am also in favor of the resolution offered by the Senator from Ohio. The only suggestion I desired to make was that, in the absence of the Senator from Pennsylvania, I think it would be a little more considerate to him not to put his resolution aside and adopt another on the same subject.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I do not desire to put that resolution aside. I have no objection to any Senator here asking for the consideration of that resolution, but I do not myself feel at liberty to make such a request. I do feel at liberty, however, to present and urge my own resolution, and if the Senator from Pennsylvania shall desire to press his resolution, there is no conflict between what he calls for and what I call for. I do not know exactly what his purpose may have been or what his idea generally about the subject may be; but I do know that I have not asked for any information except that which is absolutely essential, which we ought to be furnished with, and which, no doubt the War Department will be able to furnish us without any trouble or without any particular delay. Therefore I ask again, there being, as I understand, no objection to the modification of my resolution which I have suggested, that it may now be considered on its merits.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, if we are to consider these resolutions, and they are not to be allowed to go over in the absence of the Senator from Pennsylvania, I hope they will be considered in the order in which they were offered and that we may have an opportunity of voting first on the resolution of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will again put the request of the Senator from Ohio. The Senator from Ohio asks unanimous consent that his proposed amendment may be offered as an original resolution and be now considered. Is there objection to the request?

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President, inasmuch as the parliamentary status of the resolution has been changed, in the absence of my colleague I ask that it may go over.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I do not understand that it must go over. I did not offer any original resolution. I asked consent to modify my resolution, and that consent, I understood, was granted. I modified the resolution I offered by offering it as an original one instead of as a substitute. I do not want to interfere with the resolution offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania, but I do want the consideration of my own resolution.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio allow me?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. I was going to suggest to the Senator, inasmuch as the Committee on Military Affairs will have a meeting this afternoon or to-morrow, that both the resolutions be referred to that committee.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, it is not usual to refer to a committee a resolution that simply calls for data and documents that are in the custody of a Department of the Government, and I do not see what could be gained by considering in committee whether we would ask for the names of these men, the form of their discharge, the causes of it, and the other data that I have called for. So I hope the resolution may be now considered.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, changing the resolution from an amendment to the original resolution offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] to an original resolution and offering it as an original resolution is offering it in a new form, and therefore an objection that carries it over one day, it seems to me, clearly lies.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is of the opinion——

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, the Chair will remember that I asked unanimous consent to modify my resolution in that respect, so that I might offer it independently and not as a substitute. I did that out of deference to the Senator from Pennsylvania, with whose resolution I did not want to interfere in the slightest, he not being here. I did not want to further delay. I understand that it is within the rules of the Senate for a Senator to modify a resolution offered by himself whether there be objection or not; that that is the right of a Senator offering a resolution; but I was careful to ask consent, which I understood was granted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is of the opinion that the offering of a pending amendment to a resolution as an independent resolution changes its parliamentary status, and that it would, under objection, have to lie over one day.

Mr. FORAKER. But it would not if——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Not if unanimous consent is given for its consideration. The Chair asked if there was objection; objection has been made. The Chair will again put the request. Is there objection?

Mr. FORAKER. The Chair will allow me, before putting the request, to remind him that the statement I made was that I would make that modification if there was no objection; but if there should be objection, then I would leave it as it is.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that to have been the effect of the statement of the Senator from Ohio. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President, I rise for the purpose of making an objection.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Pennsylvania objects.

Mr. WARREN. If I am in order, Mr. President——

Mr. FORAKER. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. WARREN. Certainly.

Mr. FORAKER. I understood consent was given, and then I offered the amendment which had been accepted, as I understood.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair put the request of the Senator from Ohio, and understood that objection was made.

Mr. FORAKER. Very well. What I inquired about is not, however, on that point. My inquiry was as to whether my amendment to this resolution has been adopted or not. If not, I will ask unanimous consent that I may modify the resolution in the respect I have suggested.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Ohio has the right to modify his amendment as he sees fit. The Secretary will state the modification proposed by the Senator from Ohio.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, line 6, after the words "United States Infantry," insert "including the form of discharge."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The modification is made.

Mr. FORAKER. Now, I move that resolution No. 181 offered by me as a substitute for resolution No. 180—I do not offer this now originally in view of the objection, but I offer it as a substitute, as originally offered—and move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate resolution No. 181 as a substitute for Senate resolution No. 180.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President——

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, Senators sitting around me rightfully suggest that this is the proper business before the Senate, and that it is not necessary to make a motion to proceed to its consideration. So I insist upon the consideration of my amendment as a substitute for resolution No. 180.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is within the Senator's right.

Mr. CULBERSON. I wish to offer an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. WARREN. Well, Mr. President, I have offered a substitute to take the place of the two resolutions which have been offered.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator said that he would like to offer a substitute, but, as the Chair understands, he did not offer it. The Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] thereafter rose and was recognized.

Mr. WARREN. I sent my substitute to the desk, and it was returned to me. That was as far as I was able to get with it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair was not aware of that fact. The Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] offers an amendment to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER], which will be read.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, it is proposed to add to the amendment of the Senator from Ohio the language contained in the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment proposed by the Senator from Texas.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the proposed amendment of Mr. FORAKER it is proposed to add the following:

> The Secretary of War is also directed to send to the Senate a copy of the order issued to Maj. C. W. Penrose, Twenty-fifth United States Infantry, directing him not to deliver to the civil authorities of Texas certain men of his command charged with assault to murder and murder, at Brownsville, Tex., August 13, 1906, and referred to by Major Penrose in his letter of August 24, 1906, to Capt. W. J. McDonald, of the Texas rangers.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, if I have the power to do so, I will accept the amendment.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I shall vote for the resolution and the substitute offered by the Senator from Ohio, but I hope the Senator from Ohio will allow this matter to go over until to-morrow. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], who first brought this subject to the attention of the Senate, is absent, and I have never known a resolution to be taken up in the absence of the Senator who introduced it, especially where it was made apparent to the Senate by a statement from his colleague that that course would be objectionable to him.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me to interrupt him, I am very much obliged to him for making the suggestion he has made. I was pressing the matter under the impression I had received from statements made by Senators who were speaking to me about it, not from the floor, but from their chairs, that it was all right, so far as the Senator who was absent is concerned, to press the matter at this time. If, however, there is any objection—and I did not know that the objection of the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] to the consideration of this matter was the absence of his colleague——

Mr. SPOONER. It was practically that.

Mr. FORAKER. I would have so understood it doubtless if I had not been misled by other Senators. Of course, under the circumstances, I shall not ask that the subject be considered in the absence of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will lie over.

Mr. GALLINGER. Retaining its place.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair understands the Senator from Ohio to accept the amendment proposed to his amendment by the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON].

Mr. FORAKER. Yes; I have no objection to that amendment; but before this matter goes over I should like to have some understanding as to when the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] is to be here. I was told when I acquiesced in the suggestion of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] that the Senator from Pennsylvania would be here to-morrow, but I am now told that his absence will be indefinite. I do not want to indefinitely postpone the matter. Is there any Senator who can inform us when the Senator from Pennsylvania will return?

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the Senator from Pennsylvania informed me before he left yesterday that he would return some time to-day. I think the request made by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] is a very natural one.

Mr. FORAKER. I think so, too.

Mr. WARREN. I do not think that the Senator from Pennsylvania would like to have this resolution passed without the other; and so they should both go over.

Mr. FORAKER. I have no objection to that, with the understanding that the Senator from Pennsylvania is expected to return at a reasonably early date—to-morrow or next day, or in the course of the week.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] will be stated.

Mr. WARREN. That is in the nature of a substitute which will cover all the other matter pertaining to the same subject. I desire to say to the Senator from Ohio, if I can have his attention, that it includes the subject-matter of all the resolutions.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wyoming desire that his proposed substitute be read?

Mr. WARREN. Yes; let it be read and printed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the Senator from Wyoming will be read.

Mr. FORAKER. If it be necessary, I want to make a request that the resolution retain its place on the table.

Mr. HALE. That is not needed, if the Senator will allow me. On yesterday, at his request, the whole subject was left upon the table, to be called up for consideration at any time, instead of going to the Calendar. There is no need of any further request.

Mr. FORAKER. I did not think so——

Mr. HALE. It has every privilege now.

Mr. FORAKER. But some brother Senators suggested to me to make the request.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] proposes a substitute, which will be read by the Secretary.

The Secretary read the proposed substitute, as follows:

Resolved, That the President be requested to communicate to the Senate, if not incompatible with the public interests, full information bearing upon the recent order dismissing from the military service of the United States three companies of the Twenty-fifth Regiment of Infantry, United States troops (colored), together with copies of all official letters, telegrams, reports, orders, etc., filed in the War Department in connection with the recent discharge of the enlisted men of Companies B, C, and D, Twenty-fifth United States Infantry, including the form of discharge, together with a complete list of the men discharged, showing the record of each, the amount of retained pay (under section 1281 and following sections of the Compiled Statutes, vol. 1, p. 912, edition of 1901), if any, to the credit of each man at the time of his discharge; the ruling of the War Department, if any has been made in this or any other similar case, as to the effect upon his right to such retained pay, and also the ruling of the War Department, if any has been made in this or any similar case, as to the effect of such discharge upon the right of an enlisted man to retire on three-fourths pay, with an allowance for subsistence and clothing (under section 1260 and following sections of the Compiled Statutes, vol. 1, p. 890, edition of 1901), and his right to enter a National Soldiers' Home (under section 4821 and following sections of the Compiled Statutes, vol. 3, p. 3332, edition of 1901), his right to be buried in a national cemetery (under section 4878 and following sections of the Compiled Statutes, vol. 3, p. 3378, edition of 1901), and his right to receive transportation and subsistence from place of discharge to his home, as provided for in section 1290 and following sections of the Compiled Statutes, volume 1, page 916, edition of 1901; also a complete official record of the Twenty-fifth Regiment United States Infantry from the time of its muster in to the date of the discharge of Companies B, C, and D.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The proposed substitute will be printed and lie upon the table.

TREATMENT OF CRIMINALS BY PROBATION.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith for the consideration of the Congress a communication from Judge William H. De Lacey setting forth some reasons why the more modern treatment of criminals by probation, so successfully tried in several of the States, should be adopted into the Federal procedure, together with a supplemental paper on the subject of child labor, to which I invite your especial attention.

ANNUAL REPORT OF THE CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith for the consideration of the Congress the Twenty-third Annual Report of the United States Civil Service Commission.

CONTROL OF YELLOW FEVER.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Public Health and National Quarantine, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

The inclosed papers are transmitted to the Congress in the earnest hope that it will take suitable action in the matter. Major Reed's part in the experiments which resulted in teaching us how to cope with yellow fever was such as to render mankind his debtor; and this nation should in some proper fashion bear witness to this fact.

CHURCH CLAIMS IN THE PHILIPPINES.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on the Philippines, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I herewith submit to the Congress the report of the Secretary of War and of the Judge-Advocate-General in reference to the claims presented by the representatives of the Roman Catholic Church for amounts due from the United States to the various Roman Catholic churches in the islands for use and occupation by troops of the United States, and for damages during such occupation. I cordially indorse all that is said in these reports, and earnestly hope that the amount recommended by the board will be immediately appropriated, in order to do what is really an act of substantial justice to the Roman Catholic churches of the Philippines, in accordance with the suggestion of the Secretary of War. It is not only a matter of equity that we should pay this sum, but for the reasons set forth by the Secretary of War it is very greatly to the interest of the people of the Philippine Islands that it should be paid. I have accordingly approved the action of the Secretary of War in directing that the same board be reconvened, or another convened, to report on the advisability of paying additional sums to the Roman Catholic churches in the islands, in view of the damages inflicted upon them by reason of the war and by the insurrectos. I feel that this is peculiarly a case where, in the interest of the Philippine people themselves, it would be wise for the Congress to exercise a large liberality.

DISMISSALS FROM THE NAVY.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I feel it my duty to call your attention to the facts that, under the provisions of articles 36 and 37 of the Articles for the Government of the Navy, the President has no longer the authority to dismiss an officer of the Navy in time of peace, unless in pursuance of a sentence of a general court-martial, and even in time of war his right of dismissal is practically subject to review by a court-martial, to be assembled within six months, if the accused officer demands this court. The articles in question are in the terms following:

"ART. 36. No officer shall be dismissed from the naval service except by the order of the President or by sentence of a general court-martial; and in time of peace no officer shall be dismissed except in pursuance of the sentence of a general court-martial or in mitigation thereof.

"ART. 37. When any officer dismissed by order of the President since March 3, 1865, makes, in writing, an application for trial, setting forth, under oath, that he has been wrongfully dismissed, the President shall, as soon as the necessities of the service may permit, convene a court-martial to try such officer on the charges on which he shall have been dismissed. And if such court-martial shall not be convened within six months from the presentation of such application for trial, or if such court, being convened, shall not award dismissal or death as the punishment of such officer, the order of dismissal by the President shall be void."

This condition of the law was called to my attention by a recent painful and humiliating incident. On May 9, 1905, an officer of the Navy was accused of behavior so indecent and disgusting as to show clearly his unfitness (if guilty, as charged) to hold a commission or associate with officers and gentlemen. The nature of the alleged misconduct and the lack of compulsory power in naval courts to enforce the attendance of civilian witnesses, as well as the locality where the offense was said to have been committed, caused a long and very unfortunate, although quite unavoidable, delay in his trial by court-martial, which did not occur until January 18, 1906. He was then convicted, but the court, while imposing a severe penalty, to my surprise as well as that of the Navy Department, did not sentence the offender to dismissal from the service. The failure of the court to rid the Navy of one so clearly unfit to form a part of it was commented upon in appropriate terms by the Department, but it was then and has been since a source of profound regret to me that the law, as above set forth, made it impractical for me to afford a remedy for this failure. Moreover, it is to be remembered that, owing to the inability of naval courts, as above explained, to compel the attendance of civilian witnesses, and the further fact that they have no authority to receive as evidence the depositions of absent witnesses, while the exigencies of the service may often cause officers and men cognizant of the facts to be employed in distant places at the time of the trial, there is great danger lest offenses of the nature charged against this man should go altogether unpunished. In this case it was found very difficult to overcome the natural reluctance of some of the witnesses to attend and testify.

I am convinced that the President should have the authority, upon his own initiative and responsibility, to dismiss any officer whom he thinks unworthy to remain in the service. I think there is no danger that this power would be abused, and if such danger exists at all it is so slight as to be altogether outweighed by the considerations of public policy which require this authority to be vested in the constitutional Commander in Chief of the Navy. I therefore strongly recommend that article 36, as hereinbefore given, be amended by omitting all of it after the words "general court-martial" where these words first occur therein, and that article 37 be repealed.

W. Morgan Shuster, of the District of Columbia, to which office he was appointed during the recess of the Senate, vice James F. Smith, appointed governor-general of the Philippine Islands.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, December 5, 1906.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

PAUL D. PORTER.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That during the balance of the Fifty-ninth Congress and until the organization of the Sixtieth Congress, Paul D. Porter be authorized to act as special employee of the House of Representatives, and receive compensation at the rate of $1,500 per annum. Said officer shall at all times be under the direction and control of the Speaker of the House, and shall be subject to removal by him for cause at all times.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Texas a question. This is to fill a place that has become vacant during the recess?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. It is to fill a vacancy caused by the death of Isaac R. Hill.

Mr. PAYNE. Is the compensation the same as that paid to Colonel Hill?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. The compensation is identically the same.

Mr. PAYNE. There is no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

CALL OF COMMITTEES.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the first committee on the Calendar.

The Clerk called the Committee on Naval Affairs.

VOLUNTEER NAVAL OFFICERS IN THE CIVIL WAR.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 3814) for the relief of acting (volunteer) officers of the United States Navy in the civil war.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois calls up the bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas the acting (volunteer) officers of the United States Navy who served during the civil war have never received proper recognition from the people of the United States for the valuable services then rendered, and it is fitting that the same should be made by Congress; and

Whereas the said acting (volunteer) officers never received any commission from the President, but only received an acting order, written on very common paper and signed by the Secretary of the Navy, while all Volunteer Army officers serving during said war received a regular commission, signed either by the President of the United States or by the governor of the State from which they volunteered, and thereby have some tangible evidences of their services to hand down to their decendants: Therefore,

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That all acting (volunteer) officers who served in the United States Navy during the civil war for one year or more, and were honorably discharged as such, shall, upon written application made by them to the Secretary of the Navy, receive a commission signed by the President of the United States, specifying why the commission is granted: Provided, That said commission shall not entitle the grantee to any back, present, or future pay.

SEC. 2. That as a further recognition of the services rendered by the acting (volunteer) officers the said commission shall be made out two grades higher than the grade held by them at the time of discharge from the United States Navy for all acting (volunteer) Navy officers who served three years or more and who were in command of a United States vessel at least one year, and one grade higher than grade at time of discharge for all other acting (volunteer) officers who served at least one year.

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized and directed to take the necessary action for the prompt and proper carrying into effect this law, and shall keep on file in the Navy Department a list of applicants and of commissions granted.

SEC. 4. That the necessary expense of said commissions shall be paid out of the general appropriation for the United States Navy.

SEC. 5. That this act shall take effect immediately.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that this bill makes a charge upon the Treasury and is not properly on the House Calendar, but ought to go on the Union Calendar, and can not be considered at this time.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, this bill does not contemplate any appropriation out of the Federal Treasury. It provides for giving the acting naval volunteer officers of the civil war a commission from the President, the same as the Army volunteer officers received. The acting officers in the volunteer service of the Navy during the civil war were appointed by order of the Secretary and were not commissioned by the President. If the Chair will notice, it is provided in the first section of this bill, "That said commission shall not entitle the grantee to any back, present, or future pay." It is simply a recognition given to the acting volunteer officers of the Navy in the way of a commission to them, the same as was received by the Army volunteer officers.

Mr. PAYNE. I want to say to the gentleman that section 4 expressly provides that the necessary expense of that commission shall be paid out of the general appropriation for the United States Navy, which shows that there is a provision in the bill.

Mr. FOSS. I thought that the gentleman alluded to the question of pay. Now, so far as the granting of these commissions is concerned, of course it will cost a very little, just the cost of the parchment. That is all.

Mr. TAWNEY. How many officers are there?

Mr. FOSS. There are very few of them left now, as it has been so many years since the civil war.

Mr. TAWNEY. Can the gentleman approximately state the number?

Mr. FOSS. No; I can not approximately state it, but all the cost of this is simply the cost of the parchment.

Mr. TAWNEY. Are there 5,000 or 10,000?

Mr. FOSS. A good deal less than that, I should say to the gentleman.

Mr. TAWNEY. It would involve some clerical service also?

Mr. FOSS. It will involve no more than the clerical service in the Department.

Mr. TAWNEY. To the extent that any expense connected with it would be a charge on the Treasury, and therefore contrary to the rules of the House, and therefore the bill should go to the Union Calendar.

Mr. DALZELL. Will this come out of an appropriation already made?

Mr. FOSS. Yes.

Mr. DALZELL. It is not an increase in appropriation?

Mr. FOSS. It is not an increase in appropriation.

Mr. PAYNE. It makes it a charge on the Treasury just the same, whether it makes it out of an appropriation already made, the balance of which will go back into the Treasury, or an appropriation to be made in the future.

Mr. FOSS. It is a very small matter, and it puts the Navy officers on the same basis as the Army officers. It is a bill introduced by Mr. RIXEY, of Virginia, and Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania made the report; and in their absence I call the matter up.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is prepared to rule. Clause 3 of Rule XXIII is as follows—the Chair will omit a portion of the rule and read all that is material:

All motions or propositions involving a tax or charge upon the people; * * * or authorizing payments out of appropriations already made, or releasing any liability to the United States for money or property, or referring any claim to the Court of Claims, shall be first considered in a Committee of the Whole, and a point of order under this rule shall be good at any time before the consideration of a bill has commenced.

The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, I would ask the gentleman's consent, in view of the decision of the Chair, to insert these words at the end of section 5:

And the actual cost of each commission shall be refunded by the recipient of the same.

Mr. PAYNE. That would not take it out of the rule.

Mr. FOSS. It would throw the cost, which would be but a few cents, upon each recipient of a commission.

Mr. PAYNE. Well, the gentleman can bring it up at some other time for unanimous consent. I will have to object now.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] objects, and the bill is referred to the Union Calendar.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES:

Sundry messages, in writing, from the President of the United States were communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. LATTA, one of his secretaries.

CERTIFIED CHECKS WITH PROPOSALS AND CONTRACTS FOR NAVAL SUPPLIES.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, I call up Senate bill 1804, and ask for the reading of the bill and report.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (S. 1804) providing for the use of certified checks to secure compliance with proposals and contracts for naval supplies.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy may, in his discretion, accept, in lieu of the written guaranty required to accompany a proposal for naval supplies, and in lieu of the bond required for the faithful performance of a contract for furnishing such supplies, a certified check, payable to the order of the Secretary of the Navy, for from 25 to 50 per cent of the amount of such proposal or contract, the check to be held by the Secretary of the Navy until the requirements of the proposal or contract shall be complied with and as a guaranty for compliance with the same.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, I yield the floor to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DAWSON], who reported this bill.

Mr. DAWSON. Mr. Speaker, I think the reading of the report on the bill would perhaps satisfy all Members. It is very short and very lucid.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks that the report be read in his time. The Clerk will read.

The report (by Mr. DAWSON) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1804) providing for the use of certified checks to secure compliance with proposals and contracts for naval supplies, have examined the same and report:

The report of the Committee on Naval Affairs of the Senate, hereto appended, is adopted and the passage of the bill is recommended.

The Senate report is as follows:

"The Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill S. 1804) providing for the use of certified checks to secure compliance with proposals and contracts for naval supplies, having considered the same, report thereon with a recommendation that it pass.

"The bill has the approval of the Navy Department, as will appear by the following communication:

"NAVY DEPARTMENT,
"Washington, December 6, 1905.

"SIR: By act approved May 25, 1896 (29 Stat. L., 135; 2 Supp., 474), the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to accept, in lieu of the written guaranty required to accompany a proposal for naval supplies and in lieu of the bond for the faithful performance of a contract, a certified check for the full amount of such proposal or contract. This statute, which has been in operation about nine years, has proved satisfactory in its application to contracts representing small amounts. In such cases bidders usually find it no hardship to deposit certified checks covering the full amounts of the contracts. With respect to the larger transactions, however, the reverse is true.

"It does not seem necessary or reasonable to require persons submitting proposals or entering into contracts involving large sums to comply with this requirement, and it is not to the advantage of the service, inasmuch as the Government doubtless indirectly pays interest upon the sums thus obligated and temporarily withdrawn from business activities.

"A certified check affords the Government practically as complete security as an individual or a corporation bond. It is recommended, therefore, that the Secretary of the Navy be authorized to accept such a certified check in amounts substantially the same as would be named in the guaranty or bond of a person offering or contracting to furnish naval supplies. It may be added that the guaranty accompanying a proposal need be no larger than is necessary to insure the acceptance of an award, and that with respect to the larger contracts the delivery of supplies and the performance of the work under them is, as a rule, necessarily extended over a considerable period of time, payments being made by installments as the contract is performed, and that therefore it is unnecessary that the Department should exact and hold such form of guaranty or surety in amounts more than 25 to 50 per cent of the proposal or the contract, respectively.

"The draft of a provision authorizing the use of certified checks in the manner hereinbefore outlined is inclosed, with the hope that it will receive favorable consideration by the committee.

"Very respectfully,

"CHARLES J. BONAPARTE,
"Secretary.

"Hon. EUGENE HALE,
"Chairman Committee on Naval Affairs,
"United States Senate."

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mr. DAWSON. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I would like to ask the gentleman to explain whether the certified check to be given would cover the entire amount of the contract?

Mr. DAWSON. Under the existing law that is the case; and as the Secretary set forth in his letter, in small contracts and in large contracts it is now required in the law. But it has proved unsatisfactory to require the deposit of a certified check covering the full amount of these large contracts, involving many thousands of dollars.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Let me see if I understand the purport of your bill. The present law requires a bond covering the entire amount of the contract.

Mr. DAWSON. Under the present law the Secretary is authorized to accept in lieu of a bond a certified check for the full amount.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Or else a certified check.

Mr. DAWSON. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. One of the two.

Mr. DAWSON. No. Under the present law—the act of May 25, 1896—the Secretary is authorized to accept in lieu a written guaranty of the company making the proposal, or, in lieu of the bond for the faithful performance of the contract, a certified check for the full amount.

Mr. WILLIAMS. In other words, under the existing law a man may give the guaranty required by law, the bond required by law, or a certified check for the entire amount. Now, you propose to change the existing law by enabling him to give in lieu of the guaranty or bond a certified check for the full contract price.

Mr. DAWSON. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. In other words, you propose to decrease the security given by the contractor to the Government?

Mr. DAWSON. No. The gentleman does not understand the purport of the bill. This bill proposes that the Secretary of the Navy be authorized to accept such certified checks in amounts substantially the same as would be named in the guaranty or bond; and the Secretary explains that a certified check is just as good security to the Government as the usual bond or guaranty—in fact, better.

Mr. WILLIAMS. No doubt about that. I believe that a certified check is better, because there are no sureties to beg off. But what I am trying to get at is this: Do you in this bill decrease the amount of security they give?

Mr. DAWSON. It gives the Secretary of the Navy discretion in large contracts to reduce the amount of the certified check to the amount that he would demand in the bond or guaranty. That is all there is in the bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But the amount in the certified check is not to be any less——

Mr. DAWSON. Than the amount of the bond.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Than the bond now required by law?

Mr. DAWSON. No, sir; and as the Secretary says where it is necessary to give a certified check for half a million on a contract, it withdraws that money from circulation, and the Government has undoubtedly to pay the interest in the long run.

Mr. LAWRENCE. The bond now required, is that always as large as the amount of the contract? Is the Secretary authorized to accept a bond smaller than the amount?

Mr. DAWSON. I think he is.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I understood your answer to the gentleman from Mississippi to be that the certified check has to be for an amount not less than the bond which the Secretary would require.

Mr. DAWSON. I will read to you what is stated by the Secretary of the Navy in his communication to the committee. He says:

It is recommended, therefore, that the Secretary of the Navy be authorized to accept such a certified check in amounts substantially the same as would be named in the guaranty or bond of the person offering or contracting to furnish naval supplies.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I would infer that the bond would be for the full amount of the contract.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question? I listened as closely as I possibly could to the reading of the bill and the reading of the report without obtaining any information on the bill, possibly because I could not hear it. I have listened to the colloquy between the gentleman from Mississippi and the gentleman from Iowa thus far without obtaining any information as to whether the existing law is to be changed under this bill. Now, will the gentleman tell us——

Mr. LAWRENCE. This is a matter of considerable importance, and I wish we could have a little better order. It is impossible to hear.

The SPEAKER. The House will be in order.

Mr. DAWSON. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that under the act of May 25, 1896, the Secretary of the Navy was authorized to accept a certified check for the full amount of a contract in lieu of the bond or the guaranty.

Mr. MANN. I will ask the gentleman what is the bond and what is the guaranty now provided by law? He proposes to substitute something in lieu of these, and nobody has yet told us what they are.

Mr. DAWSON. If the gentleman will allow me, I shall endeavor to explain the purport of the bill.

Mr. MANN. I thought the gentleman was yielding for a question. I am perfectly willing to give the gentleman an opportunity, and I will take my time later. If the gentleman does not want to answer the question——

Mr. DAWSON. I think if the gentleman will give me an opportunity, the question will be answered to his satisfaction before I get through.

Mr. MANN. I hope so.

Mr. DAWSON. By the act of May 25, 1896, the Secretary of the Navy was authorized to accept, in lieu of the written guaranty required to accompany a proposal for naval supplies and in lieu of the bond for the faithful performance of the same, a certified check for the full amount of the contract. Now, the Secretary has explained to us that this works very well in small contracts, but that the reverse is true in large contracts, involving hundreds of thousands of dollars, or half a million of dollars, to require the contractor to put up a certified check for the full amount of the contract. And so, where a contractor is required to put up a certified check, we will say for a half million dollar contract, that money is necessarily withdrawn from the channels of business, and in the end, undoubtedly, the Government indirectly has to pay the interest on it.

Mr. MANN rose.

Mr. DAWSON. Will the gentleman permit me to proceed for just a moment? He understands, of course, that in these large contracts the delivery of supplies and the performance of the work under them is as a rule necessarily extended over a considerable period of time, payments being made by installments as the contract is performed, and therefore it is unnecessary that the Department should exact and hold a guaranty or a surety in an amount of more than 25 to 50 per cent of the contract. The Government will be amply protected in its contracts, and it will simply facilitate the business of the Department.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DAWSON. With great pleasure.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman has not yet answered the question which has been propounded to him from several quarters of the House. There is no provision in the law of 1896 requiring a certified check to be put up at all. There is only a permission to put up a certified check in lieu of a guaranty or bond, which can still be put up in the case of large contracts. Now, will the gentleman inform us what is the law in reference to putting up a guaranty or a bond for the performance of a contract where no certified check is put up?

Mr. DAWSON. The chairman of the committee [Mr. Foss] is turning to the law.

Mr. MANN. I supposed the committee was familiar with the law or it would not have reported this matter.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Just here, if the gentleman will excuse me, I understood the gentleman a moment ago, in response to my question, to say that there was no decrease of the surety given to the Government.

Mr. DAWSON. That is my understanding.

Mr. WILLIAMS. When the gentleman makes his explanation I find that there is a decrease of some 50 to 75 per cent, because the gentleman says that the very object of the bill is to enable a certified check to be given for 25 or 50 per cent of the amount of the contract, instead of for the entire amount of the contract.

Mr. DAWSON. My impression is that in the large contracts they required the contractor to put up a bond sufficient in amount to cover the liability of the contract as they go along. All the payments are not made at once.

Mr. WILLIAMS. As I understand the gentleman's bill, it merely makes the road easier for the proposed contractor. Where does the interest of the Government come in in this bill?

Mr. DAWSON. The Secretary of the Navy recommends to us——

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand that.

Mr. DAWSON. That a certified check, which is as good as a guaranty or a bond——

Mr. WILLIAMS. We all know, as a matter of fact, that that is true. We all know that a certified check for 100 per cent is better than a certified check for 25 per cent. What advantage does the Government gain by the passage of this bill?

Mr. DAWSON. If that is correct, is this not wise legislation, in view of this statement by the Secretary of the Navy that this bill will enable him to accept such certified checks——

Mr. MANN. It will permit him to accept a certified check for any amount he pleases.

Mr. DAWSON. It permits the Secretary of the Navy to accept a certified check for substantially the same amount as he now accepts a guaranty or bond. He thinks that a certified check is more easily handled in the Department.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman answer this question: Was not the real reason for the passage of the law of 1896, authorizing the acceptance of a certified check, to permit the contractor, in place of going to the bother in small contracts of obtaining a guaranty or bond, to furnish a certified check?

Mr. DAWSON. The gentleman can answer that question better than I can, as he was here at that time and I was not.

Mr. MANN. The fact is that certified checks are never deposited with the Department in cases of large contracts, but they have always used the old provision of the law, and this is a letting down from the safety now reserved to the Government.

Mr. DAWSON. I think not. If the gentleman would point out wherein he thinks this is a loosening of the line or where it would operate to the disadvantage of the Government, I would be very glad to have him do it.

Mr. MANN. That is just it. The law now provides for the guaranty or bond. The bond is the principal thing. The burden was on the contractor to furnish the bond; and they asked the Government for permission, in small contracts, to put in a certified check and that permission was given, but it never was expected that they would put up a check for a half a million dollars, and I dare say that they have never done it.

Mr. DAWSON. But this law will permit the Secretary of the Navy to fix the same amount for the certified check that he would for the bond or the guaranty. Why is that not in the interest of good legislation?

Mr. MANN. I do not think the committee knew what the law was when they made the report on this bill, and for that reason I am suspicious of it.

Mr. DAWSON. Here is the guaranty or bond provided for in the Revised Statutes:

SEC. 3719. Every proposal for naval supplies invited by the Secretary of the Navy, under the preceding section, shall be accompanied by a written guarantee, signed by one or more responsible persons, to the effect that he or they undertake that the bidder, if his bid is accepted, will, at such time as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy, give bond, with good and sufficient sureties, to furnish the supplies proposed; and no proposal shall be considered unless accompanied by such guarantee. If, after the acceptance of a proposal, and a notification thereof to the bidder, he fails to give such bond within the time prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy, the Secretary shall proceed to contract with some other person for furnishing the supplies; and shall forthwith cause the difference between the amount contained in the proposal so guaranteed and the amount for which he may have contracted for furnishing the supplies, for the whole period of the proposal, to be charged up against the bidder and his guarantor; and the same may be immediately recovered by the United States, for the use of the Navy Department, in an action of debt against either or all of such persons.

Mr. MANN. What is the amount of the bond?

Mr. ROBERTS. There is no amount stated—a suitable bond.

Mr. DAWSON. A suitable bond. There is no amount stated.

Mr. ROBERTS. The law does not require any amount. It is simply a bond for the satisfaction of the Secretary.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does the gentleman believe that with contracts for small amounts the certified checks should be for the full amount?

Mr. ROBERTS. That is the practice of the Department now.

Mr. DAWSON. That section which I have just read is the law with relation to giving a bond, and it says nothing about the amount. It says it shall be a suitable bond, resting with the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman tell us whether it is the practice of the Navy Department to require a bond in twice the amount of the contract?

Mr. ROBERTS. No; it is not.

Mr. DAWSON. Then the act of May 25, 1896, amended this section which I have already read. It provides that the Secretary may, in his discretion, accept in lieu of the written guaranty required to accompany a proposal and in lieu of the bond required for the faithful performance of the contract for furnishing such supplies, a certified check payable to the order of the Secretary of the Navy for the full amount of such proposal or contract.

Mr. MANN. That was distinctly for the purpose of covering little cases.

Mr. DAWSON. Wait a moment. Suppose you have a contract involving $500,000. The payments on that contract are not made all at once. They are made as the supplies are furnished from time to time. At no time is the liability of the Government from this contract perhaps in excess of 25 per cent of the contract. Supposing that contractor has put up with the Secretary of the Navy a certified check covering 25 per cent or 50 per cent of the contract. Is there any insecurity on the part of the Government? Is not the Government amply secured when the contract is being fulfilled, payments simply being made from time to time, and all of this time the Government holding a certified check for 25 per cent or 50 per cent of the entire contract, as the Secretary may see fit, in his discretion?

Mr. MANN. But the gentleman assumes that it will be a certified check for 25 or 50 per cent. We all know, as a matter of experience, that in requiring a bond to be put up—where, after all, the amount does not make so very much difference to the people who sign the bond, in one way—a bond of sufficient amount will be required; but the amount you provide by law that the Secretary of the Navy or some $1,500 or $1,600 clerk, who usually does the work and makes the decision, shall permit a certified check of such amount as he pleases, we all know it will not be 50 per cent, nor will it be 25 per cent. It will not be very long before it is only 10 per cent.

Mr. DAWSON. That only emphasizes what the gentleman said a moment ago, that he did not hear the reading of the bill, because the bill expressly provides that it must be from 25 to 50 per cent. It must be in an amount between those figures.

Mr. MANN. Well, that is true.

Mr. DAWSON. And these contracts, as I understand, are paid only in installments of 10 and 15 per cent, sometimes less, so that the Government would have ample security.

Mr. MANN. What hardship is there now on the contractors in these large contracts in putting up a bond as now required by law?

Mr. DAWSON. The Secretary of the Navy finds that the certified check is a better method of security for the Government.

Mr. MANN. The Secretary of the Navy has that opinion, and all over the United States, in every State and municipality in the country, the other opinion is held, because there is no place where a bond is not required.

Mr. DAWSON. The administration of affairs has shown that this law is proving expensive to the Government, where the contractor is required to put up these large certified checks, for in the last analysis the Government doubtless indirectly pays the interest on those checks.

Mr. WILLIAMS. How?

Mr. MANN. Oh, in the last analysis there is no check put up in these cases. What is the use of talking about anyone putting up a certified check for a million dollars?

Mr. DAWSON. Those things could be brought back onto the Government, I will say in answer to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand that when a man or men are competing for a public contract each man puts the figure at the very lowest he thinks he can put it in order to get the contract with a profit to himself. That is something which is fixed in the open market by competition, and the sort of security which a man has to give does not affect it. I would like to ask this: Of course, there is a motive behind every bill; there is somebody demanding every bit of legislation in the world. Somebody started the request for this legislation——

Mr. DAWSON. Yes; it was the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, what I want to get at is this: How can you account for the fact that the Government of the United States would come to Congress voluntarily asking for the reduction of the security which it now receives in connection with a contract when the present system is working satisfactorily, at least to the Government?

Mr. DAWSON. But the Secretary of the Navy says that it is not working satisfactorily to the Government, and this law would be in the interest of better administration.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I beg the gentleman's pardon, the Secretary of the Navy does not say that, if I heard the report correctly. What the Secretary of the Navy says is that it will make it easier for the contractor to comply with the law.

Mr. DAWSON. If the gentleman will pardon me, I will read what the Secretary says on that point.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I wish you would.

Mr. DAWSON. Speaking of the deposit of a certified check for the full amount of the contract, he says:

> This statute, which has been in operation about nine years, has proved satisfactory in its application to contracts representing small amounts——

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is just what I said.

Mr. DAWSON (reading)—

> In such cases bidders usually find it no hardship to deposit certified checks covering the full amounts of the contracts. With respect to the larger transactions, however, the reverse is true.

In other words, on large contracts it has not worked well; it has worked badly.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the gentleman will excuse me, the law the Secretary of the Navy is referring to is that which changed and amended the old law by permitting certified checks to be given in lieu of the bond and the guaranty. There still remains the power yet to give a bond and a guaranty without giving a certified check at all. Now, then, they have got the right now to give a bond and guaranty. If a man does not want to cripple his credit at bank by giving a certified check, or rather lessen his amount of money in bank by giving it, he can still give a bond and guaranty; but when he gives a certified check under the present law, unamended by the law you are proposing, he must give a certified check as a substitute for the bond and guaranty in the same amount. Now you propose to allow him to give a certified check for 25 or 50 per cent of the amount. In other words, the Government is voluntarily reducing its own security, not for the benefit of the Government, but to make the provisions easier for the contractor, if I understand it.

Mr. DAWSON. Let me see if I can state it more clearly. As the matter stands now the question of the size of the bond or guaranty rests in the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Theoretically, yes; but practically he always required at least the full amount of the contract.

Mr. DAWSON. Oh, no. He requires such a bond as will protect the Government on the payments, usually made along from time to time, so at all periods of the contract the Government will have ample security. Now that power rests with the Secretary of the Navy, and the present practice of the Department is to require a bond of 50 per cent on contracts up to $1,000 in amount, while on contracts of $2,000 or over the amount of the bond is 25 per cent.

This law simply circumscribed the Secretary of the Navy. We do not propose to give him the same leeway with regard to certified checks which the law gives him in regard to the bond and guaranty. We simply say to him, If it is in the interest of good administration, you may make these certified checks 25 to 50 per cent of the contract, it being a large contract, a contract which covers a long period of time and upon which payments are being made from time to time, so that the certified check of 25 or 50 per cent may be even greater security than the bond which is now required by the Secretary of the Navy. We limit his discretion in this law in regard to the certified check, but at the same time provide ample security for the Government on all its contracts.

I should like to say, further, that this bill was recommended to the two Houses of Congress by the Secretary of the Navy.

It has already passed the Senate of the United States, where it was fully considered, and it came over to the House of Representatives and has been considered and unanimously reported from the Naval Committee.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. DAWSON. Certainly.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does the gentleman believe there is any need of having certified checks for the full amount of the contracts where they are for small amounts?

Mr. DAWSON. Yes, sir; and for this reason: A small contract is delivered all at one time and the payment is all at one time; therefore the full amount should be required.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does not the bill you are proposing to have passed supersede the act of May 25, 1896, which gave the Department the option to have a certified check for the full amount in lieu of a bond by making it compulsory upon the Secretary of the Navy to accept not less than 50 per cent, as provided in this bill?

Mr. DAWSON. No; I think not.

Mr. STAFFORD. The language of this bill says that he shall, in his discretion, accept a certified check, payable to the Secretary of the Navy, for from 25 or 50 per cent.

Mr. DAWSON. In his discretion.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then it supersedes the other act when construed in connection with that, which required the full amount of the contract if, in his discretion, he should decide to accept a certified check?

Mr. DAWSON. Yes; it is proposed to modify that law.

Mr. STAFFORD. If this act passes, he would not be allowed to accept a certified check in any greater amount than 50 per cent, because the phraseology limits him to from 25 to 50 per cent. It does not say in an amount not less than 25 to 50 per cent, but it says whenever he exercises his discretion and accepts a certified check in lieu of a bond that he shall not take a certified check of an amount greater than from 25 to 50 per cent. Why should you not amend this bill so that, so far as the small contracts are concerned, discretion shall be vested in him to accept a certified check for the full amount? The language could be changed so as to read, "in an amount not less than 25 per cent," which would give him the option to take a certified check for the full amount when the contracts are small.

Mr. DAWSON. In my judgment, the Secretary would have that authority.

Mr. STAFFORD. As a lawyer, I would say that it would be a very grave question whether this bill does not supersede the act of May 25, 1896, which act vested in him the authority to take certified checks for the full amount and which you say should be continued in small contracts.

Mr. LAWRENCE. May I ask the gentleman one more question?

Mr. DAWSON. Certainly.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I understand the gentleman to say the present law is that the Secretary may exercise discretion in large contracts as to the size of the bond—that the Secretary has absolute discretion as to the amount of it?

Mr. DAWSON. I have read the law on that point—all the law there is. It says that if his bid is accepted, at such a time as may be prescribed by the Secretary he shall give a bond, with full and sufficient sureties, to furnish the supplies proposed.

Mr. LAWRENCE. All your bill does is to allow him to accept a certified check in lieu of the bond to the amount of 25 to 50 per cent of the contract, giving him practically the same discretion with reference to certified checks as with reference to bonds?

Mr. DAWSON. Practically so.

Mr. LAWRENCE. If that be so, in your opinion and in the opinion of your committee, the proposed bill does not lessen the security which the Government has?

Mr. DAWSON. No; not in the slightest.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Very well.

Mr. DAWSON. Mr. Speaker, I call for a vote on the bill.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the bill will be considered read a third time.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, if there is any request for unanimous consent, I must object.

The question was taken on ordering the bill read a third time; and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Let us have a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 125, noes 81.

So the bill was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Division!

The House divided; and there were—ayes 123, noes 80.

So the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. Foss, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

BUSINESS OF THE COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY.

Mr. JENKINS. I now ask that the Committee on the Judiciary be called.

Mr. MANN. I would like to ask what becomes of the business of the Committee on Naval Affairs. Has it been all considered?

Mr. FOSS. I desire to say that these are the only two bills we have on the House Calendar. We have no further bills to call up.

The SPEAKER. Let the Chair understand.

Mr. FOSS. We have exhausted the bills on the House Calendar from the Committee on Naval Affairs.

DUPLICATE GOLD CERTIFICATES IN LIEU OF ONES LOST OR DESTROYED.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on the Judiciary to call up the bill H. R. 14587.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 14587) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to issue gold certificates in lieu of ones lost or destroyed.

Be it enacted, etc., That whenever any United States gold certificate, made payable to order, issued by the Treasurer of the United States or any assistant treasurer thereof, under the act of March 14, 1900, shall have been lost and shall have not been indorsed, or when any such certificate shall have been destroyed, the Secretary of the Treasury shall be, and he is hereby, authorized, upon satisfactory proof of such loss, to issue to the holder of such certificate a duplicate thereof: Provided, That the said holder shall first file in the Treasury a bond with good and sufficient secureties, to be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, in double the amount of such certificate lost or destroyed, conditioned to indemnify and save harmless the United States from any claim or loss on account of such lost or destroyed certificate.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

After line 6, page 1, insert the words "have been specially indorsed to order or shall."

In line 9, after "authorized," insert the words "in his discretion and on such conditions as he shall impose."

In line 10, after the word "loss," insert "or destruction."

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I will yield to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER], who reported the bill.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, there is already on the statute books a provision of the Revised Statutes which provides that in case a check payable to order is lost or destroyed the Secretary of the Treasury, in his discretion, may issue a duplicate check upon receiving a proper bond of indemnity. Recently there has been a practice of issuing gold certificates payable to order. They are practically only checks; but it has been held by the Treasury Department that the ordinary provision as to checks does not extend to such gold certificates payable to order, and this section simply provides that the same remedy, substantially, as applied to checks shall apply to lost or destroyed gold certificates. It is simply what is done in every private business; when you give a man a check and it is lost another check is given; a bond of indemnity is required and a new check is issued. That is all. I yield back the time to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. JENKINS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

NATIONAL GERMAN-AMERICAN ALLIANCE.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I am instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary to call up the bill (H. R. 11273) to incorporate the National German-American Alliance.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin calls up the following bill, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That C. J. Hexamer, M. D. Learned, Adolph Timm, John Weber, Hans Weniger, H. C. Bloedel, all of the State of Pennsylvania; John Tjarks, of the State of Maryland; C. C. Lienau, of the State of New Jersey; Kurt Voelckner, of the District of Columbia; H. A. C. Anderson, of the State of New York; Gustave Bender, of the State of Texas; Joseph Keller, of the State of Indiana; F. O. Martin, of the State of Idaho; Gustav Halbach, of the State of Ohio; H. J. Nienstedt, of the State of Minnesota, officers and members of the National German-American Alliance of the United States of America, and their succesors, be, and they are hereby, incorporated and made a body politic and corporate under the name of "The National German-American Alliance of the United States of America." And by that name they and their successors may have and use a common seal, and may alter and change the same at pleasure, and may make by-laws and elect officers and agents, and may take, receive, hold, and convey real and personal estate necessary for the purposes of the society.

SEC. 2. That this corporation shall be perpetual and have all the privileges accorded by existing laws or that may hereafter be enacted by the Congress of the United States.

SEC. 3. That this corporation, composed of the individuals aforesaid and their associates, under the name and style aforesaid, is formed for the purposes as follows: The conservation of the principles of representative government and the protection and maintenance of all civil and political rights; the protection of German immigrants against imposition and deception and to assist in their naturalization; the study of American institutions and the publication of American history; the cultivation of the German language, literature, and drama, and the perpetuation of the memory and deeds of those early German pioneers whose influence has been of incalculable benefit to the intellectual and economic development of this country and whose loyalty in times of stress and strife is a matter of history.

SEC. 4. That said corporation shall have a constitution and shall have power to amend the same at pleasure: Provided, That such constitution or amendments thereof do not conflict with the laws of the United States or of any State.

SEC. 5. That said corporation shall have the right to hold its meetings at any place within the United States as may be best suited or most advantageous to the carrying out of the purposes for which this corporation is formed.

SEC. 6. That said corporation shall not engage in any business for gain, the purposes of said corporation being educational and patriotic.

SEC. 7. That Congress may at any time amend, alter, or repeal this act.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER], who reported the bill.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Speaker, the report is very short, and I will ask to have it read.

The SPEAKER. The report will be read in the gentleman's time.

The report [by Mr. PALMER] was read, as follows:

The Committee on the Judiciary, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 11273) to incorporate The National German-American Alliance, respectfully report:

The purposes of the society are stated to be—

"That this corporation, composed of the individuals aforesaid and their associates, under the name and style aforesaid, is formed for the purposes as follows: The conservation of the principles of representative government and the protection and maintenance of all civil and political rights; the protection of German immigrants against imposition and deception and to assist in their naturalization; the study of American institutions and the publication of American history; the cultivation of the German language, literature, and drama, and the perpetuation of the memory and deeds of those early German pioneers whose influence has been of incalculable benefit to the intellectual and economic development of this country, and whose loyalty in times of stress and strife is a matter of history."

The charter further provides—

"That said corporation shall not engage in any business for gain, the purposes of said corporation being educational and patriotic.

"That Congress may at any time amend, alter, or repeal this act."

Further information as to the purposes and scope of the society is found in the following letters:

"PHILADELPHIA, PA., March 16, 1906.

"DEAR SIR: In reply to your favor of the 14th instant I beg leave to state that the reports at our third national convention, held October 6, 1905, showed a membership of one and one-half millions. The total number of our organizations, which is constantly increasing, is 6,000 in 33 States.

"We have State branches in the following twelve States: Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Ohio, California, Indiana, Minnesota, Maryland, Massachusetts, New York, Missouri, Idaho, and in the District of Columbia.

"State branches are being organized in the following States: Alabama, Arkansas, Colorado, Connecticut, Delaware, Georgia, Illinois, Iowa, Kansas, Louisiana, Michigan, Montana, Nebraska, Oregon, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, Vermont, Washington, and Wisconsin.

"Very respectfully, yours,

"ADOLPH TIMM, Secretary.

"Hon. H. W. PALMER,
"Chairman Subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary, House of Representatives."

"PHILADELPHIA, PA., March 13, 1906.

"DEAR SIR: Complying with your request and by order of our president, Dr. C. J. Hexamer, I beg to submit to you the aims of the National German-American Alliance:

"It is a purely patriotic organization.

"Party politics and religion are strictly excluded.

"It opposes the immigration of unhealthy persons, convicted criminals, and anarchists.

"It calls on all Germans to become citizens of the United States.

"Its branches maintain German-English night schools for the teaching of the English language, the Constitution, and American history, and aim to make patriotic American citizens of German immigrants

"It recommends the founding of educational societies and the holding of courses of lectures on art and science.

"It advocates the study of American institutions and the publication of American history, and for that purpose is instrumental in publishing the German-American Annals by one of its branches, the German-American Historical Society.

"It commemorates the memory of great Americans, and at its third annual convention in Indianapolis resolved to celebrate the two hundredth anniversary of the birth of Benjamin Franklin, which celebration was observed by all its branches.

"Being a national organization in the true sense of the word, with branches in every State, it prays to be incorporated by Congress.

"Respectfully submitted.

"ADOLPH TIMM, Secretary.

"Hon. HENRY W. PALMER,
"Chairman Subcommittee of the Committee on the "Judiciary, House of Representatives.

"P. S.—A set of the German-American Annals is being sent to you."

The fact therefore appears that the society is national in character, commendable in purpose, salutary in its operations, and in harmony with the Constitution of the United States.

Its membership already numbers 1,500,000 citizens, located in 33 States, with State branches in 12 States and prospective branches in 20 more.

The Judiciary Committee is of opinion that the charter sought should be granted, with the following amendment: Insert after the word "corporate," at the end of line 14, the words "of the District of Columbia."

Mr. LAWRENCE. Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill if, under the law as it exists now, this corporation could be formed in the District of Columbia, and, therefore, what the necessity is, if any, for an act of Congress?

Mr. PALMER. As I understand this, it could not be incorporated under the District law. There is the same necessity for this act as there was for the Red Cross charter and several other charters of a similiar character that have been granted by Congress. There are about 1,500,000 members of this society now, covering 33 States. The organization is national in its character, purely patriotic, not for gain at all, and it will dignify the society, at least, to have a national charter. With the amendments submitted by the committee, to insert after the word "corporate" the words "of the District of Columbia," this makes it a corporation of the District of Columbia, and, therefore, not subject to any objection whatever that I can see.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I should like to inquire of the gentleman why this bill happens to come from the Committee on the Judiciary, when the uniform practice has been for these bills relating to the District of Columbia, as provided by the rules of the House, to be reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia?

Mr. PALMER. This bill does not relate to the District of Columbia. Besides that, the Judiciary Committee is the most patriotic committee connected with this House, and as this is a purely patriotic society, of course this bill was properly sent to the Judiciary Committee. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. I suspected that it went there for personal reasons.

Mr. PALMER. Then your suspicions are well founded.

Mr. MANN. I think so myself.

Mr. PALMER. If you have anything of a patriotic nature, you ought to send it to that committee.

Mr. MANN. Under the rules of the House, a bill to incorporate anything in the District of Columbia goes to the Committee on the District of Columbia. Here is a very nice method of getting it before some other committee; leaving out the words "of the District of Columbia," send it to the Committee on the Judiciary, and have that committee insert the words "of the District of Columbia," so you can pass the bill. There ought to be some method of getting these things before the proper committee of the House.

The gentleman has not yet given us any explanation as to why this bill should become a law. I hope he will explain it to the House, so that if there is any exceptional reason it will be taken out of the general condemnation of this House against granting everybody a special incorporation.

Mr. PALMER. If there is objection to the bill, I will yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT], whose bill it is. I suppose he will be able to explain it.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, I was not aware that this bill would come up this morning, and I have very little to add to the report which has been read by the clerk.

As I understand it, this is an organization having a membership of a million and a half in this country. It has branches in twelve States and has members in thirty-three States of the Union. The membership is confined to American citizens—that is, no one can join this organization unless he is an American citizen.

The purposes of the organization are to aid in the process of Americanization and are supplementary to the legislation had at the last session, which provides that immigrants must be able to speak the English language before they can become naturalized. In view of this legislation it has been deemed necessary that schools be established in the large cities for the purpose of giving instruction in the English language; and it is the purpose of this organization——

Mr. HEPBURN. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Certainly.

Mr. HEPBURN. There is no provision here requiring the study or cultivation of the English language. It is the cultivation of the German language and not the English language that is provided for.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I desire to answer my friend by saying that at the time this bill was drafted and at the time the report was written the legislation to which I have just referred had not been enacted by Congress—that is, the legislation which requires a man, before he becomes a citizen, to be able to speak the English language. The purpose of establishing schools to enable these men to acquire a knowledge of English has been added to the other purposes since. Of course, as far as the paragraph relating to the cultivation of the German language is concerned, this means within their own circle for the purpose of preserving the treasures of German thought and philosophy and literature among themselves. That certainly can not make them any the less desirable American citizens.

Mr. HEPBURN. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him another question?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. With pleasure.

Mr. HEPBURN. Is there any purpose recited in this bill calling for the organization of this society that it could not now carry out without incorporation?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. That is probably true with respect to all of these organizations that have sought national charters. They might be able to accomplish their purpose without incorporation by Congress, and yet my friend from Iowa knows that such an incorporation is desirable; that it is not a Congressional incorporation. It is to be an incorporation under the laws of the District of Columbia for the purpose of having headquarters here and conducting business under a sort of national character. But the national incorporation will certainly give their organization a prestige which it otherwise would not have. It is that prestige that the million and a half members are after. I understand that three or four national conventions have called upon their respective Members of Congress to aid in the passage of this bill.

Mr. HEPBURN. Would the gentleman from Missouri be willing to accept an amendment striking out of line 2, page 2, the word "German" where it appears in the hyphenated form of German-American alliance? I think it would be good enough to be an American alliance. I do not think there is any advantage to be gained by perpetuating these national distinctions in the United States.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I am aware of my friend's objections to the hyphenation, but this is a name which the organization has adopted, and they are petitioning us to grant this concession under the name they have chosen to adopt. I, for one, have no authority to consent to the change of name. I should like to, but I have not the authority to do so. As far as that name is concerned, let me suggest, Mr. Speaker, that it is only a name. The word "German" is not used in a political sense, but merely in an ethnological sense. It is true that it confines the membership and the purposes of organization to those who are Germans. The Italians and Irish would have the same privilege to organize in the same way and for the same purpose, and I for one would be perfectly willing to vote for legislation in their behalf.

Mr. HEPBURN. I would not.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. But I have no authority to consent to any change of the name.

Mr. MANN. Is this organization incorporated now in any way?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. As far as I know, it is not.

Mr. MANN. Nowhere?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. No; it has its headquarters at Philadelphia.

Mr. MANN. Is this any different from other fraternal organizations throughout the country?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. It is different in this respect, that it has more of a political character, if I may so term it, because they want to aid in identifying the immigrants as soon as possible with American institutions, and while it is not a partisan body, it is in a certain sense a political body, and as such and as a national organization they seek this incorporation.

Mr. MANN. Is the object of the society to get in some way in touch with the immigrant?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Yes; that is one of its main purposes.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD].

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I wish to add my indorsement to the measure now under consideration. It does not differ, so far as the incorporation feature is concerned, from bills of like nature that have passed prior Congresses, such as the one providing for the incorporation of the American Educational Association. I do not think we should hesitate to incorporate this National German-American Alliance which is extending its good influences throughout the country. Within the past few months a branch has been formed in the State which I have the honor in part to represent, comprising in its membership some of its foremost citizens, though, it is true, of German lineage. Nevertheless they are citizens who have the institutions of this country closely at heart.

As is well known, there is a trend toward a closer union among nations. It is not necessary for me to call attention to the movement which has had the approval of the President and the approval of the German Emperor in the exchange of professors, so that the ideas, the ideals, and the institutions of the respective countries could be brought closer home to the students attending the universities of each.

At the present time, in honor to the memory of a great German-American, one of the most illustrious who ever came to our shores—Hon. Carl Schurz—the German-Americans of my State have undertaken the formation of an organization whereby they are going to create a chair at the State university for instruction in the institutions of Germany, and in doing so they do nothing detrimental to American institutions. No one will question the worthiness of the plan proposed by the Wisconsin Schurz Memorial Association, and its appropriateness to commemorate the work and worth of this foremost statesman and citizen.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Certainly.

Mr. LAWRENCE. The gentleman from Wisconsin is evidently very familiar with the object and great purposes of this association. I have listened to him with interest, and I would like to ask him—and I should have great confidence in his judgment upon it—what practical benefits will be accomplished by this incorporation?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, in answer to the gentleman's query, I will say that instead of being obliged to incorporate in the various States in which the organization has separate branches, it will be enabled under the law to have one central organization located here in the District of Columbia, and to have all of the branches governed by that one law, thereby enabling it the better to advance the objects of the society. This bill will empower the organization to hold property here in the District and will reduce in many ways the inconveniences that would beset the organization if it were obliged to have separate incorporations in the several States.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman's explanation has been very satisfactory, and for my part I hope the bill will be passed.

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman a question before he takes his seat? The gentleman elucidates every subject upon which he speaks.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin yield to his colleague?

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin, my colleague.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I understand the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] wishes to ask me a question. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. MANN. I would like to inquire of the gentleman whether upon consideration of the subject he is convinced that this organization is one formed purely for patriotic purposes?

Mr. STAFFORD. From my knowledge of the men who are back of the organization, the leaders of it, and those men identified with the organization in Wisconsin, there can be no question whatever but that it is organized for patriotic purposes and for the uplift of American citizenship.

No more praiseworthy purpose for former aliens to follow who have espoused the nationality of this country could be undertaken than to perform the work as outlined by this German-American alliance. To enlist support to German immigrants who have recently come to our shores; to advance by meetings and addresses the principles of representative government, which are as dear to the naturalized citizen as to the native born; to instill a reverence for American institutions and the study of American history; to continue the cultivation of their native tongue and the spirit of its literature; to keep alive by speech and deed the memory of the pioneers from Germany to this free land of ours, are objects that naturalized citizens from any country might well emulate.

Because American citizens of German nativity or lineage wish to perpetuate the memory of its institutions and to cultivate a love for its language and its literature does not make them antagonistic in their duty toward their adopted or native country. We have much to learn from Germany, and Germany can profit also by a study of our institutions and methods.

If there were anything in the history of the German people who have come to our shores to indicate disloyalty to their adopted country, there might be question raised as to the expediency and value of this organization.

Those who know the German race best have no alarm at extending the influence of that people and its language and its institutions. In those localities where they give distinction and tone to American citizenship the German-Americans have woven their loyalty to every right principle of American government into the fabric of the state.

Only good can come from this organization and its extension, and I hope that there will be no question as to the worthiness of this movement and of the desirability of having it incorporated under authority of the National Government. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. JENKINS, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

PERMITTING NATIONAL BANKS TO MAKE LOANS ON FARM LANDS.

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Banking and Currency, which has been passed without prejudice under the call, I call up the bill (H. R. 8124) to amend section 5136 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, permitting national banking associations to make loans on real estate as security, and limiting the amount of such loans, with the amendments thereto; which I send to the desk, and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the seventh subdivision of section 5136 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"Seventh. To exercise by its board of directors or duly authorized officers or agents, subject to law, all such incidental powers as shall be necessary to carry on the business of banking; by discounting and negotiating promissory notes, drafts, bills of exchange, and other evidences of debt; by receiving deposits; by buying and selling exchange, coin, and bullion; by loaning money on personal security; by loaning money upon notes, bonds, or other evidences of debt, secured by mortgages or other instruments of security on unencumbered real estate situated in the State, Territory, or District where such association is located, worth, exclusive of buildings, on a conservative market valuation, double the amount of the loan thereon: Provided, That not more than 25 per cent of the total capital and surplus or undivided profits of such association shall at any time be invested in such real estate securities; and by obtaining, issuing, and circulating notes according to the provisions of this title. But no association shall transact any business except such as is incidental and necessarily preliminary to its organization, until it has been authorized by the Comptroller of the Currency to commence the business of banking."

With the following amendments:

On page 1, in the title of the bill, fourth line, strike out the words "real estate" and insert in their place the words "farm lands."

On page 2, line 2, strike out the words "real estate" and insert the words "farm lands."

On page 2, line 5, after the word "thereon," insert the following: "Provided, That any such loan on farm-lands security shall not be for a longer term than twelve months."

On page 2, line 6, strike out the words "or undivided" at the end of the line.

On line 7, page 2, strike out the word "profits."

On page 2, line 8, after the word "securities," insert the following: "Provided further, That applications for loans upon notes, bonds, or other evidences of debt secured by mortgages or other instruments of security on unencumbered farm lands shall be made in writing and approved in writing by a majority of the board of directors."

On page 2, line 8, strike out the words "real estate" and insert in lieu thereof the words "farm lands."

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill to amend section 5136 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, permitting national banking associations to make loans on farm lands as security, and limiting the amount of such loans."

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to permit national banks to loan on farm lands situated in a State, Territory, or district where such association is located worth exclusive of buildings on a reasonable market valuation double the amount of the loan thereon, provided that any such loan on farm-lands security shall not be for a longer term than twelve months; and provided further that not more than 25 per cent of the total capital and surplus of such association shall at any time be invested in such farm-lands securities; and provided further that applications for loans on notes, bonds, or other evidences of debt secured by mortgages or other instruments of security on unencumbered farm land shall be made in writing and approved in writing by a majority of the board of directors. I do not think I could say more than what I have said that is in the nature of an amendment to the present national banking act, which was passed in 1864, and which does not permit the loaning of money on real estate or on farm land.

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman is this the same bill which was called up last session, and which failed to pass?

Mr. PRINCE. In answer to my colleague I would say it was the same bill which was called up under a suspension of the rules and received a decided majority of the House on a vote, but not two-thirds, as required by the suspension of the rules.

Mr. MANN. This is the same bill?

Mr. PRINCE. This is the same bill; yes, sir. Your question hardly put it in accordance with the facts.

Mr. MANN. My question put it exactly in accordance with the facts. It was called up and failed to pass.

Mr. PRINCE. Very well, I misunderstood it. I know the gentleman so well he would not purposely say anything of the kind, and it may have been my dull comprehension and not his statement.

Mr. OLMSTED. Does this bill limit the real estate upon which loans may be made to farm lands?

Mr. PRINCE. Yes, sir; to farm lands.

Mr. OLMSTED. What is the object of that? Why not city lots?

Mr. PRINCE. The object of that was to place it so that exploiters in laying out city property might not obtain funds from the bank, and the purpose was to make it for farm lands exclusively, so that the people in the farm settlements of our country in the West and in the South might have an opportunity to obtain money upon their farm lands.

Mr. OLMSTED. I should think a city lot with a building on it, loaned to 25 per cent of the value of the ground exclusively, would be better than farm security.

Mr. PRINCE. That is a question of opinion. When the bill was presented to the committee it had the words "real estate," but after discussion the committee reported by striking out the words "real estate" and limiting it to farm lands, and that is the way it has come to the House.

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman what is the definition in the bill of the term "farm lands," if any?

Mr. PRINCE. I presume the definition would be that which ordinarily obtains, that of land which is used for tillage purposes.

Mr. MANN. Suppose I have a piece of property in Chicago which is used to raise corn on, is that farm land?

Mr. PRINCE. That is for the board of directors to say. That is a matter of judgment and discretion. I am inclined to think that the condition might obtain as the gentleman has stated.

Mr. MANN. Is there any definition which would appeal to the court if these people are being prosecuted for violation of the national banking law?

Mr. PRINCE. Not other than what would be regarded by the court as farm land. Where land was set apart for farming purposes I imagine it would fall under the head of farm land. If it was unimproved land, if there were a few hills of corn upon it, but the purpose of it was to sell into city property, I question whether the board of directors or a majority of them, in writing, would certify that it was farm land.

Mr. MANN. Oh, members of the board of directors in these banks will do as boards of directors always do—do whatever the cashier or commanding officer commands them to do. They will in this case where there is no necessity of having control at all.

Mr. PRINCE. Well, Mr. Speaker, in answer to that, all I can say is this, that it happens to fall to my lot to be a member of the board of directors for a bank.

We meet every Monday at 12 o'clock, and every note is passed upon, every loan is scanned and passed upon. We go over the condition of that bank weekly, and we know it is not a weak bank, but that it is a strong one. I can not conceive of men who are acting as trustees on behalf of the people who will purposely and deliberately do that which ought not to be done. I can only speak for the average man, and I think that the average man tries to do about right.

Mr. LOVERING. Mr. Speaker, I see that the bill provides for a short loan for twelve months. I would like to know if that includes a renewal of the loan, and if that is the intention of the bill?

Mr. PRINCE. There is no prohibition of a renewal. That is a matter that begins, as we lawyers would call it, de novo, and a new application undoubtedly would be made, and if the directors, or a majority of them, in writing, should approve of a new loan, which you might call an extension, I see no objection in the bill to that being done.

Mr. GILLESPIE. Suppose they had agreed beforehand that a renewal should be had?

Mr. PRINCE. In answer to the gentleman's question, Mr. Speaker, I do not see how they can do it under the law. They must falsify themselves when they do so.

Mr. GILLESPIE. Is it not true that a loan of twelve months is of very little benefit to the farmer? Does he not require a loan of from one to five years?

Mr. PRINCE. Not necessarily. One year may be ample. It may be that he wants to renew it, but he must come in, and if he has been prompt in the paying of his interest, in the payment of his taxes, if there are no incumbrances upon the farm at the time he obtained the first loan, if there are no judgments against the land, and if the directors know he is living within his means and he has met his obligations, pray tell me what objection there would be to him making an application for an additional or a new loan? But under the law the directors can not agree in advance as to what they shall do, because of the subsequent events as I have suggested in the answer to the gentleman's question.

Mr. GILLESPIE. I want to state that I am opposed to the principle of the bill.

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Speaker, I will yield to the gentleman five minutes, if he desires.

Mr. GILLESPIE. Mr. Speaker, just one statement. As I stated to the House last session, I think it is a dangerous principle that the capital of national banks should be allowed to be tied up in real-estate security. I do not believe there is much benefit in it to the farmer. He does not want a loan for twelve months. He does not want to pay the high rate of interest that these short loans call for. His loans are from one to five years. I believe a bill violates a sound principle of banking when it provides that the banking funds, that are the current funds of the country that rest temporarily in our banks to answer the needs of commerce, are to be tied up in real estate securities. Twelve months is too long a time for these current funds to be tied up. The world's experience in banking proves this. Thirty, sixty, ninety, and one hundred and twenty days are the limits sound judgment fixes. Banks are liable to be called upon to respond to the demand of their depositors. Quick, live assets must be the rule.

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the proposer of the bill [Mr. LEWIS].

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. Speaker, over forty years ago the national-bank act was created, and it was provided that a national bank could loan money on anything else in this world except real estate.

Mr. STAFFORD. What was the purpose of forbidding the banks to loan on real-estate security?

Mr. LEWIS. I will state to the gentleman that before the civil war, under the old system of the State banks, they were permitted to loan money on real estate. Fifty years ago the condition was quite different from now. The country was unsettled, we had wild-cat money, and as a consequence real-estate loans helped to break a great many banks. For that reason, forty-two years ago, when this act was created, it was specified that national banks should not loan money on real estate.

Mr. STAFFORD. Was not the reason rather that real-estate security has never been considered a ready asset not speedily convertible in times of financial stringency to meet pressing demands?

Mr. LEWIS. That is not the case now. It may have been in the older days. Now you have to sue a note in two courts in some States of the Union on real estate, while many States have specific laws under which you can foreclose on real estate and get your money in sixty days' time.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is it not a principle of banking that a bank should have easily convertible assets, so that if there should be any pressing call they would have assets readily reducible in currency? And is it not a further fact that the negotiable paper discounted by banks averages in time three to four months which can be shortly realized upon in case of need?

Mr. LEWIS. Is it not a fact in banking that every bank does have a certain amount of long loans? The bill only provides that 25 per cent of the capital and surplus may be loaned on farm lands. It is a safe investment.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has the gentleman considered this condition of affairs? Suppose a bank loans to the extent of 25 per cent of its capital and surplus on farm lands and at the end of the year the mortgagee does not pay his note. Then what will the bank be obliged to do except to foreclose that mortgage? It will have loaned to the extent of 25 per cent of its capital and surplus, but after foreclosing it will have to take the land, and under a decision of the Supreme Court they are not permitted to hold land until it can be sold.

Mr. LEWIS. Certainly the bank would hold the land until such time as it could be disposed of. The law provides that the bank can not hold land for longer than five years.

Mr. STAFFORD. The Supreme Court has held that the national bank may, when it receives land through foreclosure proceedings, hold the land notwithstanding that positive prohibition.

Mr. LEWIS. In answer to that I will state that the national-bank act forces the bank to dispose of the land within five years. Now, suppose you get on hand bad stocks and bonds—and every bank is subject to that—the banks can not readily realize on such security without a great sacrifice. I state to the gentleman that the banks are asking for this law. The president of the American Banking Association is asking for the law, and the national banks have been recommending it. They want it passed.

Mr. STAFFORD. Let us go back to the original proposition carried in my question as to what the result would be if these mortgagees were not able to pay their notes and the banks had to foreclose and take the lands. The banks would be obliged to sell the lands for what they could receive, and they might have an asset that could not be readily reducible to cash.

Mr. LEWIS. The bank need not take the land and hold it, because farm lands find ready sale all over the United States. Your western lands, in Ohio and Illinois and the Dakotas and other Western States, you can sell in fifty or one hundred days.

Mr. STAFFORD. But in case of financial depression there would be no demand for farm lands, as was the case in the panic of 1893 and 1894. What is to become of the bank in such times with 25 per cent of its capital and surplus tied up in unsalable lands?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. A man could not borrow money on a United States bond in 1893. Certainly it was as safe a loan on a farm as it was on a bond that you could not borrow on. [Applause.]

Mr. STAFFORD. But a United States bond has always had a salable value, whereas in the case of land at such times it could not be sold at all.

Mr. LEWIS. They could sell it at any time.

Mr. STAFFORD. There has been no time in the history of the country since the civil war when a United States bond was not a salable asset.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. There has been no time when the farmers have not been safer than the speculator, because they are honest every day in the year. The farmers are mistreated by legislation more than any other class.

Mr. LEWIS. Let us not forget that during all this time stocks and bonds are changing from 50 to 60 per cent in value, and cotton plantations are selling all the time.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. I will ask the gentleman if they have not State banks in Georgia?

Mr. LEWIS. Yes; and they lend every dollar on real estate; and yet, notwithstanding that fact, in the last twenty-five years there have been only two bank failures in the State, and they were on account of the dishonesty of the cashier.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Do they not meet the local demands of the people in this respect?

Mr. LEWIS. I want the farmers of Georgia treated as fair as everybody else. I want the farmer to feel that the ownership of his magnificent plantation gives him as much right to go to the bank to borrow money as you and I have to go to the bank to borrow money on bonds and railroad stocks.

Mr. MANN. Does the farmer have any trouble in borrowing money on his personal note in your section of the country?

Mr. LEWIS. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Then they have very poor banks there. The banks of the country loan money on personal notes. That is what they loan money on.

Mr. LEWIS. Do not the railroads have to put up their bonds as security?

Mr. MANN. They borrow money on the note of the railroad company. They do not borrow it on their real estate, and the merchants of the country do not borrow on security. They borrow on their notes.

Mr. LEWIS. There are hundreds of merchants in Chicago who could not borrow any money there without putting up security.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. The paper of the merchants of Chicago is discounted in every market.

Mr. MANN. Any quantity of them borrow the money which they require for the conduct of their business on their individual notes.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Is there anything in this bill pertaining to the furnishing of abstracts where a loan is made? I have had correspondence with some of my bankers about that.

Mr. LEWIS. No.

Mr. GILLESPIE. That is a perquisite on the side.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. There was a bill requiring an abstract to be furnished before the loan was made.

Mr. LEWIS. The bill exercises great caution in this respect. It says that no loans can be made without a meeting of the directors and a signed statement giving permission for the loan.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Does this bill authorize the directors to make a loan without an abstract being furnished, where they are satisfied that the title is good?

Mr. LEWIS. I should think so. It is a practical bill.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. That is all I want to know.

Mr. LEWIS. If the bank is satisfied that the real estate is all right, it is authorized to make the loan.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Without an abstract?

Mr. LEWIS. Yes.

Mr. GILLESPIE. The gentleman has stated that the national banks want this bill.

Mr. LEWIS. I made that statement.

Mr. GILLESPIE. I will ask the gentleman if any association or organization of farmers in this country have ever demanded such legislation as this?

Mr. LEWIS. Yes; they have been demanding it. There is Senator NELSON of Minnesota, who had a bill——

Mr. GILLESPIE. I am talking about any farmers' organization.

Mr. LEWIS. The farmers never come here for legislation. They have no organization. We must take care of the farmers ourselves.

Mr. GILLESPIE. Then you admit that the farmers are not here asking the passage of this?

Mr. LEWIS. They want it. You know they want it. Any man who has a plantation would like to know that he has as good credit as a railroad that runs through it. Let me remind the gentleman that the Government is doing nothing for the agricultural interests of this country. It can not do anything for them in the way of tariff legislation or anything of that kind. Yet, take the wheat farmers and the cotton farmers of this country. They are furnishing the capital to pay the interest on this borrowed money that we owe to France, England, and foreign creditors. I am not prepared to give the comparative figures, because this bill has come up rather unexpectedly, but it is probable that the exports of cotton and grain amount to three-fourths of all the total exports of this country. The farmers are paying off our great national debt, and yet they can not borrow a dollar on their real estate.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentleman from Georgia a question.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Georgia yield to the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. LEWIS. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. CLAYTON. I believe you are the author of this bill?

Mr. LEWIS. Yes.

Mr. CLAYTON. Will you tell why this limitation seems to have been added to your bill by the committee, that no such loans on farm-lands security shall be for a longer time than twelve months? Why should that limitation be put upon land security, whereas it has not been put upon any other security that may be offered to a bank?

Mr. LEWIS. I wish to say that I thought the bill was safely guarded. I opposed the change of the bill in that way. It ought to have been left with the same provision as for making a loan on bonds or notes.

Mr. CLAYTON. What reason was given for the change?

Mr. LEWIS. The committee wanted to be very conservative. They wanted to get a bill as safe as they could.

Mr. WEEKS rose.

Mr. CLAYTON. I am still not convinced that the committee had good reason for the action, by the answer of the gentleman from Georgia, and I should be glad to hear from the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. WEEKS. I will say to the gentleman that national banks are commercial banks.

Mr. CLAYTON. All banks are commercial.

Mr. WEEKS. I beg the gentleman's pardon, but they are not.

Mr. CLAYTON. No; not technically speaking.

Mr. WEEKS. The purpose of national banks is to keep their funds loaned for short periods and not loan them for a longer time than six months. The demand for this legislation comes from the farmers of the country. They generally have not capital enough to make their crops and they have to go to a bank and borrow money to harvest them.

Mr. CLAYTON. I am familiar with all that operation, because I live in a country where that is sometimes done. I introduced into this Congress a bill similar to this one.

Mr. WEEKS. The only security they have is their farms. Now, they can not mortgage their farms to national banks, and they frequently have to go to some agent and borrow the money at exorbitant rates. It is the purpose of this legislation to allow the farmer to borrow money temporarily to harvest his crop and to enable the banks to be secured by the only security which the farmer has, namely, his farm.

Mr. CLAYTON. May I ask the gentleman this question: Did it not appear in the course of the investigation of the committee that the law prohibiting the acceptance of land or real estate as a security for a loan by a national bank was being evaded by some national banks, evading it in this way——

Mr. WEEKS. There was no evidence to that effect.

Mr. CLAYTON. I say evading it in this way: The borrower gives his note or some personal security, or perhaps an indorsement on the note, and then afterwards, perhaps on the same day, he gives a mortgage on his land as additional security. Is not that being done now in some sections of the country by national banks contrary to the law, and has not the Comptroller of the Currency reprimanded some of the banks for doing it?

Mr. WEEKS. There was absolutely no testimony before the committee to that effect.

Mr. CLAYTON. My information is that that has been done to some extent, and I think it is better that this law should pass authorizing a loan to be made, and hence I am in favor of this bill. I think the bill might have been improved, but I shall favor it as it is. This bill will give the farmer a better chance to borrow needed money on more favorable terms than he now can if existing law be strictly observed.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Speaker, I will yield five minutes or ten minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] in order that he may answer any questions.

Mr. GARRETT. In some sections of the country, and it is particularly true in my section in Tennessee, most of the loans that are made on real estate are what are called "time loans." Now, is not this limitation providing for no longer time than twelve months which has been placed on the bill likely to be dangerous in this way, that it will cause many farms to be sold at the expiration of twelve months where the borrower is unable to raise the money to pay the debt when it becomes due? I suppose, of course, that the debt could not be renewed.

Mr. WEEKS. There is no reason why the debt could not be renewed if a satisfactory reason were given for its renewal.

Mr. GARRETT. And with the renewal would there not have to be a new mortgage and involve that additional cost or expense?

Mr. WEEKS. Yes; the matter of a couple of dollars or so, that is all.

Mr. SHERLEY. I would like to ask the gentleman this question: Upon what theory a farmer is allowed to borrow money from a national bank upon his land, and the resident of a city is not permitted to borrow upon his city real estate as security?

Mr. WEEKS. I will say to the gentleman from Kentucky that, generally speaking, in cities there are savings banks and trust companies, and of course those institutions loan on real estate; but in the country districts, where the farmers reside, there are no trust companies, and in the South and West there are few savings banks, and therefore the only place the farmer can borrow money is from a national bank which may be in the neighborhood.

Mr. SHERLEY. Then the gentleman would make the rights of citizens depend upon the facilities that they may have to do a particular business?

Mr. WEEKS. I would make it depend upon the necessities of the case. In this bill they are limited to farm mortgages, because it was the purpose of the bill to prevent loaning on real estate that was being exploited for speculative purposes.

Mr. SHERLEY. Is there any reason why real estate in a city would not be just as safe security for a loan as real estate in the country?

Mr. WEEKS. There is no reason in the world why it is not.

Mr. SHERLEY. Is there any more risk to a national bank in loaning on good city property than on good country property?

Mr. WEEKS. Not if it is a properly secured loan.

Mr. SHERLEY. Then why the restriction?

Mr. WEEKS. The restriction is because this legislation is expedient. It is the only means the farmer has to get money. Now, as a matter of fact, under present conditions he goes to his bank to borrow money to harvest his crop, and he has no security except his farm. He gives his note to the bank without any security.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman is making an assumption that does not always hold true. You are establishing a precedent whereby any particular class of men can by urging particular circumstances surrounding them have special legislation for themselves only to the exclusion of other citizens.

Mr. WEEKS. I will say to the gentleman from Kentucky, generally speaking, in cities and thickly populated communities, as I said before, there are savings banks and trust companies whose special function is to lend on real estate. They lend for a long time at low rates of interest. In this case which we are trying to cover there is no way for the farmer to get money where the bank will be secured, unless he gives his farm as security, and in this way the farmer will be able to get money at reasonable rates of interest for temporary purposes only.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Do State banks loan on real estate?

Mr. WEEKS. They do.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. They do in my State.

Mr. MARSHALL. Is it not a fact this bill provides for lending money on the farm lands, exclusive of buildings?

Mr. WEEKS. Exclusive of buildings, and at one-half the valuation.

Mr. MARSHALL. Whereas in a city the building would be additional security.

Mr. WEEKS. Yes.

Mr. MARSHALL. And the necessity of keeping up the insurance adds an additional risk other than they would have in dealing with farm lands solely.

Mr. WEEKS. Yes.

Mr. MARSHALL. Because if by any oversight the insurance was neglected, or proved to be bad, there is an element of risk there which there is not in the other, so that a loan on farm lands is different from a loan on city lands.

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to my colleague on the committee [Mr. POWERS].

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Speaker, I see no special objection to this bill, unless it is that it does not go far enough. I should see no special objection to it if it abolished all the restrictions as to the loaning of money by a national bank. Whatever reasons may have demanded them forty years ago, I doubt the necessity or wisdom of their continuance. I believe regulations hampering any business, as a rule, do more harm than good. I do not believe that there is a State in this nation where trust companies and State banks of any kind are established that puts any restriction upon the security upon which those banks may loan at least a part of their capital. I do not know any reason why the same rule which every State regards as a good one, acting in its individual capacity, might not be a proper one so far as national banks are concerned. I believe our national banking system is a good—not perfect—one. No human agencies are. It has given us a sound and safe currency. It has been a potent agency in enabling the Government to care for and refund the national debt at a low rate of interest. There has been a clamor against them in the past. It had no solid foundation to rest upon. They are no longer a political issue. The people have learned that national banks desire prosperity, not panics and commercial depression, to make money. If we can devise some means to make our currency a little more elastic, and I believe we can, at least for the present, it will amply supply all business wants.

If a small bank in a rural district has a surplus, as the law now is, and a farmer wants some of it to increase the amount of his crop, he can only get it by giving satisfactory indorsed notes, which he may not want to do, and sometimes, perhaps, may not be able to do. So the bank sends its surplus to its correspondent at some money center and gets some 2 per cent, whereas with the change this bill proposes it might get 6 per cent at home and be a great aid to production of agricultural wealth. Certainly there can be no question that these real estate loans are not safeguarded by ample security and are in the interest of the farmer, not the speculator.

Now, sir, when this national bank act was passed we had not perhaps so perfect a knowledge of banking as we have to-day. It was to some extent an experiment. Something had to be done. Banks were established more generally in large centers or cities, not in small country towns, and there is much force in what has been said by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] that to-day persons living in large centers can obtain loans from trust companies established there by the State, which have authority to make them upon real estate. To-day, by an amendment of the national-bank act made a few years ago, we have many small banks throughout the country with a capital of $25,000 and $50,000. It undoubtedly would be a great convenience for the farmers in the sections where these small banks are to be able to go to one of those banks to obtain a loan by mortgage upon their farm lands. In order to be conservative and prevent tying up the banks' funds for a long time the committee has insisted that that loan shall not be longer than for twelve months and that no bank shall loan on farm lands more than 25 per cent of its capital and surplus. There is no limitation on the right for a renewal if the borrower desires and the directors deem it advisable in whole or in part. At the end of twelve months the farmer would simply have to make his application and have it come up before the board of directors, and if the board decided it was proper and safe to continue the loan, as undoubtedly they would, if they could accommodate him—for all banks desire to oblige their customers for more or less or the same amount—he would get the renewal.

Mr. GARRETT. Will the gentleman from Maine yield for a question?

Mr. POWERS. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT. Does the gentleman think that renewal could be provided for in the first mortgage, so as to save the necessity for the second mortgage?

Mr. POWERS. I do not. I think a fair construction of this act necessarily prohibits any such provision or agreement and would make it unlawful. It makes it necessary, in order that the directors may subserve the interests of their banks, that the matter should come up de novo before them when a renewal is asked for.

Mr. GARRETT. One thing I am fearful of myself in regard to this is that it is almost providing by law that they must squeeze a man at the end of twelve months.

Mr. POWERS. Oh, no. I am not one of those who believe that it is the interest or desire of directors of national banks to injure anyone. It is a limitation necessary to prevent too long time loans.

Mr. GARRETT. I think not myself, but I was saying that it seems like it is almost making it their duty by law to squeeze the farmer whether they want to or not.

Mr. POWERS. It makes it their duty by law to compel the man, as he should, to come in and make a new application and present a reason why he wants a renewal of all or part of the loan, and that he can readily do.

Mr. GARRETT. I believe the law now is that a national bank if it acquire real estate other than that used in its business shall not hold it for a longer period than two years. This makes no change in that.

Mr. POWERS. None whatever.

Mr. GARRETT. Any real estate they might acquire by purchase to save themselves on a debt they could not hold for longer than two years.

Mr. POWERS. They could not hold it longer than the time now prescribed in the national banking laws. They would have to sell it as therein provided. Now, as to this being class legislation, as contended for by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY], I do not see it in exactly that light. In some respects a great many statutes may be termed class legislation. There is, you may say to-day, a species of favoritism in the banking laws. If I have $10,000 in bonds I can go to any bank with that collateral security and I can make a loan on it in any national bank, if they have the money. But if my friend has $10,000 worth of farm lands he can not go and borrow a dollar upon those lands. That is the conditon to-day. We purpose to put the farmer in the country in the same position to use his farm lands to procure a loan as the man in the city who has the bonds.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POWERS. Yes.

Mr. SHERLEY. Is the exception due to the fact that there is a difference in the value of the security of farm lands as against city real estate, or is it due to the fact that you want to help simply one class of people?

Mr. POWERS. It is due to the fact that we desire to help a class of people that needs the help, for the reasons given by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS].

Mr. SHERLEY. Then it is class distinction, because it is for a class and not on account of the security.

Mr. POWERS. It is a distinction which will aid certain people who need it. There is mighty little legislation in this country for the farmer as compared with some other interests not near as important.

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. Will the gentleman yield for another question?

Mr. POWERS. I want first to answer the gentleman from Kentucky. As I said before, I would take off all the limitations if I had my way, but I believe half a loaf is better than no bread, and that in this particular instance it would be good policy if we can not get more to grant what this bill provides for.

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. I want to ask the gentleman why it is that in the amendment made to this bill the committee has excluded the owner of real estate in the city, no matter whether he has bonds to borrow money on or not?

Mr. POWERS. I think the gentleman from Massachusetts made the statement that there was no special need of including him, for he had ample opportunity to borrow from trust companies in his immediate vicinity if he wanted to do so.

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. Suppose that national banks are situated in a city where there are no trust companies?

Mr. POWERS. It is not a supposable case.

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. It is a supposable case.

Mr. POWERS. Where?

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. Right in the city of Omaha, Nebr.

Mr. POWERS. I am not acquainted with Nebraska. I do not live in that State.

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. I am acquainted with it. The owners of real estate in that city are entitled to the same protection as that to which the farmers are entitled.

Mr. POWERS. Are there any savings banks in the city of Omaha, Nebr.?

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. One only.

Mr. POWERS. Where does all the great wealth of Nebraska center?

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. A large part of it centers in the city and a large part in the farm, and all I am asking is that the owners of real estate in the cities shall have the same rights and the same privileges extended to the farmers.

Mr. POWERS. Would you deprive the farmers of the right to borrow because the city people do not have it?

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. No; but if granted to the farmer you should grant it to the property owner in the city.

Mr. POWERS. I am in favor of that, but the majority of the committee was not.

Mr. GRAHAM. Would not this bill be more equitable and stronger on the floor of this House if the provision had been allowed in it in regard to real estate at large instead of farm land only?

Mr. POWERS. Personally I should have favored it that way, but that was not the view of the committee.

Mr. GRAHAM. I think the committee made a mistake. I think the bill would have been stronger if they had left it as it was originally.

Mr. POWERS. The amendments can be voted down by the House.

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN].

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, the general purposes of this bill I approve of. Some of its details I am not clearly familiar with and can not speak with regard to them.

But there is a situation in very many of the localities of the Central West that, in my judgment, ought to be alleviated. I live in a county that at the last national census contained 24,000 people. Yet, I ascertained that on one day in October last in the banks of that county there were deposits amounting to $3,180,000 that belonged largely to the farmers. One million of dollars nearly, I found from the statement of those banks, was under the head of "Due from other banks and bankers," and upon inquiry I found that that large sum of money was largely in the cities of Chicago and New York, sent there because there was no local demand for it under the possibilities that are opened to the banks to loan. The national banks can not loan it for a longer period than three months, and there was this surplus in the banks that could not be used for such loans.

There are two reasons why this act should become a law, in my judgment. One is for the accommodation of those people at home who want loans for a longer period than three months. The other is—and that is a more important one, because from that comes the peril to our finances—to keep this money out of the great money centers. When this money goes to New York there is no legitimate demand for it. That is, when I speak of legitimate demand I want to exclude from that category the stock speculations that are rife in all the business centers and that form a peril to our financial stability. This money from the country banks goes into the city banks, and its presence there is an encouragement of stock speculation. It is loaned in a way and to a class of people and on a class of security that it would not be loaned to if the banks were limited to the use of that money that belongs legitimately to their section of the country. All of the trouble that we hear of, all of the prognostications of coming disaster, are, in my judgment, the result of loans to that class of speculators that have no right to consideration from well-established and well-organized banks. The money gets tied up, and then we hear about the necessity for raising large sums in the East to move the crops.

Let me suggest to you, gentlemen, that that is an entirely mythical situation. The people of the West, the region that produces the crops, do not rely upon New York or Chicago for the money to do their business. They have a surplus. We are constantly lenders, not borrowers, from these banks, and when this period of talk occurs these gentlemen of the East are but "shinning around" to find means for the return to the West money that western banks have placed with them and that they have been induced to loan for the illegitimate purpose of stock speculation. Now, if we can, by a modification of the laws, provide a market for this Iowa money, I will say, at home, it will be kept out of the city banks.

Now, whenever one of our people desires a long loan he gets eastern money, because he can not secure the money that belongs in his own locality for the reason that the bank can not give him the time that he needs and can not accept the security he is willing to give. Therefore, to my mind, the leading feature of this bill, namely, that one that authorizes the lending of 25 per cent of the capital of the bank on real estate security, is a wise provision. It will accommodate the man at home who wants a longer period than three months. It will prevent the perils that come to us from this overspeculation in stocks. Money that is now sent from my county to New York and that brings to the home bank 2 per cent, according to the report to-day, is being loaned in New York to a speculating class of doubtful borrowers at 22 per cent on call loans. There is the reason why all of these eastern gentlemen are so unwilling that we should have this needed legislation. I hope the bill will pass. [Applause.]

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. WILLIAMS. For the purpose of addressing myself to the bill pending before the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois has the floor.

Mr. PRINCE. How much time does the gentleman desire?

Mr. WILLIAMS. About three or four minutes.

Mr. PRINCE. I yield to the gentleman five minutes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, every student of the banking systems of the world knows that a banking system resting upon landed security is as a rule unsafe. I want to call the attention of the House to the restrictions that make this bill safe for the system while it is to the highest degree advantageous to the farmer.

In the first place, Mr. Speaker, as things are now the farmer can go to a State bank and borrow upon land. If there happens to be in a town two banks, one a national bank and the other a State bank, the cashier of the State bank knows that the farmer can not borrow except from him. He gets an opportunity to hold him up for a better security or larger interest. Under the restrictions in this bill giving the power to loan upon land the security will be sufficient. There are two provisos here to which I wish to call the attention of the House, one the restriction of time during which a loan may be outstanding upon a landed security, and that has been read to the House, and the other is this:

Provided further, That applications for loans upon notes, bonds, or other evidences of debt secured by mortgages and other instruments of security on unencumbered farm lands shall be made in writing and approved in writing by the majority of the board of directors.

That forces at least a majority of the board of directors to take personal cognizance of each of these loans, and to see to it that the amount loaned is commensurate with the value of the land, is not too much in proportion to the value of the land, and that all other conditions accompanying the loan recommend it as a safe loan to the bank. I do not desire to discuss it. One of the first things I ever did when I came to Congress, in the Fifty-third Congress, was to introduce a bill to enable national banks to lend money upon land. The farmers in every district in my State are in favor of this bill or of some bill like it. There is no reason, Mr. Speaker, why the property of the farmer should not be taken as security as well as the security of other people, providing it can be made into a liquid asset; and with these two provisions it can be made into a liquid asset, because the directors will see to it that the amount lent is so small in proportion to the value of the land that the money can be gotten immediately—even by forced sale—out of the land when the bank wants it. I hope the bill will pass, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. PRINCE. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut rose.

Mr. PRINCE. Do you want some time?

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. I should like to have some.

Mr. PRINCE. You shall have it as soon as the gentleman from Missouri is through.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Speaker, in my judgment, this is a bill which ought not to pass. I think that the real issue raised by it is between the national banking system and the State banking system, and that the legislation, should the bill become a law, will be against the State banks, and will have the effect, and perhaps is designed to accomplish the end, of extending the national banking system at the expense of the various State bank systems. This I do not think to be good legislation. The national banks now have some advantages over State banks. The State banks have not the power to issue money. They can not buy bonds, deposit the bonds, get interest upon the bonds, and get back in currency the face value of the bonds. The national banks can do that. The supposed advantage to farming communities to come from this legislation is, I think, supposed, and not real. It is a fact that those who desire to borrow upon mortgage can, as things now are, borrow at less than bank rates.

Any man who has unencumbered real estate which he chooses to encumber with a mortgage as security for a loan can get the loan at a less rate, and upon better terms, through the various agencies of the country for such loaning of money than he can at any bank, State or national. It is well known everywhere that bank rates are higher than general mortgage rates. The effect of such legislation as is here urged (I need not talk about its object) will be to increase the number of national banks in the country, and decrease the number of State banks. The advantage to come to the farmer, who is the supposed beneficiary in this legislation, is purely suppositional, and, in my judgment, never will be realized in fact as the result of this legislation. It is well enough, I think, not to extend too fast or too far the powers or the functions of national banks.

The reasons, according to the report, which existed in the past for limiting national banks in making loans to the ordinary course of the banking business, I believe are existing still. The report says that the country has been settled up; that cities and towns have grown up, and farm lands are greatly advanced in value. That is given as a reason for changing the system. In my judgment it is no reason whatever. I believe the restriction was sound and beneficial in the first instance, and I believe that the soundness and good quality of it remain unimpaired.

Mr. PRINCE. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL].

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. I do not know that I can finish what I have to say in five minutes.

Mr. PRINCE. We are desirous to get along with this.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. But it is a pretty important matter, and we have the rest of this week. I understand there is no appropriation bill ready.

Mr. PRINCE. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. I do not know. If the gentleman will yield time to me I will conclude in five minutes, if I can.

Mr. PRINCE. Very well; I will give the gentleman five minutes, and then will grant him an extension, if he needs it.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I am utterly opposed to this proposition, for it will be an entering wedge for the destruction of the national banking system, in my judgment; and not only that, but it will be a panic breeder for the United States. The gentleman from Mississippi has rightly stated that the history of the world, from the organization of the banking systems of the world, has demonstrated that loans upon real estate by commercial banks have been unsound and unsafe. I lay it down as a fundamental proposition that no bank can receive deposits payable on demand and make real-estate loans with them. It is not a safe proposition.

When the national banking system was first organized, if I am not mistaken, there was no such provision in the law in regard to real estate as there is now. The law now is that real-estate mortgages or real-estate securities may be taken as security for debts previously incurred. But the makers of the national banking system found it absolutely necessary, after an experience of two, three, or four years—I do not remember the precise time—to put in this further limitation, that such real estate could not be held longer than five years. It must be sold.

Mr. LEWIS. The only way in which a national bank can take real-estate security now is where the note originally given turns out to be bad or doubtful, and they take the real estate as security.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. To secure a loan previously made?

Mr. LEWIS. To make it stronger.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. I understand that. The experience of the country was such that it became necessary to add this further provision, that such real estate must be sold and charged off from the books and not shown as an asset within five years from the time it was taken.

Now, with that experience staring us in the face, why should we deliberately go to work and open the door? That is not all. We are now probably near the moment of the consideration of a bill brought from the Banking and Currency Committee, of which I am not a member, providing for a large extension of the note circulation of this country. If the recommendation of the American Bankers' Association—not a New York Wall street committee, but a committee from all over the country—is concurred in, you will probably have the privilege of voting upon an increase of bank circulation of about $200,000,000. What is the necessity for that? Because during this year, during the past thirty days, rates of money have been 30 per cent. But my friend from Iowa says, "That is Wall street." Oh, yes; but what are the rates in Missouri; what are the rates in Montana; what are the commercial rates throughout the West? Ten per cent, 8 per cent. What is commercial paper selling for in New York? Six and one-half per cent, 7 per cent, 7½ per cent to-day. Does the Secretary of the Treasury, when he is repeatedly invited to relieve the situation, deposit the money in the Wall street banks? Not at all. He emphatically refuses to do that, but distributes it in the banks throughout the West, as he ought to do. Notwithstanding the hundreds of millions of dollars that are lying idle in the West, as claimed by the gentleman from Iowa, he is distributing the Government deposits in the West, and yet in the face of that you come in here and bring in a bill which will take $200,000,000 right out of the commercial funds of the country and make it possible to lock it up for an indefinite period in real-estate loans.

Mr. LEWIS. It is true that the Bankers' Association of the United States is asking Congress to pass a bill permitting banks to issue 37½ per cent credit money at 2½ per cent interest.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Do you need it?

Mr. LEWIS. I am not saying that.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Are you in favor of it?

Mr. LEWIS. I believe in a liberal amount of money, but I do not believe in it in that way.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Then why do you believe in taking $200,000,000 out of the commercial funds of the country and then voting for an increase of asset currency? You are practically substituting farm loans as security for your proposed asset currency in place of a Government-bond security, as now, and I can not vote for such a measure.

Mr. LEWIS. Why should not the farmers have it as well as the banks?

Mr. WEEKS. I would like to ask the gentleman what is the proportion of bank capital in this country in cities of 10,000 population?

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. That is a point that I was coming to. Why, Mr. Speaker, since 1900 some 3,500 small banks have been organized. Am I not right, I will ask the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. WEEKS. I think so.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. The facts exist as stated by the gentleman from Iowa. Banks with a capital of twenty-five to fifty thousand dollars, and deposits approaching $1,000,000 in some cases find it difficult to loan their funds. I say to you, gentlemen, that the one financial danger that stares this country in the face is the bank of small capital and enormous deposits. The only margin of safety to the depositor that he has is the amount of capital. That is all. That is the only margin of safety, and I am not talking about this question from a personal interest, for the bank in which I am an officer will never loan a dollar on real estate with all the bills that you may pass, and the bank that the gentleman from Massachusetts is associated with never will.

Mr. WEEKS. I think that is true.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. And this proposition is a financial danger to this country. It has proved so in every country in the world. Why do you limit it to the farmers? Is not the real estate worth doubly and trebly more in the city of Omaha than it is outside? Why do you limit it simply to the farm? If you are going into it, why not go into it on a broad scale?

Mr. BRUMM. Would the gentleman favor going into it on a broad scale?

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. I am utterly opposed to the whole thing. The financial system of this country has provided one class of banks for loans on real estate. Your State banks can do it, your savings banks can do it, your insurance companies can do it, your individuals can do it. But the Government comes in and says, We will organize a commercial system of banks that shall not loan on anything except liquid assets. Gentlemen, it is a dangerous proposition for the banking system of this country to accept deposits on demand and make loans at twelve months on real estate.

Mr. BRUMM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Certainly.

Mr. BRUMM. Is it not true that the fact that banks in the country districts can not loan money on real estate is one reason why you have congestion of money in the moneyed centers certain periods and scarcity of money in certain other periods, and that that is the most dangerous problem that bankers and financiers are attempting to solve to-day, while if the country banks shall be permitted to make loans on real-estate security they will keep their money at home, and in that way have a more equal distribution of the money all over the country at all seasons of the year?

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. I will answer the gentleman's question. Take it through the greater part of the newer portion of the country the rates of interest are 10 per cent on commercial paper. Why does a bank from Montana or North Dakota send money to New York and leave it there at 2 per cent when it can loan it at 10 per cent at home?

Mr. BRUMM. Simply because they can not get the security.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Are they going to bring it back and loan it on the real estate at 10 per cent?

Mr. BRUMM. Simply because they can not get the security.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Not at all. The money they send to New York is reserve money which they put there to protect their depositors, and it is wise banking.

Mr. LEWIS. But oftentimes in the Western States—and it is true of the Southern States—during the crop time they have so much money out there that they can not loan it out.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Then why don't the rates of interest come down from 10 to 6 per cent?

Mr. LEWIS. Money is often loaned at 6 and 8 per cent.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. They are loaning it at 8 and 9 and 10 and 12 per cent. Why don't they reduce the rate of interest and encourage business in their own locality by loaning the money out at 5 and 6 per cent as we do?

Mr. LEWIS. What was the rate on call loans in New York City yesterday?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I would ask the gentleman from Connecticut where it is in the West that they loan money at 8 and 10 and 12 per cent?

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. I will ask any gentleman on this floor from any of the Western States what the rate of interest is at his home. What are they in Washington—from 8 to 10 per cent, are they not?

Several MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. I made a loan just before I left at 6 per cent.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. That is because the gentleman stands in magnificent credit, both financially and politically.

Mr. BRUMM. No better credit than real estate would be.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. I am speaking of the average rate of discounts in the West. It runs from 8 to 10 per cent, and so long as interest stands at such rates as that on commercial paper it is absolutely useless for any Representative from those States to talk about their banks loaning money on real estate at any less rate.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Connecticut has expired. The time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PRINCE] has also expired.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Speaker, I yield any time I may have to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PRINCE].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PRINCE] is recognized for one hour, yielded to him by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS].

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Massachusetts for the time, because I had given mine practically all away, both to those in favor of the bill and those in opposition. Do I understand that the gentleman from Connecticut wishes more time?

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Yes.

Mr. PRINCE. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Oh, I will be brief as I can. I will be through in five minutes, perhaps less.

Mr. PRINCE. I will yield five minutes more to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I want to call the attention of Members of the House again to this proposition, that this bill is the natural outgrowth of the system of small banks with enormous deposits, and that such a system is an unsafe one in itself. The retention of the reserve in the reserve centers—and it does not necessarily follow that that center is in New York, for that reserve may be kept in San Francisco, or St. Louis, or Chicago, or in any of the reserve centers—is required by law and the amount generally is determined by the law compelling a reserve of 15 per cent against the enormous deposits of which we have heard. The country bank does that and keeps it a little larger than is necessary, because they are getting 2 per cent interest on that portion of their deposits with the reserve agent, whereas on the amount they keep in the vaults of the bank they get no interest whatever. So that it is useless to talk, as I said, about the injustice of large deposits by the western banks in the reserve-city banks, because they are doing it for the protection of their depositors, and in addition to that they are getting their 2 per cent rate of interest. Of course they would not keep it there beyond the required reserve if they could loan it at home at 10 per cent. Now, to-day I recognize the fact that all over this country there is a magnificent boom, not only in real estate, but in everything else. Some of us who are a little gray-headed remember that this is not a new experience. We have seen it before, and some of us have suffered bitterly by reason of being let in on the top of the boom. The time is coming when the banks of this country that make their loans on real estate—the new banks, these young banks, these $25,000 banks with half a million to a million dollars of deposits—will be called upon to pay their depositors. How are they going to do it with twelve months' loans on real estate to 25 per cent of their capital? Twenty-five thousand dollars out of a million, with 25 per cent of their capital locked up in real estate and a million dollars of deposits to be handed out on demand!

Mr. WEEKS. Will the gentleman from Connecticut allow me to correct the statement he has just made?

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Certainly; correct anything I say that is wrong.

Mr. WEEKS. You were speaking of a bank with $25,000 capital and a million dollars of deposits. That bank can only loan $6,250. You just stated it could loan $250,000.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. I did not intend so to state. I understand the situation perfectly, but I say this, that in the case of a bank with a small capital, with its $6,250 loaned on real estate on twelve months' loans and which is responsible for a half million or more of call deposits when the time comes, that you can not afford to have your bank in that position. Now, the gentleman is a banker himself, and I want to ask him fairly and squarely if he believes that it is sound banking for deposits payable on demand to be invested in twelve months' loans?

Mr. WEEKS. As a director of a bank, I would not loan on——

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Of course you would not. Can you conscientiously vote to allow other people to do what you would not do yourself?

Mr. WEEKS. I can, because I think the needs of the country require it, and——

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Then the gentleman's conscience is more elastic than mine.

Mr. MARSHALL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Certainly.

Mr. MARSHALL. When these hard times come and the bank needs to realize on its securities——

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Yes.

Mr. MARSHALL. Does not the gentleman know that these very same mortgages on farm lands are the most salable and they are the best security that he can have to realize on?

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. I admit it, but that does not alter the fact they are not liquid securities and realizable at the moment. I admit the soundness and safeness of them, based, of course, on reasonable wisdom in valuation in making the loan originally.

Mr. MARSHALL. If that is true, what difference does it make whether the bank collects its money out of the borrower or whether it disposes of it in the market and realizes on it?

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. It can not pay its deposits, and when the line begins to break, it breaks all the way through.

Mr. MARSHALL. No, indeed——

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Just one moment. The proviso on page 2, "that any such loan on farm-lands security shall not be for a longer term than twelve months," amounts to nothing. Any board of directors, any president, with that proviso in there, will simply make the loan, say, for twelve months, and if he chooses, renew it on the same day for another twelve months.

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Speaker, I now yield three minutes to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA], and after he concludes I shall ask for the previous question on the bill and amendments to final passage.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. Speaker, this bill is absolutely in the interest of the people in the West. It is in the interest not only of the banker but of the farmer or borrower. I am a banker myself in a small way, and I know that if this bill is passed it will help not only the farmers to get money at lower rates of interest, but it will help the bankers and the national banking institutions and enable them to loan their money on the best security that can possibly be had—security that no bank needs to lose a dollar on, if judiciously placed. I want to give you one illustration. I have a State bank with a $25,000 capital, and last winter when I tried to change it to a national bank I could not do it, because the securities in that bank were partly real estate. In some sections of the West—that, in the new-settled country—as you know, we are not rich. The farmers have a limited amount of personal property, and we take as collateral real-estate security in order to be secure and safe. When I applied to the Comptroller of the Currency for a charter for a national bank I was refused a charter because we had real-estate security, although under ordinary circumstances the personal security was ample, but under the present law no national bank is permitted to take real-estate security. I want to say to you that I have been interested in a national bank with a capital of $200,000, which was located in a city where they had no farm security, and the bank failed. I have been interested in banks in smaller towns with a capital of from ten thousand to twenty-five thousand dollars, and those banks are doing business to-day. So it does not necessarily follow that a bank with the largest capital is the safest.

Now, let me show you what it is doing to the farmer and the borrower. We will say that a farmer has but little personal property, he is obliged to pay the highest rate of interest to the banks; and why? Because the banker is not permitted to loan the money that belongs to the banks upon real estate; and I claim it is an injustice to the farmer and borrower, and it is unjust to the banker of the West, and I know that 99 per cent of the bankers there are in favor of this bill. I hope it will pass. [Applause.]

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Speaker, I now move the previous question on the bill and amendments to its final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The question was taken; and the amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. GILLESPIE. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 113, noes 44.

Accordingly, the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and was read a third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 111, noes 51.

So the bill was passed.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the amendment of the title to the bill will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

On motion of Mr. PRINCE, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH IN PHILIPPINES.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I herewith submit to the Congress the report of the Secretary of War and of the Judge-Advocate-General in reference to the claims presented by the representatives of the Roman Catholic Church for amounts due from the United States to the various Roman Catholic churches in the islands for use and occupation by troops of the United States and for damages during such occupation. I cordially indorse all that is said in these reports, and earnestly hope that the amount recommended by the board will be immediately appropriated, in order to do what is really an act of substantial justice to the Roman Catholic churches of the Philippines, in accordance with the suggestion of the Secretary of War. It is not only a matter of equity that we should pay this sum, but for the reasons set forth by the Secretary of War it is very greatly to the interest of the people of the Philippine Islands that it should be paid. I have accordingly approved the action of the Secretary of War in directing that the same board be reconvened, or another convened, to report on the advisability of paying additional sums to the Roman Catholic churches in the islands, in view of the damages inflicted upon them by reason of the war and by the insurrectos. I feel that this is peculiarly a case where in the interest of the Philippine people themselves it would be wise for the Congress to exercise a large liberality.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, December 5, 1906.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not prepared at this time to determine to which committee the message shall be referred.

Subsequently,

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires the attention of the House to the message of the President, touching "claims presented by the representatives of the Roman Catholic Church for amounts due from the United States to the various Roman Catholic churches in the island for use and occupation by troops of the United States, and for damages during such occupation," etc. The Chair is in doubt as to the proper reference of this message. Offhand, perhaps, under the rules, the proper reference would be to the Committee on War Claims; but from a broader view, touching the Philippines, the Chair is inclined to think possibly the substance of the rules would be more fully met by its reference to the Committee on Insular Affairs. If the House has a preference as to its reference——

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, if it is in order, I move that it be referred to the Committee on Insular Affairs.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves that the message be referred to the Committee on Insular Affairs.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

So the message was referred to the Committee on Insular Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

LEGISLATION FOR ALASKA.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, referred to the Committee on Territories, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit the accompanying papers relative to the present needs of the Territory of Alaska in matters of legislation and government, and heartily commend the views of Governor Hoggatt to the favorable consideration of the Congress.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, December 5, 1906.

NOTE.—Papers accompanied similar message to the Senate.

AUTHORITY TO DISMISS AN OFFICER OF THE NAVY IN TIME OF PEACE.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I feel it my duty to call your attention to the facts that, under the provisions of articles 36 and 37 of the Articles for the Government of the Navy, the President has no longer the authority to dismiss an officer of the Navy in time of peace unless in pursuance of a sentence of a general court-martial, and even in time of war his right of dismissal is practically subject to review by a court-martial to be assembled within six months, if the accused officer demands this court. The articles in question are in the terms following:

"ART. 36. No officer shall be dismissed from the naval service except by the order of the President or by sentence of a general court-martial; and in time of peace no officer shall be dismissed except in pursuance of the sentence of a general court-martial or in mitigation thereof.

"ART. 37. When any officer dismissed by order of the President since 3d March, 1865, makes, in writing, an application for trial, setting forth, under oath, that he has been wrongfully dismissed, the President shall, as soon as the necessities of the service may permit, convene a court-martial to try such officer on the charges on which he shall have been dismissed; and if such court-martial shall not be convened within six months from the presentation of such application for trial, or if such court, being convened, shall not award dismissal or death as the punishment of such officer, the order of dismissal by the President shall be void."

This condition of the law was called to my attention by a recent painful and humiliating incident. On May 9, 1905, an officer of the Navy was accused of behavior so indecent and disgusting as to show clearly his unfitness (if guilty, as charged) to hold a commission or associate with officers and gentlemen. The nature of the alleged misconduct and the lack of compulsory power in naval courts to enforce the attendance of civilian witnesses, as well as the locality where the offense was said to have been committed, caused a long and very unfortunate, although quite unavoidable, delay in his trial by court-martial, which did not occur until January 18, 1906. He was then convicted, but the court, while imposing a severe penalty, to my surprise, as well as that of the Navy Department, did not sentence the offender to dismissal from the service. The failure of the court to rid the Navy of one so clearly unfit to form a part of it was commented upon in appropriate terms by the Department, but it was then and has been since a source of profound regret to me that the law, as above set forth, made it impracticable for me to afford a remedy for this failure. Moreover, it is to be remembered that, owing to the inability of naval courts, as above explained, to compel the attendance of civilian witnesses, and the further fact that they have no authority to receive as evidence the depositions of absent witnesses, while the exigencies of the service may often cause officers and men cognizant of the facts to be employed in distant places at the time of the trial, there is great danger lest offenses of the nature charged against this man should go altogether unpunished. In this case it was found very difficult to overcome the natural reluctance of some of the witnesses to attend and testify.

I am convinced that the President should have the authority, upon his own initiative and responsibility, to dismiss any officer whom he thinks unworthy to remain in the service. I think there is no danger that this power would be abused, and if such danger exists at all it is so slight as to be altogether outweighed by the considerations of public policy which require this authority to be vested in the constitutional Commander in Chief of the Navy. I therefore strongly recommend that article 36, as hereinbefore given, be amended by omitting all of it after the words "general court-martial" where those words first occur therein and that article 37 be repealed.

TREATMENT OF YELLOW FEVER.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

The inclosed papers are transmitted to the Congress in the earnest hope that it will take suitable action in the matter. Major Reed's part in the experiments which resulted in teaching us how to cope with yellow fever was such as to render mankind his debtor; and this nation should in some proper fashion bear witness to this fact.

MODERN TREATMENT OF CRIMINALS BY PROBATION.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith for the consideration of the Congress a communication from Judge William H. De Lacey, setting forth some reasons why the more modern treatment of criminals by probation, so successfully tried in several of the States, should be adopted into the Federal procedure, together with a supplemental paper on the subject of child labor, to which I invite your especial attention.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, December 5, 1906.

NOTE.—Papers accompanied similar message to the Senate.

Mr. HALE. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 1804) providing for the use of certified checks to secure compliance with proposals and contracts for naval supplies.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 8124. An act to amend section 5136 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, permitting national banking associations to make loans on farm lands as security, and limiting the amount of such loans;

H. R. 11273. An act to incorporate The National German-American Alliance; and

H. R. 14587. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to issue duplicate gold certificates in lieu of ones lost or destroyed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented a petition of the One hundred and thirteenth Illinois Veteran Volunteer Infantry Association, of Watseka, Ill., praying for the enactment of certain pension legislation; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. DEPEW presented a petition of the congregation of the Second German Baptist Church, of New York City, N. Y., praying for an investigation into the existing conditions in the Kongo Free State; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a memorial of Huguenot Grange, No. 128, Patrons of Husbandry, of New Paltz, N. Y., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation providing for the free distribution of seeds and plants; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented the memorial of M. D. Pratt and 20 other citizens of Watertown, N. Y., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation requiring the closing of certain places of business in the District of Columbia on Sunday; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. CULLOM presented memorials of sundry citizens of Chicago and Decatur, in the State of Illinois, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to authorize the closing of certain places of business in the District of Columbia on Sunday; which were referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. BRANDEGEE presented a petition of the Connecticut Baptist Convention, at Hartford, Conn., praying for an investigation into the existing conditions in the Kongo Free State; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. HOPKINS presented a petition of Mattoon Council, No. 1057, Knights of Columbus, of Mattoon, Ill., praying for the enactment of legislation providing a suitable memorial to the memory of Christopher Columbus; which was referred to the Committee on the Library.

He also presented a petition of the Christian Endeavor Society of Grace Church, of Naperville, Ill., praying for the enactment of legislation to prevent the impending destruction of Niagara Falls on the American side by the diversion of the waters for manufacturing purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

HISTORY OF THE CONGRESSIONAL CEMETERY.

Mr. BURKETT. As a member of the subcommittee of the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred a bill pertaining to the granting of certain streets in the limits of the Congressional Cemetery for burial purposes, I will state that the subcommittee has gone very considerably into the history and a search has been made of the laws and records pertaining to the Congressional Cemetery. The paper which has been prepared is needed by the committee, and perhaps others, in the further consideration of the bill. I ask that this compilation of records and statutes may be printed as a Senate document.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nebraska reports from the Committee on the District of Columbia a paper entitled "History of the Congressional Cemetery," and asks that it may be printed as a document. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

MARY LAJORD.

Mr. KEAN, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. NELSON, reported it without amendment; and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay to Mary Lajord, widow of Thomas Lajord, late a messenger of the United States Senate, a sum equal to six months' salary at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his death, said sum to be considered as including funeral expenses and all other allowances.

PRESENTATION OF PRIVATE BILLS AND PETITIONS.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I have forgotten what is the scope of the rule of the last session with reference to pension bills. Can they be referred without a formal presentation?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. After the morning hour they may be referred by handing them to the Secretary of the Senate.

Mr. HALE. And also petitions?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Petitions may also be handed in.

The rule adopted at the last session bearing upon this subject is, in part, as follows:

Senators having petitions, memorials, pension bills, bills for the payment of private claims, or for the correction of naval or military records to present after the morning hour may deliver them to the Secretary of the Senate, indorsing upon them their name and the reference or disposition to be made thereof, and said petitions, memorials, and bills shall, with the approval of the presiding officer, be entered on the Journal, etc.

ADDITIONAL CLERK FOR COMMITTEE ON INDIAN AFFAIRS.

Mr. CLAPP submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Indian Affairs be authorized to employ an additional clerk until March 4, 1907, who shall be paid at the rate of $120 per month out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

LUMBER TRADE INVESTIGATION.

Mr. KITTREDGE. I submit a resolution and ask that it be read and lie on the table.

The resolution was read, and ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of Commerce and Labor be, and he is hereby, authorized and instructed immediately to inquire, investigate, and report to Congress, or to the President when Congress is not in session, from time to time as the investigation proceeds, as to the lumber trade or business of the United States which is the subject of interstate or foreign commerce and make full inquiry into the cause or causes of the high prices of lumber in its various stages of manufacture from the log; and the said investigation and inquiry shall be conducted with the particular object of ascertaining whether or not there exists among any corporations, companies, or persons engaged in the manufacture or sale of lumber any combination, conspiracy, trust, agreement, or contract intended to operate in restraint of lawful trade or commerce in lumber or to increase the market price of lumber in any part of the United States.

To carry out and give effect to the provisions of this resolution the Secretary shall have power to issue subpœnas, administer oaths, examine witnesses, require the production of books and papers, and receive depositions taken before any proper officer in any State in the United States.

That the Secretary of Commerce and Labor be required to make the said investigation at his earliest possible convenience and to furnish the information above required from time to time and as soon as it can be done consistent with the performance of his public duties.

PANAMA RAILROAD.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, if I am in order, I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the resolution I offered on yesterday, with a view of submitting some remarks upon it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. PETTUS for Mr. MORGAN, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Interoceanic Canals is directed to inquire and report by bill, or otherwise, whether any or what action of Congress is necessary to bring the alleged corporation of the Panama Railroad within the direct control of the Isthmian Canal Commission or of the Government of the United States.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. MORGAN. Certainly.

Mr. HALE. I do not wish to interfere with the Senator if he desires to debate his resolution. Of course we all understand that when a Senator introduces a resolution upon any subject and desires to speak upon it that courtesy is granted him. But I wanted to ask the Senator whether he proposes.

after his remarks, if he makes them, any action upon the resolution?

Mr. MORGAN. Not to-day.

Mr. HALE. The President has indicated that he will, at a very near day, submit to Congress a special message upon the subject of the Isthmian Canal, which he has personally investigated, so far as he was able to do so in a short time. In view of that I think the Senator will agree with me that as the message from the President, covering all subjects, and undoubtedly the subject of the Senator's resolution, will soon come in——

Mr. MONEY. If the Senator will excuse me, it is impossible to hear him here.

Mr. MORGAN. The remarks I expect to submit to the Senate to-day are exactly pertinent to the resolution I offered, and they relate to the Panama Railroad Company and the disposition the Congress of the United States ought to make of that very intricate, tangled, and difficult question. I presume the President's message will relate to the Panama Canal, and my speech does not.

Mr. BACON. We are equally in trouble about hearing the Senator from Alabama since he has gone over to be near the Senator from Maine. We can not hear what the Senator from Alabama says. We do not know in this part of the Chamber what has been said by either of the Senators.

Mr. MORGAN. The Senator from Maine, as I understand it, thinks that out of some courtesy to the President of the United States I ought to defer my remarks upon my resolution until the President's message comes in.

Mr. HALE. No; if the Senator will allow me, he is entirely wrong. I do not think the Senator should refrain from making his remarks on his resolution, but I do not think any action should be taken at this time.

Mr. MORGAN. No; I do not wish to take any action to-day.

Mr. HALE. If no action is contemplated by the Senator, I do not think there is any reason for interposing. I do not in any way seek to interfere with the Senator in his remarks.

Mr. MORGAN. All right.

Mr. President, I will ask that the Secretary again read the resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolution at the request of the Senator from Alabama.

The Secretary again read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Interoceanic Canals is directed to inquire and report by bill, or otherwise, whether any or what action of Congress is necessary to bring the alleged corporation of the Panama Railroad within the direct control of the Isthmian Canal Commission or of the Government of the United States.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I wish to present some facts and pertinent observations on the subject of the Panama Railroad, not with a view to the control of its commercial operations by substituting new plans for the conduct of its business or of regulating such conduct, but to place it and its earnings and expenditures and its accountability and management in proper relations of lawful authority and responsibility to the Government of the United States.

I am thoroughly satisfied that no more important legislation connected with the Panama Canal requires the immediate attention of Congress, and this view of the subject includes the preservation of our honor and integrity in respect of our commerce with foreign countries.

To bring this feature of my statement directly to the consideration of Congress and to show its pressing importance, I will present one statement made by the Secretary of War in a recent communication made by him to the chairman of the Committee on Interoceanic Canals.

The Secretary of War, in a paper dated June 28, 1906, sent to Hon J. H. MILLARD, chairman of the Committee on Interoceanic Canals, to be incorporated in the hearings of the committee, in which he argues in favor of the maintenance of the present relations of the Panama Railroad Company to the Isthmian Canal Commission and the preservation of the present nominal existence of that company under its charter by the State of New York, says:

The whole road is therefore completely under the control of the Isthmian Canal Commission. Meantime the artificial entity of the railroad company is maintained, and most conveniently so, in order that it may discharge the duty of a common carrier doing a commercial business, which, under the existing treaty stipulations, the United States would have no right to evade or escape.

The Secretary of War does not state "the existing treaty stipulations" which "the United States would have no right to evade or escape," or how they would be evaded or escaped if the Canal Commission, chartered by Congress, should conduct or discharge the duty of a common carrier doing a commercial business.

I am not informed, except by the statement or allusions of the Secretary of War, that any treaty stipulations exist which prohibit the United States from engaging in the business of a common carrier or from discharging the duty of a common carrier engaged in commercial business, especially between its own home ports, as is the case between our continental and insular ports, and the ports of La Boca and Cristobal in the Canal Zone.

If there are treaty stipulations with foreign countries that contain such prohibitions as to the carrying of trade between foreign ports, I am not aware of them.

If such prohibitions exist in the stipulations of treaties with foreign powers, they are evaded and escaped by the maintenance of an "artificial entity"—a dead dummy—such as the Panama Railroad Company is, if evasion or escape from responsibility is sought by the United States. The idea that this Government stands in need of a legal fiction or an "artificial entity" to hold it to the discharge of its obligations or its duty as a common carrier, is not only fictitious, but it is by no means creditable.

The United States owns the charter, the property, and the stock of the Panama Railroad Company absolutely and without exception or reservation, and has enacted laws for the construction of a canal that will virtually destroy the great leading purposes for its creation, as they are declared in its charter. The opening of the canal will destroy the main object of its creation, as stated in its charter, which was to work out a concession from Colombia, now adopted and ratified by Panama, for a commercial railway, almost exclusively for foreign commerce, to connect the Atlantic and Pacific oceans or to bridge the Continental Divide between them at Panama.

When this great commercial purpose is abrogated by agreement between the owner of the railroad and the grantor of the concession, there is an end of the original uses and purposes declared in the New York charter, and a dissolution of the corporate franchise, at the option of the United States, as to all the world, except the creditors of the railroad company.

The United States is supreme sovereign over this property, under the Hay-Varilla treaty, as well as its sole and exclusive owner, and can pay, as it has already assumed, the debts of all creditors and compel a final liquidation of them at any day it may prescribed. No creditor could possibly have a standing in any court to make objection to or to contest the validity of such an act of Congress.

If Congress should enact a law for tearing up the Panama Railroad, no creditor could enjoin such a destruction of the property.

Certainly none could object to the assertion of the Secretary of War that this railroad company has become an "artificial entity." As such it must be considered, and not as a legal entity.

The device of mental ingenuity that has been employed to embalm the remains of the New York corporation as an "artificial entity" and to give it the semblance of legal validity has taxed to exhaustion the commercial-lawyer craft, the wrecker craft, and the promoters' craft of a brilliant mind, that has used this same corporation in many financial, strategic, and diplomatic exploits that have resulted in national strifes and bloodshed and in ruin to a vast number of innocent people.

I will refer to some of these facts in the course of my remarks and to some of the reasons why the continued use of the corporate name and powers of this company is preserved as an artificial entity.

The Secretary of War, in the statement to which I have referred, gives the following account of the legerdemain employed in constructing this artificial entity:

It hardly seems to me worth while to answer the suggestion with reference to the method by which directors are qualified to sit upon the board under the New York laws. One share of stock is sold by the Government to each director, who pays for the stock, and when he receives the certificate indorses it in blank and signs an irrevocable power of attorney to the United States to transfer it again to the United States on demand, the United States paying $10 to make valid and binding the option to take over the stock. In this way the director is qualified, and in this way the United States obtains power to obtain the share whenever it is needed and to qualify some one else for the director. The members of the Commission constitute the majority of the board of directors, the chairman of the Commission is the president of the road, and a majority of the executive committee are persons connected with the Commission and directly under the orders of the chairman or president.

The whole road is therefore completely under the control of the Isthmian Canal Commission. Meantime the artificial entity of the railroad company is maintained, and most conveniently so, in order that it may discharge the duty of a common carrier doing a commercial business, which under the existing treaty stipulations the United States would have no right to evade or escape.

The "artificial entity" is thus correctly, but very meagerly, described as to its origin and growth by the Secretary of War. It supplanted seven of the thirteen directors of the company who had no connection with the Panama Canal, and it very gradually took on an infusion of seven canal commissioners, and of new blood in the persons of Señor Obaldia, minister from Panama, and Farnham, clerk of Cromwell.

Cromwell stood to his colors and remained a stockholder, director, member of the executive committee, and general counsel of the Panama Railroad Company since 1893, and general counsel of the New Panama Canal Company since 1896, and general counsel of Panama in her infantile hours, and member and general counsel of the Panama legation at Washington. He holds these and other places connected with the Government of Panama to this day.

Cromwell was sole artificer of this "artificial entity," and he is the only known person who has any need for it. As general counsel his powers, coupled with those of director, and with those of Director Farnham and Director Obaldia, and his influence in other quarters, has been and is as nearly absolute in the control of the railroad as if he was sole owner of the entire stock of the company.

The many offices and functions of Mr. Cromwell, connected with the acquisition and control of the canal and railroad property in Panama, and with every stage of the history of that transaction, and his close advisory relations with the President and Secretary of War, which he has industriously and persistently pressed upon them, and his interference with other officers connected with the canal, and his participation, as the diplomatic agent of the Government of Panama, in negotiating a protocol, or modus vivendi, with the Secretary of War touching tariff duties, finance, postal affairs, and the rights and privileges of the United States in respect of supplying food to canal employees and laborers, signalize him as one of the persons referred to in the message of the President of January 8, 1906, in which he says:

I court the fullest, most exhaustive, and most searching investigation of any act of theirs, and if any one of them is ever shown to have done wrong, his punishment shall be exemplary.

The Senate responded to this invitation immediately, and on the 9th of January, 1906, adopted the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Interoceanic Canals, or any subcommittee thereof, be, and are hereby, authorized and directed to investigate all matters relating to the Panama Canal and the government of the Canal Zone and the management of the Panama Railroad Company, to send for persons and papers, and to administer oaths, and employ a stenographer to report such hearings; and that the committee be authorized to sit during the sessions or recess of the Senate, and that all expenses thereof be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

The investigation of "all matters relating to the Panama Canal and the government of the Canal Zone and the management of the Panama Railroad Company" would necessarily include Director and General Counsel Cromwell, and the conspicuous adviser and actor in their most important affairs. The committee could no more overlook him in their investigations than it could neglect to inquire into the conduct and character of the seven Canal Commissioners whose names were sent to the Senate at the same time for confirmation, and were referred to it for investigation.

The conduct and character of all the officers and appointees were put in issue by earnest suggestions of the President. As character does not date from a special time or a special event, or a certain employment, the examination into character and the conduct of which it is the outgrowth is not limited to a given period of time.

Several of the most important men officially connected with the canal and railroad were examined before the committee, and the conspicuous interference of Mr. Cromwell in the business of officers of the canal was shown in their testimony. This was notably the fact in the testimony of John F. Wallace, chief engineer, who had resigned his office.

The committee continued its labors almost daily in the examination of witnesses from the 11th of January until the 26th of February, when Mr. Cromwell was called by direction of the chairman. On his appearance, in great form, he had a written statement, which showed much care in preparation. The opening was as follows:

Mr. CROMWELL. Mr. Chairman, I observe from the testimony before the committee that it is a matter of interest upon your part to more definitely learn the facts concerning certain subjects relating to Panama Canal affairs with which I have had anything to do since the purchase of the canal by the United States, and I thank you for the opportunity. My law firm, Sullivan & Cromwell, have been the general counsel of the Panama Railroad Company for over twelve years and of the New Panama Canal Company for nine years.

Mr. Cromwell, foreseeing the evil, like the wise man, hid himself behind the time limit, saying: "I observe from the testimony before the committee that it is a matter of interest upon your part to more definitely learn the facts relating to Panama Canal affairs with which I have had anything to do since the purchase of the canal by the United States, and I thank you for the opportunity."

Cromwell disclosed, as part of his written statement, facts and assertions that tended to impeach the testimony of John F. Wallace given before the committee on his previous examination; thereupon the following questions were asked the witness and his answers thereto were taken:

Senator MORGAN. Wait a moment, Mr. Cromwell.
Mr. CROMWELL (continuing). And with the view of an indefinite stay there.
Senator MORGAN. Wait a moment. Is it your purpose, in bringing forward this statement in respect of Mr. Wallace, to contradict and impeach him?
Mr. CROMWELL. I am stating facts.
Senator MORGAN. What is your purpose in bringing it forward? You have been asked no questions. What is your purpose in bringing this forward?
Mr. CROMWELL. I am stating facts, Senator.
Senator MORGAN. What is your purpose?
Mr. CROMWELL. The purpose indicated by the facts.
Senator MORGAN. That is to impeach and contradict him?
Mr. CROMWELL. It is to state the facts as they exist, and I suppose the committee desire the facts.
Senator MORGAN. Do you intend to contradict him?
Mr. CROMWELL. If the facts contradict him, he is contradicted.
Senator MORGAN. Do you intend to impeach him?
Mr. CROMWELL. If the facts impeach him, he is impeached.

The character of an impeaching witness is always in issue, and Mr. Cromwell, in his effort to impeach Wallace, invited scrutiny into his conduct, especially in respect of Panama Railroad and Panama Canal matters at any and all times when he was officially connected with those companies.

If there could be any legal or other reason for limiting his testimony to the period since the railroad and canal were taken over by the United States, he brushed it away when he voluntarily became a witness to impeach Wallace, and he opened up the investigation of his character and fitness to be a dummy stockholder in the railroad and a director thereof and a member of its executive committee and its general counsel to the limit of the demand for investigation which the President says he courted at the hands of Congress.

But in matters that are far more important to the people and Government of the United States and of Colombia, Panama, and France, Cromwell's conduct in dealing with the Panama Canal and railroad since his first connection with each of these corporations was such that the committee, under the orders of the Senate "to investigate all matters relating to the Panama Canal and the government of the Canal Zone and the management of the Panama Railroad Company" was bound to investigate.

While Cromwell's fitness for office is involved in all the history of his dealings with those corporations, the dangerous use he has made of such opportunities, both before and since their property was turned over to the United States, which he can continue to make, are matters that require investigation and action by Congress.

If the Panama Railroad Company is still a New York corporation, with the same powers and rights it possessed before the majority of the stock was obtained by the old Panama Canal Company, and if said rights and powers are legally unaffected by the ownership of the stock and property by the United States, the board of directors are not restricted in their independence of action by such ownership.

In this undeniable state of facts we can not fail to see that the door is wide open to the majority of the board of directors to make regulations as to the transportation of commerce, or of material for canal construction, or of laborers, or employees, or suplies of food, that would retard or prevent work on the canal for indefinite periods of time.

Should such things happen through the wicked recalcitrancy of directors or of the executive committee, or for reasons that are fully justified in law, morals, honesty, or public policy, what could the President, or Secretary of War, or the Canal Commission, or the superintendent of the railroad do to meet and overcome the difficulty and save the canal? The answer is that they could do nothing legally, or even by force. The Secretary of War, in his statement to the committee of the Senate, suggests that the directors who opposed the will of the President or the Commission would have their stock ownership canceled, and would thereby be disqualified as directors and their places could be filled by appointment. In this he fails to notice that the President has no power to appoint directors in a New York corporation.

Let us go a step further and assume that the recalcitrant railroad directors are Isthmian Canal Commissioners and that the President can remove them from office as commissioners and replace them with others that will obey his orders. We see that the case becomes still more difficult, because the substituted commissioners, acting on their conscience, may do the same thing for which the others were expelled from office.

In all these suppositions the courts would sustain the directors in the honest exercise of their official rights and powers and the President would be denied the power to prescribe to them a special line of conduct.

I have referred to such possible difficulties to ask the attention of the Senate to the remedy for such unnecessary conflict between the moribund New York corporation and the vital powers of the Canal Commission, which is to disregard the charter of the Panama Railroad Company in respect of all operations of the railroad and place the power where it rightfully belongs, in the conduct of the Isthmian Canal Commission.

I will assume, in supporting this suggestion, that there is always harmony of action, if not full agreement, between the President and the Isthmian Canal Commission; but if there should be discord between them it would still be true, under the Spooner law, that the President must construct the canal through the Isthmian Canal Commission and not without their concurrence or in spite of their refusal to consent to his plans or procedure. The importance of this check upon the power delegated to the President, that he shall construct the canal through the Commission, can not be overestimated. Without it any wild, arrogant, or ignorant person who may happen to be President could inflict injury upon the country that many generations of our people could not outlive. With this check reason and experience can be appealed to to prevent headlong folly or corrupt action.

The President is not permitted to construct the canal through or in harmony with a board of directors of the Panama Railroad Company. That instrumentality being an indisputable factor in the work of canal construction, and being the exclusive property of the United States, when Congress empowered the President to construct the canal through the Canal Commission it no more authorized him to take the rightful control of the railroad from the Commission and place it or leave it in a board of railroad directors than it authorized him to take up the railroad and dispense with its further use.

Above all, it is a blow at the entire work of railroad construction to place the motive power that controls it in the hands of persons, as directors, who are independent of the Commission and are mere agents of an independent New York corporation.

I have said that Cromwell and his following on the board of railroad directors can work mischief to the country that will cause us shame and millions of money. If he and his following were considered, or had the right to be considered as being in the foremost rank of trustworthy men, I would feel bound to point out these things and to warn my countrymen of the dangers that underlie them. The fact that changes in the railroad directorate are possible every year, and in the Canal Commission they have been very frequent, in either case the liability to put bad men in authority is perilous; and, next, the fact that there are no safeguards except impeachment and dismissal from office to protect the country from the Commissioners, and none whatever to protect the country from faithless directors.

In the contract proposed for the construction of the canal the rates of transportation of employees and of contractors and their families is one-half the rates charged to others for like services. The fixing of the rates is not provided for, but, under the New York charter, this is done by the board of directors.

The proposed contract binds the Government to keep up a line of ships between New York and Panama, and San Francisco and Panama, to furnish transportation for laborers and others at half rates, which means that the Government will pay half the costs of such transportation at reasonable rates. I refer to this as showing one item in which the railroad board of directors will control enormous commercial interests at discretion.

To further illustrate the great control that the railroad company exerts over foreign commerce I will quote from the deposition of Richard L. Walker (Hearings, pp. 3042–3043) the following statement of the steamship lines with which the Panama Railroad Company has special traffic agreements to share in their freight and passenger receipts at the rate of 25 per cent on every voyage for transportation across the Isthmus:

Senator MORGAN. I will get you, if you please, Mr. Walker, to give the names of the different steamship lines with whom you have this through billing arrangement to-day.

Mr. WALKER. The Royal Mail Steam Packet Company, from London, Southampton, and New York to Colon; the Leyland Line and the Harrison Line, from Liverpool to Colon; the Hamburg-Amerika Line, from Hamburg and Antwerp to Colon; the Compagnie Générale Transatlantique, from various ports of France to Colon; La Volace, from Italian and Mediterranean ports to Colon; the Compania Transatlantica, from Barcelona and Spanish ports to Colon; the Hamburg-Amerika Line, from New York to Colon; the United Fruit Company, from New Orleans to Colon; the Compania Sud Americana de Vapores, from the west coast of South America to Panama; the Pacific Steam Navigation Company, from the west coast of South America to Panama; the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, from San Francisco and the way ports of Mexico and South America to Panama. I think that is all.

I could add to this statement other very heavy transactions, yielding profits, that are controlled exclusively by the Panama Railroad Company without the knowledge of the members of the Commission, who hold nominal or perfunctory relations to the railroad company as members of the board of directors. As I am stating, in a general way, the abuses to which the Government is exposed through the operations of this railroad company—this "artificial entity"—I will not take time to go into the many instances in which the evidence shows that this free-lance corporation is robbing the people and the Government.

A blind confidence in Mr. Shonts as superintendent of the railroad and Mr. Drake as deputy of Mr. Shonts and Mr. Cromwell as general counsel and Mr. Farnham, his clerk, and Señor Obaldia, minister plenipotentiary from Panama, seems to have saved the Secretary of War from much trouble in superintending railroad matters and in giving out orders to the board of directors, as matters progressed; but it has frequently entailed upon him much perplexity in the post-factum examination of their doings and in revoking their action and excusing their misconduct. The general counsel seems to have been leading counsel in most of these flagrant offenses and is happy in receiving compliments where he deserved punishment.

The "statement" of the Secretary of War submitted to the chairman of the committee on the 28th of June, 1906, after the committee had agreed that no more testimony should be taken until December, I will ask leave to append to my remarks.

In that statement the Secretary enters upon a careful and elaborate defense of Mr. Cromwell against what he calls "suggestions" that had been made in the committee. These suggestions were only questions that were put to Cromwell and Drake while they were endeavoring to explain transactions of the board of directors of the railroad company, that were called to their attention. No argument or suggestion from any member of the committee to emphasize the gravity of the facts as they were detailed was necessary, and no charge was made that did not necessarily arise out of the facts stated by the witnesses.

It seems to me that the belated statement of the Secretary of War is an effort to explain away the facts, rather than to show that any incorrect "suggestions" as to the culpability of Cromwell had been made by any committeeman in the course of the examination.

Cromwell himself could not have written a more astute and plausible argument to excuse or justify these palpable wrongs and frauds against the Government. The fine distinctions he makes as to the rights of stockholders to distribute among themselves, as dividends, money that had been expended necessarily in betterments on the railroad before the United States had acquired the property and to pay these dividends out of cash in the treasury of the company, and by selling bonds of the company, is worthy of the nice inventive skill and the professional ethics of Cromwell.

The difficulty with the explanation of the Secretary of War is that it does not explain. It confuses the situation and is very like the efforts of Cromwell, Drake, and Deming in their testimony before the subcommittee of the Committee of the House on Interstate and Foreign Commerce in February, 1905, to explain how a cash dividend could be honestly declared and paid to stockholders out of money that had been expended in improvements and betterments on the property of the corporation two or three years before the declaration of the dividend. Their stock had been increased in value by such improvements and betterments, but they also wanted the money that had been so expended in addition.

Some of it, if not all of it, had been borrowed on bonds issued by the company, some of which bonds the company had paid and even destroyed, and others were still outstanding in the hands of purchasers. They left these debts unpaid and put the money in their pockets that should have been applied to them.

This was the first successful effort to disprove the truth of the homely adage, "One can not eat his pie and have it." Cromwell's neatest work of inventing plans of overreaching was done in this project of the railroad company to make the United States pay its debts, while they took the money from the Treasury that was owing to the bondholders and divided it among the stockholders. Cromwell seemed almost to have convinced the subcommittee of the House that the bookkeeping system that he so adroitly contrived to prove the justice of this robbery had actually converted the money that had been expended in betterments on the railroad one and two years previously so that it was in "liquid" cash in the treasury.

The lamp of Aladdin never wrought a more magical change of base earth into gold than was accomplished by this magic of bookkeeping. But it failed to deceive the able members of that subcommittee. In their report they left this matter open for further consideration and confined their applause to the "conspicuously able, progressive, and businesslike management" by the officers of the Panama Railroad, and say that, "owing to the shortness of the session and the great press of business the committee has not been able to take all the testimony which it otherwise would have taken."

The Secretary's suggestion that they passed upon this inquiry is not supported by the record.

They express no opinion as to the dividends or the bonded debt, or financial condition of affairs of the railroad, or as to the bookkeeping tergiversations that Cromwell, Drake, and Deming had so laborously attempted to explain. The committee were alert, searching, and remarkably apt in searching for the truth of these unique and suspicious specimens of bookkeeping legerdemain, but did not have time to come to any conclusion about them, and they dropped it from their report and only reported the evidence.

It is on this state of the record that the Secretary of War bases the following statement:

> The charge against the management of the Panama Railroad Company that the dividends had been improperly declared and bonds improperly issued was first made by General Davis when he was governor of the Canal Zone, in a separate report, as a member of the Canal Commission. The report came to my attention in January, 1905. On January 12, 1905, the House of Representatives authorized the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, or any subcommittee thereof, to investigate the affairs of the Panama Railroad Company. On January 13, 1905, a committee was appointed, consisting of the following: Mr. SHACKLEFORD, Mr. LOVERING, Mr. ESCH, Mr. TOWNSEND, and Mr. ADAMSON.
> The subcommittee reported to Congress that "the testimony shows that the management by the officers and directors of the Panama Railroad has been conspicuously able, progressive, and businesslike." This report was made after the fullest investigation into the question of dividends declared and bonds issued, and in the light of the statement of General Davis in the report already referred to. All the officers of the road were examined by the subcommittee, who went to New York for the purpose, and who examined all the books of the company.
> It did not seem to me, after this report, that it was necessary for me further to investigate the question whether the Panama Canal Company was indebted to the United States for an unlawful and improper declaration of dividends before the United States received the canal company's stock in the railroad company. But the question has now been further mooted, and I have taken occasion to investigate the exact condition of affairs in the railroad company with reference to declaration of dividends and issue of bonds.

I think no one will be found to question the universal belief that no abler, wiser, truer, more honest, or more courageous man than Gen. George W. Davis has yet been placed on the Isthmian Canal Commission.

The Secretary could not have carefully read the report of the subcommittee of the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce before he made that statement.

In order to bring the truth of history to bear on Cromwell's handling of the Panama Railroad, so far as it is available under the screen of concealment that he has so far been able to throw over it, under the assumed shelter of privilege as a lawyer preserving the secrets of his client, in defiance of the rulings of the Senate Committee on Interoceanic Canals, I will make another quotation from the statement of the Secretary of War:

> The railroad company, prior to 1893, had made large net earnings, some of which were used in declaring dividends and others in constituting a sinking fund to redeem bonds. The last dividend was declared in January, 1893, from earnings in the previous years. In 1893 and 1894 there were losses instead of profits, due to attempted competition with the Pacific Mail Steamship Company. Profits began again in 1895. From January, 1895, until March, 1901, when a dividend of 2 per cent was declared, the directors adopted the policy of declaring no dividends whatever. They devoted their earnings, which were large for those six years, to the reduction of their bonded indebtedness and in part payment for the construction of the La Boca pier, which ultimately cost about $2,200,000, and other improvements that properly might be regarded as additions to the permanent plant and the capital of the company. The offer to sell the whole property of the canal company, including the shares in the railroad company, was made in January, 1902. Between the time of that offer and its actual acceptance by payment of the $40,000,000, May 7, 1904, the Panama Canal Company had added to its holdings 24 shares, which it transferred to the United States without an additional compensation over and above the price of $40,000,000.
> The proposition of the canal company to sell its property never became a binding contract by definite and unconditional acceptance of the United States until after the ratifications were exchanged and the treaty between Panama and the United States was proclaimed on February 26, 1904. Indeed, after that the stockholders of the Panama Canal Company had to authorize the sale, and the United States never became bound as upon contract before the proposed sale was completed by the payment of the money. It is hardly necessary for me to detail the occurrences between the first proposition in January, 1902, and the actual transfer, May 7, 1904; but it may be safely asserted that the Spooner Act, which was passed June 28, 1902, prevented the President from accepting the offer of the canal company until it was decided whether Colombia would grant the proper right of way, or until, in view of subsequent events, it was decided that the treaty with the Republic of Panama would be ratified by the Senate of the United States. In other words, the Panama Canal Company was in the attitude of one proposing to sell shares in a company whose proposal was not accepted, but remained open for acceptance until the time when the actual cash was paid.

This statement has the vigor of argument that a lawyer would employ in arguing his own cause and the savor of personal interest that I am sure the Secretary of War did not feel and the force of important constructions of the agreement for the sale of the canal and railroad properties that are antagonistic to the rights of the Government and are serious and unfortunate.

I infer that, in the heat of the Secretary's effort to shelter a friend who has been entangled in a doubtful situation by the testimony of Drake and others on hearings before the committee, he has argued with a zeal that outruns discretion.

But this statement of the Secretary of War opens the door to other inquiries that must be conducted by a comparison of known facts, proven by others, because Cromwell has so far refused to uncover them, and he alone in the United States is in possession of all the details that would explain the uses that have been made of the Panama Railroad in hostility to the laws, public policy, and interests of the Government and people of the United States.

No corporation has ever been made the instrument of more wrongdoing to the people who created it and to other peoples and governments. The Panama Canal Company was chartered by the State of New York on April 7, 1840. The incorporators were thirteen men of character, among the best citizens of the United States, with William H. Aspinwall as leader. The capital stock was $5,000,000, afterwards raised to $7,000,000, and the par of the shares was $100. There were thirteen directors, of whom five were a quorum. The directors were to appoint one of their number president, and all vacancies in the directorate were to be filled by them. The corporation was empowered to take over by purchase a concession made by New Granada to Aspinwall, Stevens, and Chauncey for a railroad connecting the oceans at Panama.

Section 9 provides that stockholders are personally liable to creditors for debts to the amount of the stock held by them.

This company opened the way to the treaty of 1846, which is the most important we ever had with an American state.

The railroad was constructed for a sum less than the capital stock. From 1852 to December, 1904, the net earnings of the company was $38,859,254.30.

In his deposition before the House committee, Cromwell stated as follows:

> Throughout that entire period there were, you see, but two years in which a deficit occurred. Those were the years 1893 and 1894, when the company was trying one of these experiments. This $38,000,000 is the colossal return of this property, managed as a combined railroad and steamship business.
> The CHAIRMAN (Mr. HEPBURN). How much has it diminished its debt during that time?
> Mr. CROMWELL. During that period, sir?
> The CHAIRMAN. Compare the debt of 1852 with the debt of to-day.
> Mr. CROMWELL. Mr. Chairman, there was no mortgage on the property in 1852. It was built with the proceeds of the stock, etc. The company has never issued but two mortgages in all its history.
>
> The CHAIRMAN. When were they issued?
> Mr. CROMWELL. The 7 per cent sterling mortgage was issued in 1867, and it matured in 1897. It was for $4,000,000. In 1897 it was replaced by the present 4½ per cent first mortgage issue. By applying earnings to that purpose we have gradually reduced that issue so that to-day there are outstanding but $3,159,000 bonds, of which the company itself owns in its own treasury, as treasury assets, $647,000, leaving only $2,372,000 in the hands of the public. Thus the original mortgage debt of $4,000,000 has been reduced to a net outstanding indebtedness of $2,372,000.
> The CHAIRMAN. When you say "this mortgage," you mean the last one?
> Mr. CROMWELL. Yes, sir; the present 4½ first mortgage.
> The CHAIRMAN. The older one was canceled?
> Mr. CROMWELL. Yes, sir; it was canceled in 1897 and replaced by the present one I have referred to. I made the sale of $2,000,000 of these bonds myself to Messrs. Vermilye & Co., bankers, of New York, as a member of the executive committee. I sold them at a good price, and from the proceeds of the sale of these 4½ per cent bonds, plus $705,000 cash out of the treasury, we paid off the balance due on the sterling mortgage.
> The Panama Railroad Company is never a borrower. Such a thing as issuing a note or bills payable, or anything of that character, is unknown to us. We are always a depositor of money at interest. For years and years, surely as long as I have been connected with the company, it has been a depositor at interest of moneys in the trust companies of New York, and it is at this moment. We seldom have a balance of less than $500,000 to $1,000,000 in cash. Our balance now is over $500,000 at this moment, after paying $350,000 in dividends on the first of this month. We discount for cash our accounts current for supplies as fast as we can, availing ourselves of every means of discount and economy in that way.

In 1880 De Lesseps came to the United States and organized the American committee, consisting of a member from each of the great New York houses of J. & W. Seligman, Drexel, Morgan & Co., and Winslow, Lanier & Co. Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Thompson, was induced to resign and accept the chairmanship of the American committee, according to the report of the House committee of the Fifty-sixth Congress, at a salary of $25,000 per annum. General Grant had declined the place.

The American committee purchased for the Panama Canal Company, in 1881, 68,500 shares of the stock of the Panama Railroad, at $250 per share, that had been selling for $150.

The committee of the House say in their report:

> The fact is that these three banking houses named above received, apparently for the loan of their names, and for nothing else, to this enterprise, the immense sum of 6,000,000 francs, or $1,200,000—$400,000 a piece, or $50,000 a year, was paid these houses without the knowledge of the chairman of that committee, who all the time supposed that he was the important factor in this enterprise and was himself receiving only half of that sum annually.

Such extravagance was a small feature as compared with the expenditure of $260,000,000 in less than ten years, with an alleged result of the excavation of two-fifths of the canal, and a debt for interest-bearing stock subscriptions and bonds of over 2,600,000,000 francs resting heavily on the stockholders and mainly the industrial people of France, or was, rather, a total loss to them.

The New Panama Canal Company took over all the assets of the old company, and was organized by a court of France under a law of the French Assembly dated July 1, 1893. Under this law France became sponsor for the new company, and distinctly violated the doctrine of all our Congressional resolutions—that no foreign government should construct a canal through the American Isthmus.

The French court organized the new company in pursuance of this statute, with a capital of 65,000,000 francs, under the stipulation that it should complete the canal according to the concessions from Colombia. This capitalization, of which 5,000,000 francs was given to Colombia for extending the concessions to the 31st of October, 1904, the remainder of the capital being $12,000,000, was only enough to show that it was a mere ruse, intended to deceive Colombia into quietude and to prevent her from forfeiting the entire concession. The promise to complete the canal was made by persons many of whom stood convicted in the courts of France for felonious frauds on the old company. They received pardon for their offenses along with their new charter. First and last they paid in about 75 per cent of their subscriptions for stock, and they or the purchasers of the stock from them have been paid $18,000,000 by the United States out of the $40,000,000 deal.

They have put in no money, issued no bonds or additional stock, and have spent about $9,000,000 in engineering and in scratching over the surface of the Culebra cut, while the dredged channel cut by the old company has been allowed to fill with silt at many places.

To make matters safe against any forfeiture of the canal (Wyse) concession by Colombia, the old company sold the Panama Railroad to this new company. If they completed the canal, they were to have the railroad without any money compensation. If they failed to complete the canal, they were to pay the old company $5,000,000 for it; but in no case could they sell it. Why was this strange feature introduced into this contract? It must have been because the railroad was a necessary part of the canal for construction purposes, but was protected from reverting to Colombia, under the Wyse concession, in case of its forfeiture, because it was under a New York charter and a separate concession, as to which there was no cause or ground of forfeiture. Mr. Attorney-General Knox, in his opinion on the subject of the canal, says the old and the New Panama Canal companies were partners in all the property after it was turned over to the new company. I quote what he says in his opinion, as follows:

> The essential nature of each of the two companies, the New Panama Canal Company and the old Panama Canal Company, is that of a voluntary partnership, their powers being similar to those of an individual Frenchman—an individual merchant corresponding to the new company and an individual who is not a merchant to the old company. These companies have, therefore, the same power to sell their property that an individual Frenchman would have, subject to the right of third parties to oppose the sale because of claims against the property for debts, etc.

The railroad was the only paying asset in the entire partnership, and it was carefully guarded against all comers. Sometimes the dividends were paid to the liquidator of the old company and sometimes to the president of the new company, but how they were divided will remain unknown until Mr. Cromwell consents to answer.

It was obvious from the time and under the circumstances attending the creation of the new company that there was no real purpose to complete the canal, and it was either to be forfeited to Colombia or disposed of to the United States—the only possible future owner.

The proposition to dump it onto the United States, under the charming idea of its "Americanization," was agreed upon by the directors of the new company on the 18th of November, 1898, and was communicated to the President of the United States by J. Bonnardel, president of the board of directors. It has been often printed, but I will append a copy to my remarks.

Cromwell was asked by Mr. Boyard, agent of the canal company, to become a director in the railroad company, and says he bought 14 shares to qualify himself and others for that office. (See hearings, pp. 1141 and 3062). This date was March 31, 1903. (Hearings, p. 3036.)

Cromwell was appointed general counsel of the railroad in 1893 and of the canal company in 1896. Bonnardel's plan of Americanization was made December 18, 1898, and Cromwell's programme is dated November 21, 1899.

These consecutive events show that the New Panama Canal Company in fact abandoned any purpose to complete the canal, if it ever had any, and to dump the property on the United States, and that Cromwell was appointed general counsel of the railroad and canal company for that purpose.

The desperation of this effort was manifest in the industry, overreaching, and recklessness with which it was followed up.

One point was necessary to be accomplished that caused Colombia to revolt against the demands of the canal company. It was a further prolongation of the Wyse concession from 1904 to 1910—six years. This was one of the professional jobs that Cromwell was to undertake as general counsel for the canal company. The prolongation was not wanted to complete the canal. It was wanted to give more time to exploit the plan for the Americanization of the canal.

The Hepburn bills were passing through the House in successive Congresses, and that fact made the necessity for the extension of the Wyse concession very urgent. Such an extension was a lease of life for the concession that Colombia could not destroy, with France to back the new company which it had created, for twelve years after the date of Bonnardel's offer to the United States, as president of the New Canal Company, on the 18th of November, 1898.

Without such extension it was impossible to get the United States to undertake such a work; or that Cromwell's New Jersey corporation of the "New Panama American Canal," or the company he attempted to organize in 1899, would undertake it, with only six years, or five years, of the life of the Wyse concession remaining.

With the hands of Colombia tied hard and fast, and with France to protect the New Panama Canal Company, it was a safe calculation that some disposition could be made of the canal property and the Panama Railroad that would be profitable to the stockholders of the new company, and Cromwell, as general counsel of the railroad and of the canal, struck out actively for such a result. He held the practical control of both companies and became the negotiator for Marroquin, President of Colombia, and for the canal and railroad properties to bring about a sale to the United States. How he acquired the power over the Government of Colombia to be associated with Concha, Marroquin's minister in the negotiation of the Hay-Concha treaty, he conceals from Congress by refusing to answer questions propounded to him by the Senate committee, on a pretext of professional privilege that could not possibly exist in his favor.

This project of forcing from Colombia an additional concession of time, from 1904 to 1910, led to civil war in Colombia that lasted from 1898 to 1903 and destroyed 100,000 lives and created a debt of $6,000,000. Cromwell was cognizant of the steps and proceedings that led to this civil war, as is shown by his letter to Secretary Hay of December 5, 1898, which I will append to my remarks.

I will now present a synopsis of the facts known to Cromwell, on which he based the statements in that letter, some of the most important of them being stated in the letter.

Sanclemente was elected President and Marroquin was elected Vice-President of Colombia in 1898 and entered office in the summer of that year. The Congress was elected and took office at the same period. The Congress was elected for two years. After Sanclemente was inducted into the Presidency the Panama Canal Company proposed to him to pay Colombia 5,000,000 francs ($1,000,000) for an extension of the Wyse concession from 1904 to 1910. He referred the offer to Congress, which was then in session, for ratification, as he was bound to do by the constitution of Colombia. Congress considered the offer and rejected it. Thereupon Sanclemente announced his purpose to ratify the contract as President and accept the 5,000,000 francs, notwithstanding the refusal of Congress to accept the agreement. Congress then declared his office vacant and adjourned sine die and did not again meet. Sanclemente declared Colombia to be in a state of siege and assumed dictatorial powers.

Civil war ensued in many of the provinces, and the Liberal party issued a manifesto.

On the 26th of April, 1900, Sanclemente accepted the 5,000,000 francs from the canal company and issued the decree granting the extension of the Wyse concession from the 31st of October, 1904, to the 31st of October, 1910. Soon after Sanclemente was removed from the Presidency by a decree of the supreme court on the ground that he had violated the constitution by residing away from Bogota, the capital of Colombia, and Marroquin, Vice-President, took office as President. Sanclemente died soon after he was thus deposed, and Marroquin prosecuted the civil war against the Liberals.

The Concha treaty was concluded, the Spooner law was enacted, and the Hay-Herran treaty was concluded and ratified by the Senate while civil war was flagrant in Colombia. It reached Panama, and the Liberal forces gained such victories as to disable Marroquin's forces, unaided, to hold the country.

Our Government took control of the Panama Railroad with the consent of that company to enforce the right of free transit granted in the treaty of 1846, and interposed its power to prevent the Liberals from attacking the city of Panama. The result was a capitulation that provided for the election of a new Congress for Colombia, with the express purpose of ratifying the Hay-Herran treaty.

That Congress met on June 20, 1903, and rejected the Hay-Herran treaty.

That act led to the alleged secession of Panama in November, 1903.

This synopsis of the facts shows that this civil war was the result of the rejection by act of Congress of the offer of the canal company to purchase the extension of the Wyse concession from 1904 to 1910, and the refusal of the people, after the civil war was ended by capitulation, to elect a Congress that would ratify the Hay-Herran treaty, which gave Colombia no voice or part in fixing the price of the sale of the canal and her reversionary rights in it and in the railroad to the United States, but treated the full ownership of both as being in the canal company.

Colombia was permitted to either accept or reject the price of the property fixed by the canal company and no more. She refused the terms, thereby incurring the angry hostility of the President of the United States and of Mr. Cromwell, and her temerity cost her the secession of Panama.

Cromwell's intimacy with Marroquin while he was prosecuting the bitter and bloody civil war to enforce Sanclemente's decree for a six years' further extension of the Wyse concession is shown by his letter that the President sent to Congress with the Concha treaty as an argument in its favor, which I will append to my remarks. His eulogy on the glorious attitude of Colombia, except for its fulsome and vapid exaggerations, would become any Spanish hidalgo who ever rattled his spurs or brandished his sword in vindication of his country's honor. Marroquin seems to have resented this officiousness when he refused to urge the ratification of the Hay-Herran treaty upon the Congress of 1903, and incurred the bitter resentment of the President of the United States.

Cromwell, in his examination before the committee, halted at his letter of December, 1898, to Mr. Hay, and, spreading the mantle of professional privilege, as a lawyer, to protect the sacredness of his secrets, refused to make any explanation of that letter or to state anything respecting his knowledge of, or his dealings with, affairs in Colombia until he asserted the fact that he had blossomed out as a Colombian diplomatist, in his letter expounding the Concha treaty. After that exposure he again closed his shell and refused to speak of his participation in the secession of Panama and the negotiation of the Hay-Varilla treaty. He even hides that transaction under the screen of professional privilege, as general counsel for the Panama Canal Company.

This work with Sanclemente and Marroquin, as to which he refused to testify, and a few visits to Paris for consultation, and his letter to Secretary Hay, and his services as counsel, witness, and lobbyist to put down the Hepburn bill in the House of Representatives is all the business he is willing to admit that he did for the Panama Canal Company.

For this he got an allowance for office expenses and for consultations with an engineer, including his fees, and he received not exceeding $200,000 in money for professional services during his employment by that company, and still has a large sum due from that company which he has been "too busy" to give his attention. No bill has been rendered for what is yet due, and no special contract exists for compensation. This service extended over seven years, nearly $30,000 per annum, besides his salary of $6,000 per annum paid by the railroad for eleven years, or $66,000; in all, $266,000.

I have traced Cromwell's line of conduct in his dealings with Colombia, which is not wholly concealed, in spite of his alleged professional privilege, that I might point out more distinctly his line of action, as director and as general counsel of the Panama Railroad, in aid of the purpose of the canal company to break its promise to complete the canal and to prevent Colombia from enjoying its rights under the Wyse concession.

The canal company had no doubt that the railroad, which had yielded more than $38,000,000 in net profits in a period of fifty years, was as good a piece of property as could be found in the world at a cost of $18,000,000. That sum is $1,000,000 in excess of all the cash that the stockholders paid into the New Panama Canal Company, viz, $12,000,000, and of the $5,000,000 they were to pay to the old company for the railroad if they failed to complete the canal.

In the event of such failure they would get back all the money they had paid into the treasury of the canal company and would get the railroad for $5,000,000. So that the transaction was perfectly safe, even if Colombia should acquire all the canal property by the forfeiture of the Wyse concession.

This forfeiture was certain, unless France should interpose to prevent it, for the New Panama Canal Company was neither able nor willing to complete the canal. From the beginning they had no such purpose. Their purpose was to "Americanize" the canal, as they called the dumping operation they planned to get rid of it. Obviously, then, all the value that the canal company could transfer to the railroad from canal work and property was so much saved from the grasp of Colombia, if the dumping operation failed.

In this feature of the operation the talents, skill, experience, and good nature of Cromwell as director, executive committeeman, and general counsel of the railroad company was valuable, and was not overpaid by the salary of $6,000 per annum and other valuable perquisites.

Among the earlier of many such operations was the sale of cars, locomotives, and other machinery that had accumulated on the hands of the canal company to the railroad company for $400,000. A purchase that the railroad company had no need to make, and would never have made from a stranger. This money was paid from the gross earnings of the railroad company.

The canal company sold wharfs and derricks to the railroad company and did much work in renewing its tracks and removing them, for which the railroad company paid out of its gross earnings.

The railroad bed was laid and equipped by the Aspinwall company from Colon to the city of Panama, and so continues to the present time. In its concession the railroad company was bound to extend its tracks to deep water at or near Perico Island, a distance of 3 miles. The canal company dug a channel for steamships, about 3 miles long and 30 feet deep, from a point near that island to the coast at La Boca, about 3 miles west of Panama City, and built a pier there for the handling and unloading of ships of the greatest dimensions that come to the Bay of Panama.

All that was done by the canal company was canal work, under the Wyse concession, and in case of its forfeiture it would revert to Colombia. To prevent this the canal company sold its ditch and pier and plant to the railroad company and was paid for it out of the gross earnings of the railroad and in bonds more than $2,122,000, thus placing that much of the canal property in the ownership of the railroad and out of the reach of forfeiture by Colombia, if the Wyse concession should be forfeited.

To make sure of this ownership of the canal property, through the ratification of the agreement by Colombia and Panama, and to secure the substitution of this agreement as a compliance with the terms of the concession of Colombia to the railroad company that it should build its track out to deep water from the terminus at Panama, the railroad company created a regular diplomatic mission to Bogota, on which, with others, a relative of Marroquin was appointed. The negotiations of these diplomatists were protracted, formal, and astute, and were under the supervision of Counsel Cromwell of the railroad company, who wrote many of the most difficult and intricate dispatches, some of which are spread at large upon the minutes of the railroad company. Drake's testimony gives quite an account of these negotiators and their doings and writings, and shows that the important ministers were officers or stockholders of the railroad company, or of the canal company, and sometimes of both companies. In this fraternization of these companies in a negotiation that added to the property of the railroad company and saved the canal company from the peril of its confiscation, the canal company gave the direction to the operations.

All this diplomatic play furnished the opportunity to Cromwell to draw near to Marroquin and to gain his consent, as President of Colombia, to the sale of the canal concession and property to the United States on the terms and conditions of the Hay-Concha treaty, which was so greatly extolled in the letter of Cromwell which our President sent to Congress.

Finally, the La Boca matter was closed by heavy payments to Colombia and Panama, and the postponement of the right of Colombia to require the extension of the railroad track to deep water for thirty years. This was a strategic coup that cut Colombia off from claiming the reversion of the La Boca pier and ditch and the railroad leading to it, if the Wyse concession should be forfeited, leaving the railroad concession to stand as thus amended, but the railroad company had to pay all the costs of the campaign out of its gross earnngs or bonds.

This American corporation in French ownership and under the twin powers and advantages of an American lawyer, who was general counsel for the railroad company and the canal company, was used to hammer Colombia, who was our near friend since 1846, into terms that made her right to the reversion of the canal property under the Wyse concession of no avail or worth to her, because she had been tricked into a change in the situation by Cromwell's diplomacy that cut her off at least for thirty years from access with a canal to the Bay of Panama by any feasible route. The railroad under this new agreement held the only available route for a canal from Miraflores to the Bay of Panama at least for thirty years, and that ended the whole value of reversionary interest of Colombia under the Wyse concession, and its further forfeiture would have left her by way of reversion only the miserable scrap heap of metal and machinery scattered through the jungle that we have paid for under the head of "Errors and omissions" at an enormous cost. This is the result of the La Boca enterprise. That destroyed the canal route, under the Wyse concession, if it was forfeited to Colombia. In such an event it would belong to the Panama Railroad under the manipulation of Counsel-General Cromwell, but at an enormous cost.

Then bonds began to issue to the public from a company that had never owed a dollar that it could not pay prior to 1896, and deficits began to defame a corporation that had always had money for large dividends after heavy current expenditures.

From 1898 until the Spooner law was enacted Cromwell and Bô rushed their dumping policy until $40,000,000 was in sight for the canal company, of which the New Panama Canal Company would get $18,000,000 and the railroad. The contract of sale to the United States was to be completed even at the cost to Colombia of the loss of the State or Province of Panama. And it was lost to Colombia. A decree that is stronger than any law in the statutes or in the treaty books was made, and it brought the ownership of that Canal Zone and the railroad to the United States. Colombia was left out in the cold, in company with the débris of our broken treaty, and Panama "rose as one man" and got the $10,000,000 we had admitted to be due to Colombia.

While the railroad stock remained in the hands of the "two partners," as Mr. Attorney-General Knox describes the old and the New Panama Canal companies, the quiet robbery of the beehive began while the bees were preparing to leave it, and Mr. Cromwell was the king bee in the devastation.

He objected to the jurisdiction of the committee to inquire into any matter that was antecedent to the date of the sale of the property to the United States, forgetting that he had contended that Bô's offer of sale in January, 1902, was confirmed by the final sale that occurred in May, 1904, and was a part of it, and that he claimed that Bô's offer carried interest until it was confirmed. Mr. Secretary of War also uses this fallacy as a serious argument. Cromwell also forgot that while he was testifying before the committee he was, as counsel for the canal company, pressing a claim before the President as arbitrator for the work done on the canal from the date of Bô's offer until May 19, 1904, amounting to more than $1,000,000, which demand has been rejected by the President very recently.

This work was done in a way so perfunctory and at such waste of machinery that its value to the United States was almost nil. While doing it they allowed excavated parts of the canal that were dug and dredged by the old company to fill up, and our engineers assert that the machinery turned over to us was, and is, in a state of uselessness; and the great bulk of it has gone into a condition where it is of no value even as scrap iron. They say it would have been an advantage to our work if none of it had been left in the Canal Zone.

It was for this sort of work that the Secretary of War, in his statement, excused and justified the railroad company, under the advice of the "general counsel," in using money that should have been applied to the repair of the old steamships—the Allança and the Finance—that were laid up as being unseaworthy. The proposition is distinctly proved that the directors of the railroad company willfully and without excuse suffered its property to decay and deteriorate when they had plenty of money to keep it at least in the state of repair that it was in when M. Bô offered to sell it to the United States; and this depreciation ran riot from the time it was known that Bô's proposition to sell it for $40,000,000 to the United States was agreed to, in every and any event.

Bô's proposition was that of a desperate gambler who was playing for the forlorn hope of saving the New Panama Canal Company all the money it had expended on the canal for the purchase of pardons of felons and the remission of fines they had incurred in robbing the old company. M. Hutin, the director-general of the canal and railroad, had caused the property that was turned over to the new company to be valued by lawful and sworn appraisers. They valued it at $109,000,000. When the Walker Commission offered an estimate of $40,000,000 as the value of the property, Hutin refused to accept it and resigned his office, from which he was driven by M. Bô. He was elected president of the board of directors, and hastened to snap up Admiral Walker's tentative bid of $40,000,000 by cable. The throwing away of $69,000,000 in this reckless game left a debt due to the French people of more than $1,000,000,000. When they realized their loss and that the men who had wrecked the old company were pardoned for their crimes, on the promise to complete it for 40 per cent of its profits, and that the Government had opened this door to the final robbery of the people, Paris shook as if in the throes of an earthquake. Cabinet ministers resigned. The French Assembly was thrown into furious excitement, and De Lesseps, the greatest and least culpable of the canal officers, was condemned to the penitentiary while on his deathbed—a vicarious sufferer for the crimes of others.

The Walker Commission thought they could construct the canal at $5,000,000 saving under the cost of the Nicaragua route, and Cromwell stepped forward and accomplished his plan of Americanizing the Panama Canal by adding to the French debacle the robbery of Colombia, at the cost of civil war.

The directors of the railroad company, who had been chosen by the Panama Canal Company and the general counsel, remained in office from the time of Bô's offer to sell, and before that time, until the United States paid for the property on May 9, 1904, and after that time until April 1, 1905. Some Canal Commissioners were injected into the board, as places could be made for them by resignations, until April 1, 1906, when all the board were elected by order of the Secretary of War and are now subject to his orders in every official act.

It is a pardonable pride of authority he enjoys in being left to his own will, independently of Congress, in directing such a body of directors, and he would have had a peaceful reign but for the inexperienced Shonts and the uncontrollable Cromwell. He has steadily endeavored to repair the breaches of the law and the continuous forays they have made to secure profitable jobs for their friends, such as the postal arrangement, the tariff arrangement, and the supply of food to laborers for the benefit of the Panamanians.

In all these benevolences Cromwell led, representing the Government of Panama as general counsel and the Panama legation as general counsel, and the Panama Railroad, and also the Panama Canal Company. His generosity with the concessions he made for the United States fortunately had the support of an affluent Government, and his altruism had the support of our most generous President and our most amiable Secretary of War.

The statement of the Secretary, which I append to my remarks, does not refer to the Markel contract, or the doctoring of records, or the issue, unlawfully, of $600,000 in railroad bonds, or the borrowing of money on bonds to pay debts of the Canal Commission, or the use of canal funds to buy ships to let on void charter parties to the railroad company, or the convenience, that was substituted for the law, for handling the current income of railroad earnings, or the failure of the railroad company to account for its earnings and expenditures with the Treasury of the United States. All these and other like transactions have become as familiar as a chronic disorder that attracts neither the sympathy or attention of anyone except the sufferer. They had happened and passed over and are almost forgotten.

We are, happily, a forgetful and forgiving people as to all wrongs and evils that are nonusable for party purposes.

It was some other cases besides the piccadillos I have mentioned that had escaped the public attention until disclosed in the hearings that have called forth the great skill and ability of the Secretary of War to save Cromwell from himself by his statement.

I have noticed one point in that statement about the use of the money of the railroad company in paying dividends from funds that had long before been expended in betterments and improvements on the property represented by the stock in the company.

I can not conceive of the justice or morality of a party who, after offering property for sale, when the offer is conditionally accepted, engages in the secret work of robbing the property of its value. It is not larceny, because the delivery has not been completed, but it is a meaner crime, because it involves a breach of trust.

I will append to my remarks the entire cable correspondence between the New Panama Canal Company and the Walker Commission, as reported by them, that Senators and others who are new to this subject may be informed. And also a letter and powers of attorney giving to Cromwell the power to renew the offer of the canal company to sell its property after the "Bô" proposal had failed by its own time limitations.

I have only time now to call earnest attention to these facts, with the observation that the Bô offer, which was conditionally accepted by Attorney-General Knox, was in the following words:

PARIS, January 9, 1902.

Admiral WALKER, Washington, D. C.:

The New Panama Canal Company declares that it is ready to accept for the totality, without exception, of its property and rights on the Isthmus the amount of $40,000,000, the above offer to remain in force up to March 4, 1903.

BÔ,
President of the Board.

This was accepted, but failed to materialize, because, according to the saying, "the rabbit must be caught before it is skinned."

Cromwell, nothing daunted, demanded of the Government of the United States a renewal of the agreement with the canal company, in the terms of the very remarkable document which I append to my remarks, sent to me by the Department of State.

There is no actual proof that this agreement was made with the President, but the history of events following it show that it included the plan to assist Panama in her so-called "revolt" against Colombia. What else can be the meaning of this clause, emphasized in italics, in the document lodged in the Department of State by Cromwell? I will quote it.

After reciting that the Bô agreement had expired on the 3d of March, 1903, by the want of ratification of the Hay-Herran treaty, he says:

It is mutually recognized that the ratification of the said treaty, in the form in which it is now pending, at a date anterior to March 4, 1903, is, by the parties, accepted as being in conformity with the offer, the acceptance, and the confirmation above mentioned. This provision shall apply also to the conclusion of a treaty under another form, or in any way, which may be satisfactory to the United States, and which maintains, without modification, the provisions of articles 1 and 22 of the pending treaty. It is understood that in any case the term above mentioned may be prolonged by mutual consent of the parties should occasion arise.

The treaty he speaks of is the Hay-Herran treaty, which was rejected by Colombia. The treaty, "in another form, or in any way," is an open threat against Colombia, whose honor he had extolled in his letter on the Conchas treaty.

Here is a clear forecast of the fact that Colombia would be forced to accept the Hay-Herran treaty or else lose Panama through its secession.

No other way to force the sale of the canal to the United States by the canal company was thought of or was imaginable except the then threatened secession of Panama. Thus Cromwell paraded the poisoned chalice before our Government that he was to assist in pressing to the lips of Colombia.

In every aspect of the situation the sale by the canal company of its property to the United States, including the Panama Railroad, was settled in January, 1902, under the Bô agreement, and was secretly continued under the Cromwell act of adoption in 1904.

In these two years, and even after March 9, 1904, when the sale to the United States was completed, the robbery of the treasury of the Panama Railroad went on under the leadership of Cromwell for the benefit of his other client, the Panama Canal Company. This alleged American added another to the list of insolent wrongs that had been inflicted on the United States by this New York corporation in the hands of a French company.

In the statement of the Secretary of War, which justifies these acts and many others of the Panama Railroad Company under the leadership of Cromwell, and is, virtually, a plea for his further continuance in power, I find the following foundation statement of principles and alleged facts upon which the Secretary relies:

The proposal to sell the property of the canal company and its shares of stock in the railroad company contained no representations as to the condition of the railroad company or its treasury or its stock or its bonds. The proposal was merely to sell the shares held by the Panama Canal Company in the Panama Railroad Company. Under these circumstances the question is what obligation there was on the part of the Panama Canal Company, as the largest stockholder in the Panama Railroad Company, to preserve the value of the shares which it proposed to transfer to the United States. In the first place it is to be noted that the price of $40,000,000 contained in the proposal did not carry with it interest, and that when the United States paid the fixed price in the proposal it therefore paid no interest. Strictly speaking, there was no contract obligation on the part of the Panama Canal Company to make the sale which it proposed to make in January, 1902, because there was no consideration for the option given which would make the proposal a binding one.

On the authority of the report of the Walker Commission, in explanation of the scope of the offer of M. Bô, which report is dated January 30, 1902, and is unquestionably the statement on which the Spooner law was based, I find that the railroad property, assets, outstanding liabilities, and credts are thus enumerated:

PARIS, January 14, 1902—9.45 p. m.

Admiral WALKER,
President Isthmian Canal Commission,
Corcoran Building, Washington:

We send by mail letter confirming cable 11th January, and, under registered package, judgment August 2, agreement with liquidator, and three extracts showing powers of board. All these documents are certified to by the United States consulate-general.

BÔ,
President of the Board.

The "totality, without exception, of its property and rights on the Isthmus," mentioned in the cablegram of January 9, includes the following classes of property:

1. LANDS NOT BUILT ON.

* * * * * *

2. BUILDINGS.

* * * * * *

3. PLANT.

* * * * * * *

4. WORK DONE.

* * * * * *

5. PANAMA RAILROAD.

Of the existing 70,000 shares of the Panama Railroad, the canal company will transfer to the United States all but about 1,100 shares. These latter are held by a few individuals residing in various parts of the United States and in Europe. As it will not be the policy of the United States to so manage the railroad as to secure a large revenue, it is probable that the holders of these shares will in time find it to their interest to dispose of them at the price fixed by the Commission for the other shares, viz, their par value. At par the value of the 68,863 shares to be transferred to the United States by the canal company is $6,886,300.

Against this property are mortgage bonds to the amount of $3,439,000. Of this amount, the company owns $871,000, which it has pledged as collateral for its debt to the Panama Canal Company described below, and it also holds in its treasury $1,064,000 subject to sale or cancellation, leaving outstanding in the hands of the public $1,504,000. The bonds bear 4½ per cent interest.

There are outstanding also $996,000 6 per cent sinking-fund subsidy bonds, but this liability is an amortization of the annual payment of $225,000 due the Colombian Government under its concession for the period ending November 1, 1910.

The railroad company owes $986,918 to the Panama Canal Company, mainly on account of the construction of the pier at La Boca.

Its total liabilities, therefore, are $2,490,918, not counting the sinking-fund subsidy bonds, for which the Colombian Government has received the benefit and for which it should make allowance to the United States in the negotiations for treaty rights.

Its cash assets January 15, 1902, were $438,569.33.

It owns three passenger and freight steamers of American registry, the Alliança, Advance, and Finance, of approximately 2,000 tons net each, which, together with a chartered steamer, the Orizaba, run between New York and Colon on a weekly schedule. For the past year it has operated a line of chartered steamers of American registry between San Francisco and Panama. These steamers, owned and chartered, on the Atlantic and Pacific constitute the Panama Railroad Steamship Line.

The railroad company owns an undivided half interest in the islands of Naos, Culebra, Perico, and Flamenco, in the Bay of Panama, the Pacific Mail Steamship Company being the joint owner.

Besides its right of way, terminals, wharves, and considerable areas of land, it owns nearly the whole of the town of Colon, the houses there being constructed under leases.

The railroad company has no operating contracts which can not be terminated in ninety days.

The work of constructing the canal will largely increase the business of the railroad, and will enable it to pay off its liabilities in a very few years. After the completion of the canal its commercial profits will probably cease, but it will have a value incidental to operating the canal.

How could it be that this item of cash assets January 15, 1902, $438,569.33, was put into that statement when "the proposal was merely to sell the shares held by the Panama Canal Company in the Panama Railroad Company?" It is either an impeachment of the veracity of the Walker Commission or of the statement made by the Secretary of War just quoted. It also reflects on Congress for acting on the facts as reported by the Walker Commission without taking notice that we were dealing with the worst set of sharps that had ever been pardoned out of penitentiary convictions by the French Government. I do not think it necessary to follow further the mistaken facts and very questionable conceptions of the moral duties of those who sell property for future delivery, dependent upon future events, to keep the property intact from spoliation by the vender until the time arrives for the completion of the contract by delivery.

It is quite surprising to hear the Secretary put this proposition of common morality to Congress. He says that "under these circumstances the question is what obligation there was on the part of the Panama Canal Company, as the largest stockholder in the Panama Railroad Company, to preserve the value of the shares which it proposed to transfer to the United States." Such a question, "under the circumstances," is so coldly technical and so oblivious of the duties of these corporations, under the direction of Cromwell, who was general counsel of both companies and director in the railroad company, and was, as he swears, the negotiator of the Bō contract and of the contract, that concluded the purchase of the canal and railroad in a single transaction, that it surprises the country that it could be asked by the Secretary of War.

There was no part of this series of transactions that was not intimately known to Cromwell, including the report of the Walker Commission. If he had stated the doctrines and excuses set up for him by the Secretary of War, in his own testimony, no one would have believed him. As they are stated by the Secretary of War, evidently on information furnished by Cromwell, they must be taken cum grano salis.

Then follows a very complex statement and argument by the Secretary as to the magical bookkeeping by which investments in betterments and repairs that all railroad companies pay out of current earnings, when they are sufficient, are afterwards dug up and converted into cash in the treasury, and paid out to stockholders. This is the same puzzle that the House committee wrestled with and could not solve. This story is impeached on its face as a false excuse for a serious moral dereliction to the deception and injury of the United States. I leave it to the Senate to find any possible excuse for it in the statements of the Secretary of War.

The issue of bonds for the repair of steamers is a flagrant instance of pocketing money in dividends, salaries, and other expenditures that stood ready in the Treasury to pay for ship repairs, and leaving the cost of such repairs to hang over the railroad property as a liability to be paid by the United States. Crafty bookkeeping does not disguise the fact that this debt was created before the United States got control of the property to be paid after the $40,000,000 was paid by our Government.

The Secretary of War says, "I do not hesitate to say that I think it would have been much wiser if the company had not issued the $265,000 of bonds, but had paid the whole sum in cash, as it might easily have done, for it had at the time $700,000 in cash in the treasury."

The benefit of the doubt between wisdom and robbery in creating this debt, which the Secretary kindly gives to Cromwell, might be more tolerable if the $700,000 had not been distributed in dividends to the New Panama Canal Company, Cromwell's liberal patron, and to himself as a stockholder.

It is due to the Canal Commission to say that none of them were on the railroad board of directory when the bonds were issued to the Cramps for repairs to be put on the ships. When any of them went on the Commission they found the contracts in existence and executed in large part by the railroad company, and it was too late to annul them.

For a piece of fancy work in finance and bookkeeping, the repair of the Alliança and the Finance has been rarely outclassed.

I will not further comment on the statement of the Secretary of War in exoneration of Cromwell. I have only referred to it as a conclusive proof that the Panama Railroad Company, in the control of the French canal companies, has been the most reckless and predatory agency that ever assailed the commercial interests, the Treasury, and the honor of the United States.

The celebrated Huntington contracts with the Panama Railroad Company for the monopoly of the coastwise traffic crossing the Isthmus and the railroad traffic crossing the continent, which cost our Pacific coast people and others hundreds of millions of dollars, continued for about fifteen years, and went down under adverse legislation by Congress for about two years, when it was renewed with Cromwell's assistance, until it was suppressed recently by order of the President. But this arrangement, in principle, was renewed by agreements with foreign steamship lines, and is the same monopoly under terms that are somewhat different; but they still exclude the ships of all nations, including America, that are not in general lines of transportation companies, on both oceans, from the benefit of the cut rates. No independent vessel can get other than high local rates for railroad services across the Isthmus.

No nation was ever so badgered by its own domestic corporation as we have been by the Panama Railroad. It is time that these needless and unjust conditions had ended and that the Government was no longer in the shipping business under the sea flag of a dummy corporation. If the Commission or the Government are to engage in the business of common carriers by sea, let it be done openly and at a saving of something of the great expense now attending the maintenance of this New York corporation that the State of New York should have dissolved years ago when it became a party to a wicked and oppressive monopoly.

If reports from credible sources that have come to members of the committee are true, the Panama Railroad Company is quietly looking on at robberies of its income that are very startling. Let the committee ascertain and report the facts as to all matters connected with the questions presented in this resolution before the Senate that the Senate may know what is being done and what should be done by Congress and take action.

I would, in conclusion, invite the attention of the Senate to two features connected with the directorate of the railroad company. First, that the will of the President, or the Secretary of War, acting through the general manager or president of the Panama Railroad Company, is actually inviolable on the part of the directors. This seems to be true in effect, but it is unlawful and violative of the charter in fact and in effect. Congress can not afford to sustain such a despotism over men who are sworn to perform their duty according to law. The members of the Commission who are really forced to become directors in the railroad accept the will of the President of the United States in all matters as the act of the Government, as if it combined all the powers of government, legislative, executive, and judicial, and they obey it without inquiry.

If it can be considered safe and wise to concede such powers to the President, it is still to be considered that he may be in a minority on the Commission composed of men, some of whom are foreigners and others who would be more reliable and less dangerous if they were foreigners. Five members of the board of directors is a quorum to do business under the New York charter. There are six directors whom the President of the United States can not command to do his will without question. Five of them could, under favoring conditions, transact business that would put the Panama Railroad in a position of obstructive hostility to the canal for any cause.

Cromwell has carefully testified that the President of the United States has no power to dismiss a director for any cause. If he is correct as to the security of his official tenure, I would not willingly intrust to him or to any other reckless and ambitious man such powers in dealing with the Panama Railroad Company as have already reddened its career with blood and blackened it with fraud.

These five directors, Mr. President, grouped together, as they seem to be grouped together, under Cromwell's leadership, have got the power to-day to call a meeting, and, if five of them are present, three of that number can enact any law, establish any policy, effect any end that they may choose, destroy this canal work, and hold the Government of the United States in the leash until they can have their sweet will.

Am I to be expected to trust a man who has a record like Cromwell in the leadership of that possible three out of five in the management of this canal? Can this Congress be excused by the people of the United States from its duty to take hold of this question in the right way and prescribe by law what are the duties, rights, obligations, and powers of this railroad company, turning over the control of the whole matter into the hands of the Canal Commission and requiring them to do what the railroad company has never yet done—account to the Government of the United States for its dealings, its incomes and outgoes, and paying over balances in its hands into the Treasury of the United States?

We are hurrying along at a rapid gallop over this great, enormous volcano in that Canal Zone. When we come to absurdities, contradictions, dangers, like those that I have been pointing out to-day, with extreme difficulty to myself, we pass them over and say, "All is well; all is going right; the President of the United States is about to send a message here, after three days' observation, in which he will show that the canal is all right. It does not make any difference, Mr. MORGAN, or Mr. Anybody Else, what you have got to say about it or what the records prove about it or what the testimony that has been taken before this committee shows, it is all right; we are going ahead."

Gentlemen, you will not go much further until you stumble into a pit out of which you can not get. Thank God, I am not of the political majority of this House. It belongs to the other side. That the country must understand, and they will hold you responsible for this very queer, unsatisfactory, and dangerous condition. It is our right and our duty to enact a law by which this dummy, this shell, this mere corporate name that lingers on the statute books of New York, should be abrogated and thrown out of the way, and when that property which belongs to the United States Government should be taken control of by the United States Canal Commission and administered honestly, like other property under the laws of the United States and under that sort of accountability which requires every agent of the United States Government to pay in all amounts that are due to the Government and to have appropriations for such expenditures as it must make.

I beg pardon of the Senate for having delayed it to this extent; but I wanted, if I could, to call the attention of the Senate to some of the matters which are hanging along on this railroad route which we are trying to work that are of quite as much importance as it is, possibly, to have this canal constructed, which I think it will not be in the next twenty-five years.

JUNE 28, 1906.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of June 19, in which you say that the Senate Canal Committee has adopted a resolution providing for my submission of a further statement to you, the same to be transmitted to each member of the committee for examination before ordering it to be incorporated in the record of the hearings on Panama matters. I avail myself of this opportunity in order that the time of the committee and my own in the last days of Congress shall not be occupied any more than is necessary with an oral hearing. I should have submitted this statement earlier, but supposed that I would be called again before this for further examination.

DIVIDENDS ON PANAMA STOCK.

The subjects which I wish to discuss had not been developed in the hearings before the committee when I made my previous statement. The first question is, whether the Panama Railroad Company, in 1903 and 1904, improperly declared dividends on the stock of the company in excess of net earnings and improperly paid for ordinary and current repairs to its steamers by an issue of bonds, instead of paying them, as they should have been paid, out of gross earnings. The relevancy of this question to the matter under investigation by the committee is to be found in the following circumstances:

In January, 1902, the Panama Canal Company owned 68,863 shares of the total 70,000 shares of the capital stock of the railroad company, and in that month its representative telegraphed to the Isthmian Canal Commission that it would sell all its property on the Isthmus, including the shares of stock in the Panama Railroad Company, for $40,000,000, and in fulfillment of that proposition it did, on May 7, 1904, transfer all its property, including its holdings in Panama stock, to the representatives of the United States. If during this interval, dividends were declared and paid on this stock in excess of the net earnings, and not out of profits, but out of the assets of the road, then it is claimed that the dividends received by the Panama Canal Company as stockholder, not out of profits, deprived the railroad company of assets which it should have had when the stock in the company was transferred to the United States; and as the United States by the transfer became the owner of sixty-nine seventieths of the stock, the loss to the United States was substantially equal to the loss in the assets of the company. If this claim be well founded, it would have justified the United States in abating from the $40,000,000 the $100,000 thus lost to the assets of the railroad company, or it would now be justified in bringing suit against the Panama Canal Company for this amount.

The charge against the management of the Panama Railroad Company that the dividends had been improperly declared and bonds improperly issued was first made by General Davis when he was governor of the Canal Zone, in a separate report, as a member of the Canal Commission. The report came to my attention in January, 1905. On January 12, 1905, the House of Representatives authorized the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, or any subcommittee thereof, to investigate the affairs of the Panama Railroad Company. On January 13, 1905, a subcommittee was appointed, consisting of the following: Mr. SHACKLEFORD, Mr. LOVERING, Mr. ESCH, Mr. TOWNSEND, and Mr. ADAMSON.

The subcommittee reported to Congress that "the testimony shows that the management by the officers and directors of the Panama Railroad has been conspicuously able, progressive, and businesslike." This report was made after the fullest investigation into the question of dividends declared and bonds issued, and in the light of the statement of General Davis in the report already referred to. All the officers of the road were examined by the subcommittee, who went to New York for the purpose, and who examined all the books of the company.

It did not seem to me, after this report, that it was necessary for me further to investigate the question whether the Panama Canal Company was indebted to the United States for an unlawful and improper declaration of dividends before the United States received the canal company's stock in the railroad company. But the question has now been further mooted, and I have taken occasion to investigate the exact condition of affairs in the railroad company with reference to declaration of dividends and issue of bonds.

The railroad company, prior to 1893, had made large net earnings, some of which were used in declaring dividends and others in constituting a sinking fund to redeem bonds. The last dividend was declared in January, 1893, from earnings in the previous years. In 1893 and 1894 there were losses instead of profits, due to attempted competition with the Pacific Mail Steamship Company. Profits began again in 1895. From January, 1895, until March, 1901, when a dividend of 2 per cent was declared, the directors adopted the policy of declaring no dividends whatever. They devoted their earnings, which were large for those six years, to the reduction of their bonded indebtedness and in part payment for the construction of the La Boca pier, which ultimately cost about $2,200,000, and other improvements that properly might be regarded as additions to the permanent plant and the capital of the company. The offer to sell the whole property of the canal company, including the shares in the railroad company, was made in January, 1902. Between the time of that offer and its actual acceptance by payment of the $40,000,000, May 7, 1904, the Panama Canal Company had added to its holdings 24 shares, which it transferred to the United States without an additional compensation over and above the price of $40,000,000.

The proposition of the canal company to sell its property never became a binding contract by definite and unconditional acceptance of the United States until after the ratifications were exchanged and the treaty between Panama and the United States was proclaimed on February 26, 1904. Indeed, after that the stockholders of the Panama Canal Company had to authorize the sale, and the United States never became bound as upon contract before the proposed sale was completed by the payment of the money. It is hardly necessary for me to detail the occurrences between the first proposition in January, 1902, and the actual transfer, May 7, 1904; but it may be safely asserted that the Spooner Act, which was passed June 28, 1902, prevented the President from accepting the offer of the canal company until it was decided whether Colombia would grant the proper right of way, or until, in view of subsequent events, it was decided that the treaty with the Republic of Panama would be ratified by the Senate of the United States. In other words, the Panama Canal Company was in the attitude of one proposing to sell shares in a company whose proposal was not accepted but remained open for acceptance until the time when the actual cash was paid.

The proposal to sell the property of the canal company and its shares of stock in the railroad company contained no representations as to the condition of the railroad company or its treasury or its stock or its bonds. The proposal was merely to sell the shares held by the Panama Canal Company in the Panama Railroad Company. Under these circumstances the question is, What obligation there was on the part of the Panama Canal Company, as the largest stockholder in the Panama Railroad Company, to preserve the value of the shares which it proposed to transfer to the United States? In the first place, it is to be noted that the price of $40,000,000 contained in the proposal did not carry with it interest, and that when the United States paid the price fixed in the proposal it therefore paid no interest. Strictly speaking, there was no contract obligation on the part of the Panama Canal Company to make the sale which it proposed to make in January, 1902, because there was no consideration for the option given which would make the proposal a binding one.

But let us assume, for the purpose of the argument, that there was a contract binding upon the Panama Canal Company to transfer all its shares in the Panama Railroad Company to the United States, entered into in January, 1902, and to be consummated in May, 1904. The fact that no interest was to be paid on the purchase price is conclusive to show that the Panama Canal Company was entitled to all the dividends on the shares of stock which it held in the Panama Railroad Company that might be legally declared by the directors of the company in accordance with its charter and general rules of law affecting the declaration of dividends by incorporated companies. Now, what is the rule with reference to the declaration of dividends? It is that a dividend may be declared out of the net earnings of the company, and there is no limitation whatever with respect to the time preceding the declaration of the dividend when those net earnings were earned, provided only that they are in the form of money in the treasury of the company when the dividends are declared and have not been permanently changed into capital either by expending them in increasing the permanent plant of the corporation or in reducing its indebtedness. Let us examine the facts to see whether the railroad company has violated this rule in any respect in its declaration of dividends.

The accounts of the company show that the available net earnings of the company, less the losses of 1893 and 1894, from January 1, 1893, to January 1, 1902, amounted to $2,072,359.42, and that out of that sum there was expended on capital account, for additions to permanent plant, $1,604,407.12, leaving a balance of net earnings unexpended and in the treasury of the company on January 1, 1902, of $467,952.30, less a dividend of 2 per cent, paid in March of 1901, of $140,000.

In other words, the available net earnings in the treasury of the company on January 1, 1902, amounted to $327,952.30. These net earnings, however, were represented by $304,919.80 cash, and twenty-two 4½ per cent bonds of the company, purchased in open market, of $23,032.50. For purposes of this discussion I shall consider that only the cash, to wit, $304,919.80, was available for dividends. On that day the current cash assets of the company in excess of current liabilities amounted to $861,020.45.

In 1902 the net earnings were $295,384.40, which added to the undivided profits or net earnings already in the treasury of $304,919.80, made $600,304.20. The dividends paid in 1902 were $280,000, leaving a balance of undivided profits of $320,304.20. During the year 1902, there were expended out of these profits $72,682.80 upon permanent plant, which reduced the balance on January 1, 1903, of unexpended profits to $247,621.40. This was in cash in the treasury. On January 1, 1903, the current cash assets, over and above the liabilities of the company, amounted to $894,924.49.

The net earnings for the year 1903 were $401,068.30, which added to the unexpended profits brought over from 1902 of $247,621.40 made the undivided profits available for the declaration of dividends during the year 1903, $646,689.70. The dividends declared and paid in 1903 amounted to $500,000, leaving a balance of $88,589.70 of undivided profits. There were, however, capital expenditures during the year 1903 of $20,701.67, leaving a balance of undivided profits on January 1, 1904, of $67,988.03 in cash. The current cash assets over and above the liabilities of the company on January 1, 1904, amounted to $722,668.15.

The net earnings of the period from January 1 to May 1, 1904, amounted to $216,813.03, which, added to $67,988.03, the undivided profits brought over from 1903, made the undivided profits available for a dividend on the 1st of May, 1904, $284,801.06. A dividend was paid on the 3d of May of $175,000, leaving a balance of $109,801.06. The current cash assets, over and above the liabilities of the company, on May 1, 1904, amounted to $826,344.30. There should be deducted $456.50 from the undivided profits charged to capital account for permanent improvement, leaving a balance of undivided profits, in cash in the company's treasury, of $109,344.56 on May 1, 1904. No dividends were declared or paid to the Panama Canal Company after this, and its stock was transferred to the United States on the 7th of May following.

The figures which I have given above were prepared for me by Mr. Rossbottom, the first assistant secretary of the railroad company, from the books of the company, and are indisputable. I append his statement hereto, marked "Exhibit 1." The figures show, therefore, that instead of the Panama Canal Company, as a stockholder in the railroad company, depriving the United States, as its transferee of stock, of the benefit to it, of assets of the company by the declaration and payment of dividends in excess of net earnings, there was left in the treasury of the company $109,344.56 of undivided profits, which the Panama Canal Company might have properly declared as dividends, unless the next transaction that I am about to discuss would have prevented it.

BONDS FOR REPAIR AND RECONSTRUCTION OF STEAMERS.

In 1903, the steamships Advance and Finance, which were part of the fleet of the Panama Railroad Company, and in active service, became so much out of repair that the insurance companies would not class them as A1, and they had to be put out of commission, and the company was obliged to charter steamers to take their place, at the rate of about $16,000 a month.

In November, 1905, a contract was made with Cramp & Sons for the reconstruction of these steamers. (See p. 2918 et seq. of record of hearings before this committee.) The directors regarded this expense as properly chargeable to capital account, because it involves practically the rebuilding of the steamers; and therefore they made an agreement with Cramp by which they were to pay him, for the work to be done on them, $200,000 in 4½ per cent bonds of the company, which they had in the treasury unissued, and the remainder in cash.

The contract was not to be completed until July or August of 1904. The contract did not fix specifically the time or the total cost. As a matter of fact, it was not completed until some time in August, and the cost of the reconstruction was $370,000. Meantime, between the making of the contract in November, 1903, and August, 1904, the transfer of the shares of stock had been effected on May 7, 1904, from the Panama Canal Company to the United States, and three of the Isthmian Canal Commissioners had been elected members of the board of directors of the Panama Railroad Company—Admiral Walker and two others. Under the contract, 121 one thousand dollar bonds of the 200 had been delivered to Cramp & Sons for the part of the contract performed on the 7th of May, 1904.

The remainder of the 200 were delivered afterwards, but in August they were returned to the company, and instead of completing the arrangemnt with Cramp & Sons a new agreement was completed with Vermilye & Co., by which Vermilye & Co. took $265,000 of the bonds. With something over $100,000 from the treasury of the company, the whole payment to complete the contract was made in cash to Cramp & Sons, and there was thus added to the bonded indebtedness of the company $265,000.

I do not hesitate to say that I think it would have been much wiser if the company had not issued the $265,000 of bonds, but had paid the whole sum in cash, as it might easily have done, for it had at the time $700,000 in cash in its treasury. The report of the Commission for 1904 stated that "The company issued 265 bonds to the public to pay for the repairs to the Advance and Finance. These bonds were sold as required by contract made in October, 1903. The balance of the money was taken from a reserved fund of depreciation of steamers, amounting to $102,750." This statement in the report of the Commission is not exactly correct, because the contract made in October, 1903, only provided for the issue of 200 bonds of $1,000 each, and the transaction which was actually carried out was not in performance of that contract at all, but made with another party.

The transaction seems not to have met with criticism by the Congressional committee appointed to investigate it. As already said, the board was not under the control of the Secretary of War at the time those bonds were issued, because only three of the Commissioners were then members of the board of directors. The Government did not obtain complete control of the directorate by the election of all the directors until the annual meeting in April, 1905. It is now proposed to purchase all the outstanding 4½ per cent bonds of this issue, which will include, therefore, the 265 bonds.

I do not propose to inquire into the propriety of the company issuing bonds for such a purpose as that of reconstructing steamers. I am bound to admit that it is very questionable, for the reason that it does not add to the capital. It merely supplies a loss to the capital; and such bonds ought not to be issued certainly if dividends are to be declared out of the earnings which might have been used to pay for such reconstruction and making good the capital. But it is one thing to criticise the course of the company in this respect and another thing to show that it has effected any pecuniary injury at all to the United States of which the United States may properly complain. The only bonds issued between November, 1903, and May 7, 1904, were $121,000. Now, even if these repairs should have been paid out of the earnings of the company instead of by issuing bonds, and there was left a sufficient amount in the treasury of the company out of net earnings or any other fund properly applicable to the payment of the repairs to take up the bonds thus issued for repairs, the United States certainly had no reason to complain.

The fact is that, at the time of the transfer to the United States, there was in the treasury of the railroad company, as already shown, $109,344.56 of undivided net earnings, and there was also in the treasury, as stated in the report of the Commissioners, which I have cited above, and as shown in the statement of account given by Mr. Rossbottom, the sum of $102,750 in cash, which had been kept in the treasury for years as a fund to meet the depreciation in value of steamers and tugs, and therefore to be devoted to this very purpose. In other words, there was a fund in the treasury which would pay or take up not only the 120 bonds already issued, but the 200 bonds to be issued under the contract in force at the time of the transfer.

Certainly, therefore, the declaration of dividends out of other net earnings than these was not at all to the prejudice of the United States, and could not be made the basis either for an abatement in the price from the $40,000,000 or for a recovery of any sum from the Panama Canal Company. It is true that the cost of repairs reached unexpectedly $370,000; but repairs are current expenses to be paid as they fall due, and there was enough money in the treasury to pay all the repairs, payment for which had fallen due, and nearly $100,000 more at the time the United States became the chief stockholder.

PRICE PAID FOR OUTSTANDING STOCK.

The second subject, with respect to which I should like to submit a few remarks to the committee, is as to the wisdom of the purchase of the outstanding stock of the Panama Railroad Company at the prices which were paid. There is some evidence given by Mr. Drake in which he said that single shares of the company had been sold as low as 70 or 80 cents sometime prior to the purchase of the shares by the United States. He said that when anyone came into the office offering the stock in small quantities they usually sent the holder of the stock to one J. B. Manning, who bought it up at the price of 75 or 80 cents. Manning was the stockholder who held 234 shares at the time of the transfer to the United States and to whom we were obliged to pay $280 a share. I have had a transcript made of Mr. Manning's holdings of stock, as shown by the stock book, and it appears that he purchased no stock after 1902. Therefore it must have been before 1902 when he paid the price of 80 cents. It must be borne in mind that after that time the stock paid dividends. Prior to that time, for six or eight years, it had paid no dividends.

It is not surprising, therefore, that single shares of stock would sell as low as 75 or 80 cents by persons anxious to get rid of it, and whose interest was so small as not to make them careful of the price at which they disposed of it. The truth is that the price which the United States paid to the Panama Canal Company for sixty-nine seventieths of the whole capital stock was, as shown in the estimate of the Commission, at the rate of something over $100 a share. In the spring of 1904, 100 shares of the stock were offered to Admiral Walker, the chairman of the Commission, at $100 a share, and I authorized the purchase on this ground.

In January, 1905, when I gave the authority to Mr. Cromwell to make the purchases at $100 a share, a dividend of 5 per cent had been declared out of the earnings, and there was no reason to suppose that the value of the stock had decreased, because the United States needed the stock, as it was shown, and because the earnings had kept up. It is submitted that it would have been absurd for the United States, having paid more than $100 a share for sixty-nine seventieths, to seek to buy the outstanding shares at any less price per share.

In order that there may be no mistake or error in respect to the purchase, I beg to attach hereto, as "Exhibit 2," all the correspondence which I had with Mr. Cromwell, and all his accounts, in respect to the buying of the shares. One or two letters of this correspondence are already in the record, but for the sake of clearness I insert them in their proper order in this exhibit.

In testifying before this committee on the 25th of January, 1905, I said, on page 11 of the record of the evidence:

"* * * A gentleman came to me recently and told me that he thought he could get the shares, because of his familiarity with the company and its transactions, for par, with 5 per cent, and I authorized him to make the purchase if he could. But it is quite probable that some of those shares are in the hands of individuals in Wall street who think that they can be made valuable by using them for some other purpose than the benefit either of the Government or of the company; and I think we ought to have the power, by special proceedings, to condemn those shares in the State of New York. The company is a New York corporation, and unless we can control the railroad absolutely as an instrument for the construction of the canal, we shall have to build another railroad there."

Senator KNOX questioned the power to get rid of the minority stockholders by condemnation, and suggested that we ought to make an offer to the minority stockholders, with the statement that the Government was willing to buy the stock on the basis that the old dividends made it worth. He said:

"I think you would have them all coming in on that, would you not? You have an absolute power in the matter."

To which I replied:

"Suppose a dissentient stockholder comes in and says: 'Here is a great opportunity for the stockholders of this company. There is a work to be done down there, and this road is needed for that work.

"'The freight will be increased a hundredfold, and the revenues of the road, if the road is properly conducted—as we have a right to have it conducted under our franchise—will be such that we will probably earn 30 or 40 per cent dividends each year. Now, this majority stockholder property proposes to set us aside with an 8 per cent dividend or a 10 per cent dividend.' Certainly he has a right to be heard in a court of equity."

"Senator KNOX. But you certainly do not avoid that difficulty by condemning the stock, because he will raise all those questions on the condemnation proceedings to determine the value of the property.

"Secretary TAFT. Well, he may; but when we do get rid of him, then we have gotten rid of him, and the condemnation ends the business. If, on the other hand, you are going to lease, you will have constant litigation as to the fairness of your lease."

The subcommittee of the Interstate Commerce Committee of the House of Representatives, in their report, after a full investigation of the affairs of the company, made the following recommendations:

"The committee is of the opinion that the United States should secure ownership of the entire stock of the Panama Railroad Company."

It will be remembered that, at the instance of the President, the House of Representatives passed a law abolishing the Commission and making provision in the law for the condemnation of the outstanding stock of the Panama Railroad Company. When the bill came into the Senate objection was made to the abolition of the Commission, and because of the inability of the two Houses to agree the whole bill failed on the 4th of March, 1905, when that Congress ceased to be. By that time Mr. Cromwell had succeeded in obtaining substantially all the outstanding stock at $100 a share, except 234 shares held by J. B. Manning and three lots of 10 shares each held by persons whose agents were in Wall street and who had discussed with Mr. Manning the value of the stock, and had agreed with him that they would not accept the offer made by Mr. Cromwell under my authority of purchase at par. Mr. Manning, in the time of De Lesseps, had owned 100 shares of stock in the Panama Railroad Company, and sold it to the Panama Canal Company at what was equivalent to $280 a share. Thereafter he began to accumulate stock until, in 1902, he had 234 shares. I have taken occasion to find out Mr. Manning's business and his peculiarities and his circumstances in order to show why it was necessary to pay him $280 a share in order to get his stock.

Mr. Manning has an office on Wall street, and deals in unmarketable bonds and unmarketable stock, and has money enough to hold them until such time as persons interested in the enterprises desire to buy the bonds or stock, and then he exacts a good round price for them. His business is just exactly that of obtaining a nuisance value for odd shares of stock and bonds, a large majority of which are owned by some one who wishes to obtain complete control. He is a man reputed to be worth a million dollars or more, a very keen trader, one who knew the condition of the company, and knew that the company since 1893 had been accumulating its net earnings in shape of reduced indebtedness and enlargement of plant. He reasoned that the United States Government would need the road and that anyone who remained as stockholder might insist upon very large dividends due to the increased business given the road by the United States. He professed the desire not to sell his stock at all, but wished to be a partner in the road with the United States. I had several conversations with Mr. Cromwell on the subject of getting Mr. Manning's stock. After the 4th of March Mr. Cromwell thought that the failure of Congress to authorize the condemnation of stock made it necessary to secure the stock at once, and at any price. Accordingly Mr. Cromwell called on Mr. Manning, determined to purchase the stock, and finally induced him to accept $280, the same price which De Lesseps has paid him. Lest he might back out of his contract, and without an opportunity to consult me, Mr. Cromwell drew his personal check for $65,000 necessary to make the purchase, sent it out and had it certified, and obtained the stock at once from Mr. Manning. He did the same thing with the holders of the other three lots of ten shares each, though he succeeded in getting them at $200.

Mr. Cromwell then came to me and said that he had bought these shares at a price which had been unauthorized, and that, therefore, if I declined to pay the price, he was willing to take them as his own property, but would turn them over to me at cost at any time, and would give the Government his irrevocable power of attorney to vote the stock until I could submit the matter to Congress. This was, as the correspondence shows, on the 8th of March. I took time to consider, consulting the President and also Senators ALLISON and SPOONER, and my recollection is that I spoke also to the Speaker of the House, but of this latter I can not be certain.

At my request, Senator SPOONER talked with Senator Gorman on the subject and explained the situation, and the unanimous advice was that the price was a small one to pay in order to obtain all the outstanding stock. Persons who have had any experience in attempting to secure all the shares of stock down to the last one in any corporation, with as many stockholders as this one, understand the great difficulty there is in obtaining it all, and the necessity for paying an exorbitant price to some one who is willing to use the exigency to enforce an unconscionable bargain.

The result is that for the 1,112 shares of stock outstanding, whose par value was about $111,200, we have had to pay a little less than $46,000 more than par. When we consider the great difficulties that would be presented in compelling the sale of this stock, the delay in the litigation that certainly would be involved, I must think that it was a very useful settlement for the United States. A dissentient stockholder would of course have objected to the United States using the railroad for its own purposes, and could have insisted that all the freight that it carried over the line, whether in the removal of the excavated material or in the transportation of equipment, must be at fairly reasonable commercial rates and that the profit of the transactions should be divided according to the holdings of the stock. Every arrangement effected would have been subject to examination by this dissentient stockholder, and might have been carried into a court of equity to prevent the United States from abusing its power as a majority stockholder. The advantage of getting rid of the nagging and the nuisance which would have been caused by such a stockholder, and the inevitable delay thus caused, measured in money value to the United States, far exceeds the $46,000 which we were obliged to pay to secure the last share of stock.

SHARES HELD BY DIRECTORS.

It hardly seems to me worth while to answer the suggestion with reference to the method by which directors are qualified to sit upon the board under the New York laws. One share of stock is sold by the Government to each director who pays for the stock, and when he receives the certificate indorses it in blank and signs an irrevocable power of attorney to the United States to transfer it again to the United States on demand, the United States paying $10 to make valid and binding the option to take over the stock. In this way the director is qualified, and in this way the United States obtains power to obtain the share whenever it is needed and to qualify some one else for the director. The members of the Commission constitute a majority of the board of directors, the chairman of the Commission is the president of the road, and a majority of the executive committee are persons connected with the Commission and directly under the orders of the chairman or president.

The whole road is therefore completely under the control of the Isthmian Canal Commission. Meantime the artificial entity of the railroad company is maintained, and most conveniently so, in order that it may discharge the duty of a common carrier doing a commercial business, which under the existing treaty stipulations the United States would have no right to evade or escape.

DELAY IN FILLING REQUISITIONS BY OLD COMMISSION.

Another matter to which I wish to refer is the criticism of the old Commission that it was derelict in making arrangements for a proper purchasing and forwarding bureau in this city. My recollection now is somewhat more distinct on this subject than when I was before the committee. I learned when I was on the Isthmus with Mr. Wallace and General Davis in December, 1904, of the delays in the purchases of material and equipment needed on the Isthmus, and discussed the matter with Admiral Walker. He told me that the great difficulty he had was in getting a proper man. Very soon after we returned from the Isthmus, however, he told me he had found a man. His name was Major Gallagher, and he was in the commissary department. There was some delay in assigning him, but he was assigned and began his duties on the 1st of February, relieving Mr. Redfern.

I ought further to say that after my return from the Isthmus in 1904 I sent down Dr. C. A. L. Reed, of Cincinnati, and Mr. Thomas T. Gaff, of Washington, to act as arbitrators in the assessing of the value of some land which the Commission desired to buy for residences and a hotel in Ancon, just outside of Panama. Doctor Reed is the president of the American Medical Association, and I suggested to him that he make a report to me upon the hygienic conditions which he found on the Isthmus.

He made such a report, but it was so extreme that I submitted it to the Commission for answer. Unfortunately the report was published by Doctor Reed. In this report it was charged that the delay and inefficiency of the Commission in filling the requisitions of the medical department on the Isthmus were the cause of the yellow fever. This was a serious charge, and the Commission was given full opportunity to answer. I think it only fair to the Commission in this record that Doctor Reed's charges and the answer of the Commission and the letter which I wrote forwarding the correspondence to the President should be put in this record. I therefore append it as Exhibit 3.

Very sincerely, yours,

WM. H. TAFT,
Secretary of War.

APPENDIX 2.

[Translation.]

[Compagnie Nouvelle du Canal de Panama, 7 Rue Louis le Grand, Paris. Capital, 65,000,000 francs.]

PARIS, November 18, 1898.

To the PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

SIR: The New Panama Canal Company believes it to be its duty to respectfully submit the following statement:

It is common knowledge that in 1889 the Campagnie Universelle du Canal Interocéanique de Panama, the old company, fell into financial difficulties after about one-third of the canal had been finished. The rights of that company then passed judicial administration. A liquidator (receiver) was appointed by the judgment of the civil tribunal of the Seine under date of the 4th of February, 1889. During his administration (1889–1894) and with the authorization of the court, the greatest care was taken to preserve and maintain the work already done, and a prolongation was obtained from the Republic of Colombia of the time stipulated for the completion of the canal, thus preserving the rights of the company under its concession in their entirety.

In view of the advanced state of the work on the canal and the considerable sum (at least $150,000,000) actually expended for canal work, properly so called, and for installations and plant, the logical conclusion followed that the very large capital invested would be protected through a reorganization of the affairs, which took place successfully in the month of October, 1894. At that time and with this object in view the undersigned company was organized under the general laws of France. The company is a commercial association, formed exclusively upon private capital, and has no connection, alliance, or relation whatever with any government, except the relations established by the concessions which it holds from the Republic of Colombia. The board of directors of the company is an entirely new board and composed of gentlemen of independent positions, having no official relation with the old Panama company and for the most part identified with large financial and commercial enterprises.

Pursuant to judicial sale, authorized by the court as aforesaid, the undersigned company in 1894 became the sole owner of all the canal works, plant, material, concessions, and other property of the old company. The title of the undersigned to this property is therefore unquestionable, and has been officially recognized by the Government of Colombia.

Surveys had been made by the old company, but the new company, while making use of them, would not be bound by their conclusions. The board of directors resolved at the start to examine and study anew all the questions involved, making use of the most recent improvements in material and of the advances made in engineering.

It is needless for us to enumerate the difficulties and enormous expense involved in the choice of a definite plan for the execution of this work, which is one of the greatest undertakings of our time.

Different plans, equally practicable but varying in probable cost, have been studied. Many months have been spent in preparing, studying, and revising them. This work has not been done hastily and superficially. Engineers, chosen especially for their professional ability, have studied the question in all its details—technical, climatic, physical, geologic, and economic.

Though the skill of its own technical staff is worthy of the highest confidence, the undersigned company, out of abundant caution and in order to place beyond criticism the final conclusions, caused to be appointed an International Technical Commission, composed of engineers selected from different nationalities, a course which assures to the company the benefit of the widest possible experience, the severest judgment, and the most independent conclusions. The International Technical Commission is composed as follows:

M. Robaglia, president, inspector-general of roads and bridges (retired).

M. Bouvier, chairman, inspector-general of roads and bridges (retired).

General Abbot, United States Engineer Corps.

M. Castel, inspector-general of mines (retired).

M. Daymard, chief engineer of La Compagnie Transatlantique.

M. Fargue, inspector-general of roads and bridges (retired).

M. Fteley, chief engineer of the Croton Aqueduct, New York City.

M. Fulscher, private counselor to the minister of public works of Prussia, formerly technical director of the work of the Kiel Canal.

M. Hersent, civil engineer.

M. Hunter, chief engineer of the Manchester Canal.

M. Koch, councilor of public works of Germany; director of Technical Academy of Darmstadt; formerly member of the imperial commission of the Kiel Canal.

M. Jules Martin, inspector-general of roads and bridges (retired)

M. Skalskowski, formerly director of the department of mines to the minister of agriculture and lands of Russia.

M. Sosa, chief engineer, Colombia.

As to all statistical and economic questions, the new company established a special commission, presided over by M. Paul Leroy-Beaulieu, the eminent economist, and a member of the Institute of France.

It is certain that the members of these two commissions are the most distinguished and able men in their professions. No one of them would compromise his reputation and his honor, acquired by a long life of eminent services, by formulating conclusions upon unfounded, incomplete, superficial, or uncertain information.

By the closest study of the subject; by actual inspection of the works of the canal, made by several of its members; by full discussion and by frequent exchange of views; by subjecting every problem to the critical judgment of all, thus obtaining the most varied opinions; by all the methods and with all the care which the most advanced technical experience could suggest, this eminent commission of engineers has reached a unanimous conclusion, which has been officially communicated to this company, and upon which this company is pursuing the work of construction. These conclusions, signed by every member of the commission, establish the entire feasibility and practicability of completing the canal.

We do not doubt that you will be interested to learn the essential features of our plans, which have been prepared with so much labor and care, and confirmed by four years of continuous study.

1. The old company had already substituted for the proposed sea-level canal a system of locks. This principle, with important modifications and improvements, has been adopted by the new company.

2. The length of the canal from ocean to ocean is 46 miles.

3. The locks will not exceed four on each slope of the divide; all locks will have a rock foundation, and all will have doube lock chambers.

4. There is nothing in the physical conditions on the Isthmus to prevent a change from a canal with a system of locks to a sea-level canal should the latter seem desirable in the future.

5. The time of passage from ocean to ocean will be less than a day.

6. The harbors situated at either extremity (Panama and Colon) are not artificial harbors; they are natural harbors, safe and satisfactory, needing but slight improvement. This fact is known to all the world, thanks to commerce, which for almost fifty years has made use of the Panama route (the Panama Railroad).

7. Two-fifths of the work on the canal has been actually constructed; the remaining three-fifths is in a fair way of completion. During the last four years three or four thousand workmen, on an average, have been employed in working on the canal.

8. The company's concessions are unquestionable. The Republic of Colombia has given to the enterprise its cordial and sincere cooperation.

9. The existence and operation of the railroad, long established on the proposed line of the canal, greatly facilitates its construction.

10. No construction is planned which is not fully justified by practical experience.

Formerly the greatest difficulties were:

(a) The control of the floods of the Chagres River; and.

(b) The excavation of the Culebra cut.

The manner in which each of these difficulties is to be surmounted is shown with the greatest detail in the report of the technical commission, which we have the honor to present to you.

The condition of the new company is equally satisfactory. Its assets, including the work actually done on the canal, the buildings, the machinery, the material on hand, exceeds in value 500,000,000 francs, or $100,000,000, which valuation has been made by a special commission, of which the former director of the National Academy of Roads and Bridges of France was chairman. The company has no mortgage or bonded indebtedness. The property is free from all incumbrance. The company has no other debts than monthly pay rolls. Its cash reserve is largely in excess of its actual needs.

The undersigned company also invites your attention to the provisions of its concession, particularly articles 5 and 6, which reserves all rights to the Government of the United States secured by the treaty with the Republic of Colombia signed in 1846 and ratified in 1848.

We have the honor to be, your obedient servants,

J. BONNARDEL,
The President of the Board of Directors.

Certified by the secretary of the company.

ED. LAMPRE.

This was the opening gun of the campaign, and it was charged with smokeless powder, but the shot was fired at Nicaragua. It was heralded by Mr. Cromwell in a letter dated New York, 28th of November, 1898, addressed to Mr. Hay:

Mr. Cromwell to Mr. Hay.

NEW YORK, December 5, 1898.

MY DEAR SIR: I beg leave to confirm the telegram which I sent you at 10.45 this morning, as per inclosure.

Upon my return I learned through Director-General Hutin (who had preceded me to New York) that the measure which had just been acted on by one branch only of the Colombian Congress was a bill to authorize the executive to negotiate the terms of and to conclude a further prorogation of six years from 1904 for the completion of the canal, under a communication which the company had addressed to the Government, in the form of which I inclose you a translation.

You will note that the company specifically stated to the Government that the prorogation was not a matter of absolute necessity, but was desirable in the interests of commerce and navigation to enable an even deeper cut to be made (and which would reduce the number of locks to four), but which reduction would, of course, require more time than the plan adopted.

You will note that the bill proposed to confer power upon the executive, and this happened to arise under extraordinary political conditions in Bogota. As you have probably been advised through official channels, a serious difference has recently been existing between the House of Representatives of Colombia and the President, the House having passed formal resolution declaring the office of President vacant, and refusing to recognize the qualification of the President before the supreme court.

We therefore construe the action of the House of Representatives as only a part of the strife between the House and the President, and not a declaration of the policy of the nation or the Congress in respect of the Panama Canal, and as not evidencing hostility to the company itself. We are the more confirmed in this belief because of the uniform consideration and cordiality displayed by the Congress and the Government to the New Panama Canal Company, which we have no doubt their minister at Washington would fully confirm to you.

Our company has not the least apprehension regarding any prorogation of its concessions it may consider necessary in the future.

I have, etc., your obedient servant,

WM. NELSON CROMWELL,
Counsel New Panama Canal Company.

APPENDIX 3.

General bases with powers of consummation to Mr. Cromwell. New Panama Canal Company. Extract from the record of the minutes of the proceedings of the board of directors. Meeting of October 31, 1903. Left (at the Department) by Mr. William Nelson Cromwell November 21, 1903.

[English translation.]

Present: Messrs. BÔ, president; Monvoisin, vice-president; Terrier, vice-president; Georges Martin, secretary; Bourgois, director; Couvreux, director; Forot, director; Gueydan, director; Rischmann, director; Samper, delegate of the Colombian Government.

M. Gauton, liquidator of the Compagnie Universelle du Canal Interocéanique, was present at the meeting.

* * * * * * *

Mr. Cromwell, counsel of the company in the United States, has come to Paris to consider with the board of directors the measures which there may be occasion to take at this time on account of the delay of the ratification of the Hay-Herran treaty on the part of Colombia. He proposed to prepare a draft contract which should be submitted to the President of the United States and which would involve the continuance of the arrangements in force. This draft has been examined by M. Waldeck-Rousseau, and its text has been fixed in the following terms:

"General bases proposed by Mr. Cromwell for an understanding between the President of the United States and the new company, with a view to reaching the performance of the existing contract of March 3, 1903.

"Considering:

"1. The offer made by the new company, through President BÔ, on January 9 and 11, 1902;

"2. The acceptance by the President of the United States, through Attorney-General Knox, on the date of February 17, 1903;

"3. The agreement and confirmation of the new company, through Mr. Cromwell, its general counsel in America, under date of March 3, 1903; and

"4. The treaty of January 22, 1903;

"It is recognized that since the said date of March 3, 1903, the Senate of the United States has duly ratified the said treaty, but that this treaty is still pending in Colombia, awaiting ratification or some other decision; and that by reason of the foregoing (and of various other important circumstances) it is mutually desirable that certain details of the existing contract should be now settled.

"Consequently:

"I. It is mutually recognized that the ratification of the said treaty, in the form in which it is now pending, at a date anterior to March 4, 1905, is, by the parties, accepted as being in conformity with the offer, the acceptance, and the confirmation above mentioned. This provision shall apply also to the conclusion of a treaty under another form, or in any way which may be satisfactory to the United States, and which maintains, without modification, the provisions of articles 1 and 22 of the pending treaty. It is understood that in any case the term above mentioned may be prolonged by mutual consent of the parties should occasion arise.

"II. In the meantime the new company will continue the work of excavation of the canal in a manner in conformity with the plans adopted by the new company and by the Isthmian Canal Commission.

"III. This work of excavation shall be carried on under the inspection of a special commission, which shall be appointed by the President of the United States, to which commission the new company shall grant the fullest liberty and facilities for inspection, examination, and information, in order that if the United States carry out the purchase they may be in a position to continue the work themselves without delay.

"IV. The United States shall assume no obligation concerning this work of excavation and expenditure, unless the proposed purchase be carried out by them, and in that case their obligation shall be only that provided in the following article.

"V. In case of carrying out the proposed purchase, all questions of every nature, as well of fact as of law, relative to the claims of the new company for reimbursement for expenditures made by it after the work included in the estimate of the report of the Isthmian Canal Commission of November, 1901, shall be submitted to the judgment and final decision of the President of the United States as sole arbiter."

This draft is unanimously adopted by the members present at the meeting. M. Gautron states that he also gives his approval.

Full powers are given to Mr. Cromwell to allow him to proceed with the President of the United States in the performance of this proposal.

The meeting adjourned at 4 o'clock.

Certified as agreeing with the record of proceedings.

M. BÔ,
The President of the Board of Directors.

ED. LAMPRE,
The Secretary-General.

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 23, 1900.

Mr. SECRETARY OF STATE: I should be very grateful if you would kindly do me the honor to grant me an audience on to-morrow, March 24.

Be pleased to accept, Mr. Secretary of State, the assurances of my high consideration and devoted sentiments, together with my anticipated thanks.

M. HUTIN.

Hon. JOHN HAY, Secretary of State, Washington, D. C.

Note handed to Mr. John Hay, Secretary of State of the United States, at Washington, March 24, 1900.

The technical commission appointed by President McKinley in pursuance of the resolution of Congress of March 3, 1899, and presided over by Admiral Walker, will shortly be back in the United States, after examining on the spot the various routes suggested for the opening of a maritime way between the Atlantic and Pacific oceans.

The commission has gathered a large number of investigation documents that have been critically examined, probed, and completed by the personal observations of its members. It has now to draw up its report and formulate its conclusions.

It must be confessed that, whatever be the light in which it is examined, whatever the point of view from which it is considered, the problem of the interoceanic canal is an extremely complex question. Its true solution can only be found by seeking it with an impartial mind and an independent intellect.

It is permissible, however, to say truthfully that the manifold questions raised by the problem in both the technical and economical order have often been discussed under the influence of traditions and prejudices that progress and time have been so far unable to eradicate.

It would not be proper, on the other hand, to lay any stress here on the action and importance of the private interests which have in different quarters been involved in this considerable undertaking. We trust we may simply observe that they are worthy of consideration.

But the natural preponderance of certain national rights and interests and the supremacy of international interests must necessarily be borne in mind if the realization and the future of so great a work are to be insured.

Such are the general principles upon which the course followed by the new company of the Panama Canal was mapped out. In order to demonstrate this, it will be sufficient to recall the written and oral communications of the authorized representatives of the company to the President of the United States and to the Secretary of State in the months of November and December, 1898; the written statements handed to the Rivers and Harbors Committee of the House of Representatives and to the President of the United States on the 27th and 28th of February, 1899, and, lastly, the replies made to Admiral Walker, president of the Isthmian Canal Commission, which are set forth in the stenographic report of the last two sittings held at Paris by the said Commission.

In this convention two remarks will find their place here.

The first relates to the crisis which broke out in January, 1900, in the management of the new company of the Panama Canal. It has been alleged, in the furtherance of certain interests, that the declaration made in the United States in 1898 and 1899 by the board of directors of the company had not received the approval of a large group of parties in interest. This is absolutely erroneous. The truth is that for reasons which can not be usefully recited here there arose a conflict of powers. This conflict is now adjusted under conditions satisfactory to all parties.

The second remark bears upon the incorporation, under date of December 27, 1899, of a society styled "Panama Canal Company of America" under the laws of the State of New Jersey.

It is unnecessary for us to say that the new company of the Panama Canal, being, through its public declarations, in honor bound to reincorporate, under certain conditions in accordance with the laws of any one of the States of the Union, will not fail under any circumstances to discharge that obligation.

But it is obviously important that the freedom of action, not only of the new company, but also that of the Government of the United States itself, be reserved until such reincorporation shall be deemed expedient or become necessary.

This is why we hasten to declare that the Panama Canal Company of America holds no contract and has no legal tie with the new company of the Panama Canal.

As we observed at the outset, the Commission presided over by Admiral Walker has completed the first part of its labors.

We feel sure that it will concede that the new company of the Panama Canal did all that was in its power to facilitate its work.

We placed at its disposal, both at Paris and on the Isthmus, all the archives, all the documents that we had in our possession. We have laid before it as long and complete statements as its members may have desired of our technical plans as a whole, of our economical and statistical investigations, and, finally, of the general condition of our company.

We believe that our duty was thus fulfilled. We therefore venture, respectfully, to express our confidence that the Congress of the United States will not legislate and the Government will not come to a decision upon the question of the interoceanic canal until the report of the Commission shall have been filed.

In conclusion, we still have to consider the new situation created by the signing of the convention of February 5, 1900, between the United States and Great Britain.

The effect of Article I of the said convention is to reserve the final form to be given to the solution of the financial questions connected with the execution of the interoceanic canal.

The new company of the Panama Canal will necessarily be called upon to look into these questions at no very distant time. It will address such communications as may be appropriate on this point to the Government of the United States.

M. HUTIN,
President and General Director.

APPENDIX 4.

SULLIVAN & CROMWELL,
New York, March 31, 1903.

SIR: In connection with the presentation by Señor Jose Vicenté Concha, minister plenipotentiary and envoy extraordinary from the Republic of Colombia, of a proposed concessionary convention or treaty between the United States and Colombia, to further the completion, operation, control, and protection of the Panama Canal by the United States, I have been requested by the minister, in view of my relation to the subject as general counsel of the Panama Canal Company, and of my knowledge of the minister's views derived from our daily conferences in the preparation of the treaty, to submit the following reflections:

Colombia welcomes the United States to its territory, and will facilitate in every way reasonable within its power the consummation of the desires and needs of the United States for the completion, operation, maintenance, control, and protection of the interoceanic canal across its domain, subject, of course, to the sovereignty of Colombia, and a reasonable and just convention between the two nations.

Colombia views with admiration, as does the rest of the world, the splendid magnanimity, the far-seeing statesmanship, the virile and comprehensive policy which moves this people to construct the greatest undertaking which ever has engaged the attention of mankind, not for its own benefit alone, nor with selfish preference to its own commerce, but for the common benefit, upon equal terms and under universal neutrality in times of peace for all the peoples of the earth.

History does not furnish another instance of such national generosity, patriotism, and wisdom.

This could not but call out from Colombia the warmest response; and that nation takes pride in associating herself with an affair conducted upon such an elevated plane of national and international duty and concern.

The Isthmian Canal Commission, a most distinguished and able body, selected with much care by President McKinley to consider all possible isthmian canal routes and to determine which of them it is most to the interest of the United States to acquire, has reported unanimously that the Panama route is the most practicable and feasible route for an isthmian canal to be under the control, management, and ownership of the United States. Therefore the solution of the problem only involves two other conditions:

1. The sale by the New Panama Canal Company to the United States of the concession, property, and rights of the canal, with the shares of the Panama Railroad Company.

2. A new concessionary convention or treaty with Colombia.

3. The first of these two conditions already has been made easy of fulfillment in the formal acceptance by the New Panama Canal Company of the valuation fixed by the Isthmian Canal Commission—$40,000,000—and by its duly authorized proposal to the United States for a sale of the property at that price (subject, of course, to a satisfactory convention being arrived at between the United States and Colombia.)

The sole remaining condition, then, is the determination of the concessionary and treaty relations of the United States to a zone of territory across the Isthmus of Panama necessary for the consummation of the undertaking.

There has not been a moment in which Colombia has not entertained the keenest desire to further the designs of the United States, and this sentiment has prevailed under each succeeding administration in Colombia and alike in both of the great national parties who alternately have ruled that country.

This sentiment is neither new born nor inspired by hope of pecuniary gain. The two nations are old friends, and this feeling assumed practical form in 1846, when the treaty of that year was made, which expressly provided for the construction of this canal; in furtherance of which Colombia guaranteed to the United States the free transit of the Isthmus, and granted extraordinary concessions to the people and commerce of the United States, upon terms of perfect equality with its own citizens, while the United States, in turn, guaranteed the neutrality of the Isthmus and of the canal to be constructed upon it, as well as the sovereignty of Colombia over that territory.

It is a significant fact that this treaty of 1846–48, assuring to the United States especial rights and privileges upon the Isthmus of Panama in connection with any interoceanic canal or railroad across the Isthmus of Panama, antedates the Clayton-Bulwer treaty. The treaty of 1846–48 is in full force, as it has continued to be without change from the date of its execution.

Colombia has never made a treaty with any other nation upon the subject of an isthmian canal, although it was at liberty to do so.

These treaty ties cementing their joint design for the construction of a new highway for the world have held the two nations together in common interests and unbroken friendship for more than half a century.

By granting the concessions now owned by the New Panama Canal Company, and by furthering the construction of the canal to its present advanced stage of completion by the old and new Panama Canal companies, Colombia initiated the great work which now, happily, the United States may consummate.

While the minister of Colombia was in Washington for more than a year waiting for the moment when the subject could be seriously and attentively discussed, it is only since January 4, 1902, that anything could be definitely said or done; since then, and then only, was a definite proposal of sale made by the canal company. Immediately thereupon, however, the Government of Colombia, requiring the service of its then minister in other important fields, designated its minister of war, Señor Concha, as minister plenipotentiary and envoy extraordinary, to come at once from Bogota to Washington, charged with its ripest views and amplest instructions, to confer with the executive authorities of the United States, and, after exchange of information and opinions, to reach a satisfactory convention.

Minister Concha has devoted himself, since his arrival a few weeks ago, absorbingly to this task and is prepared to reach a conclusion with the executive officers of the Government.

He is fully empowered to negotiate and sign a treaty, subject only to the ratification of the Colombian Congress, as in like cases with all nations.

But Colombia is in the dark as to the precise desires and needs of the United States upon the subject, and Minister Concha can not, of course, anticipate in his first statement all the reasonable requirements of this Government. He wishes, however, to manifest in the most hearty manner the desire of his Government to facilitate the purposes of the United States, and this disposition is manifested by the comprehensive convention which he has this day submitted to you, but not as an ultimatum. The establishment of a canal convention involves, as you are so well aware, besides the utilization of a canal zone for the construction, operation, maintenance, control, and protection of a canal, railroad, and auxiliary works, as well as a grant renewable perpetually, and a consent to the sale by the New Panama Canal Company (all of which Colombia concedes in the convention submitted), but also numerous other grave questions relating to judicial procedure, punishment of crimes, the capture of criminals, sanitary and police regulations of Panama and Colon, proper regard to the vested interests upon the Isthmus, exemption of the United States from all forms of taxes, port charges, or other dues, etc. Quite aside from pecuniary matters, these are subjects which only can be examined and negotiated directly with you in person and are impossible of negotiation with the Houses of Congress.

Permit me to call attention to the facts that a canal convention in respect of the Isthmus of Panama necessarily involves considerations which do not relate to a section where there is but a wilderness, uninhabited by man, and producing no income to the nation. The convention respecting the Panama route covers a zone which has been the pathway of commerce across the continent for four hundred years, with important cities at its termini, with villages along the route, with a settled population, with considerable property, and with important vested interests to be taken into consideration.

All this represents an increment of value in civilizing influences, in means of protection, in expenditures of national funds for improvement and development, as well as in certitude of engineering plans, of all which the United States now may derive the benefit.

It would be neither in order nor fitting for the canal company or myself to express any views, one way or the other, upon any of the provisions of the proposed treaty, and our reserve in that regard will be noted. However, I beg to refer, by special request of the minister, to Article XXV of his proposed treaty, and which article relates to the pecuniary terms. Colombia is prepared to discuss, negotiate, and decide upon the precise sum or sums which may be reasonable for the United States to pay and for Columbia to ask; but as the subject is in the hands of Congress, and it seems impracticable at the moment to secure a definite expression of the views of the United States upon the subject, Colombia manifests its good faith and reasonableness by proposing that the annuity shall be only such sum as mutually may be agreed upon between the nations, or, failing in such agreement, such fair and reasonable amount as may be determined by a high commission presided over by the president of the International Peace Tribunal of The Hague, the remaining members being nominated in equal number by the two nations. Such annuity would only be fixed once in a hundred years.

The national requirements of Colombia make a payment of $7,000,000 desirable, and you will note the provisions on that head; but I also ask you to note that Colombia waives the annuity for the first fourteen years. This method insures to the United States the concessionary rights which it requires and which can not be affected or interrupted by any difference or delay respecting the ascertainment of the annuity. The United States is only required to pay such sum as it may agree upon, or as so may be determined to be fair and reasonable. Colombia does not ask more than what may be determined to be fair and reasonable, and surely the United States does not wish to do less than that.

I have the honor to be, Mr. Secretary,
Your obedient servant,

WM. NELSON CROMWELL,
General Counsel New Panama Canal Company.

Hon. JOHN HAY,
Secretary of State, Washington, D. C.

EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY BILL.

During the delivery of Mr. MORGAN's speech,

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 5133) to promote the safety of employees and travelers upon railroads by limiting the hours of service of employees thereon.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be laid aside temporarily.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. Without objection, it is so ordered. The Senator from Alabama will proceed.

After the conclusion of Mr. MORGAN's speech,

ADMINISTRATION OF DISTRICT SCHOOL LAW.

Mr. FORAKER obtained the floor.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. GALLINGER. Before the resolution of the Senator from Ohio is laid before the Senate I ask the Senator if he will allow me to present the memorial of Rev. S. L. Carruthers and 16 other citizens of the District of Columbia, in reference to the administration of the school law in this District, in which they ask for an investigation by Congress. I do not commit myself in any way to the memorial.

Mr. LODGE. That is in violation of the rule.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will suggest to the Senator——

Mr. GALLINGER. I am going to ask that the memorial be printed as a document, and I think under the rule I am entitled to do that. In other words, I am not presenting it as a petition. If the Chair holds that it is in violation of the rule to present this paper as a memorial at this time I will ask that it be printed as a document and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New Hampshire? The Chair hears none, and it will be so ordered.

DISMISSAL OF THREE COMPANIES OF TWENTY-FIFTH INFANTRY.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I desire to call up, if I am in order to do so, resolution No. 180.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Ohio calls up for consideration the resolution named by him, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. PENROSE on the 3d instant, as follows:

Resolved, That the President be requested to communicate to the Senate, if not incompatible with the public interests, full information bearing upon the recent order dismissing from the military service of the United States three companies of the Twenty-fifth Regiment of Infantry, United States troops (colored).

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President——

Mr. FORAKER. The resolution which the Secretary has read is the original resolution for which I have offered a substitute.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio wish his amendment reported at length?

Mr. FORAKER. No; not necessarily.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio, which has been heretofore read.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] is present in the building, and I have sent for him. While waiting for his arrival, I yield to the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL], if I may be allowed to do so, who, I believe, desires to present some morning business.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President, I rise to morning business. I beg leave to offer two petitions and certain bills.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Under the rule adopted at the last session of Congress it is not in order to interrupt the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] for that purpose. The rule to which the Chair refers reads:

It shall not be in order to interrupt a Senator having the floor for the purpose of introducing any memorial, petition, report of a committee, resolution, or bill. It shall be the duty of the Chair to enforce this rule without any point of order hereunder being made by a Senator.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President, may I be allowed to state that I did not interrupt the Senator from Ohio, but he reminded the Senate that he was waiting for the presence of a Senator on the other side, and yielded the floor to me without being requested to do so or being disturbed upon the floor, and I am, I think, in order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If the Senator from Ohio has yielded the floor, the Chair will recognize the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. FORAKER. I have not yielded the floor.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Then the Chair is of the opinion——

Mr. FORAKER. I am sorry that I can not now accommodate the Senator from Virginia in view of the statement of the Chair.

Mr. DANIEL. I have no idea of violating the rule, Mr. President.

Mr. FORAKER. I want to retain the floor.

Mr. DANIEL. Very well.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I should like to call up my resolution, which I believe was the first one introduced on this subject.

Mr. FORAKER. The resolution is already called up. I will say to the Senator from Pennsylvania that I have called up in his absence the Senator's resolution and my substitute, and they are both now before the Senate. On yesterday, while the Senator was absent, these resolutions were before the Senate and there was some discussion then which I thought indicated that there might be an agreement arrived at. I do not want to interfere with the Senator's resolution, but I want to pass my own; and, if there is no objection to my resolution being considered independently, I am willing to have it so considered, and let the Senator's resolution be considered in that way.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, that suggestion is entirely satisfactory to me. I said when the Senator from Ohio presented his resolution that it was not incompatible with mine, one being directed to the President and the other to the Secreary of War. I would suggest that the vote be taken on my rsolution, it having been first introduced; and if that shall be passed, that then the Senate consider the resolution of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. FORAKER. I want it understood that there is a unanimous agreement that my resolution be presented independently as an original resolution, and that it will not be objected to so that it may have to go over; otherwise I shall insist on its being considered as a substitute for the resolution of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. PENROSE. I ask unanimous consent that that may be considered as the understanding—that we consider the Senator's resolution as an independent resolution, and not subject to go over on one objection.

Mr. WARREN. I wish to say if the resolution which I offered as a substitute, embodying the subject-matter of both resolutions, is considered as standing in the way of the plan proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], it may be laid aside for the purpose indicated by the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] shall be regarded as an original resolution and be considered after the disposition of the resolution introduced by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE]? The Chair hears no objection; and it is so ordered.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, so far as the resolution introduced by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] is concerned, I would be entirely satisfied with it, but as he has withdrawn it I suppose the only question before the Senate is on the adoption of my resolution.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, the question is on the adoption of the resolution of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], as I understand.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the adoption of the resolution of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I am opposed to the resolution offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania. My opposition to it is based entirely upon the form of it. This resolution does not, so far as the subject-matter goes, fall within the class of inquiries which the Senate has ever been accustomed to address to the President. It implies on its face, Mr. President, a doubt here which I think does not exist; as to whether the Senate is of right entitled to all the facts relating to the discharge of the three named companies or not. Always the Senate, in passing resolutions of inquiry addressed to Cabinet officers, except the Secretary of State, make them in form of direction, not request. It rarely has happened that a request has been addressed to any Cabinet officer where foreign relations were involved. Where such a resolution has been adopted it has been addressed to the President, with the qualification that he is requested to furnish the information only so far as, in his judgment, the transmission of it is compatible with the public interest.

There are reasons for that, Mr. President. The State Department stands upon an entirely different basis as to the Congress from the other Departments. The conduct of our foreign relations is vested by the Constitution in the President. It would not be admissible at all that either House should have the power to force from the Secretary of State information connected with the negotiation of treaties, communications from foreign governments, and a variety of matters which, if made public, would result in very great harm in our foreign relations—matters so far within the control of the President that it has always been the practice, and it always will be the practice, to recognize the fact that there is of necessity information which it may not be compatible with the public interest should be transmitted to Congress—to the Senate or to the House.

There are other cases, not especially confined, Mr. President, to the State Department, or to foreign relations, where the President would be at liberty obviously to decline to transmit information to Congress or to either House of Congress. Of course, in time of war, the President being Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy, could not, and the War Department or the Navy Department could not, be required by either House to transmit plans of campaign or orders issued as to the destination of ships, or anything relating to the strategy of war, the public knowledge of which getting to the enemy would defeat the Government and its plans and enure to the benefit of an enemy.

There are still other cases. The Department of Justice would not be expected to transmit to either House the result of its investigations upon which some one had been indicted, and lay bare to the defendant the case of the Government. The confidential investigations in various departments of the Government should be, and have always been, treated by both Houses as confidential, and the President is entirely at liberty to permit by the Cabinet officer to whom the inquiry is addressed as much or as little information regarding them as he might see fit. I have no doubt the President would transmit everything upon this subject. My objection is to the form of the resolution. I think we ought to maintain the uniform practice upon the subject. I do not think, as to a matter upon which the Senate clearly has a right to be fully advised, it should depart from the usual form of directing the transmission by the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy or the Secretary of the Interior, to adopt a resolution of request of the President, bearing upon its face a recognition of the fact that he is at liberty to withhold the information or to transmit such part of it as he shall see fit.

Mr. President, in time of peace as to matters relating to the organization and the administration of the Army there can be no secrecy. It is purely domestic public business, as to which the Congress has a right to know. I should be very much disappointed if in a matter of this kind the Senate should address the inquiry to the President, coupled, as it must be, with the suggestion that we doubt our right to the information. I think it is a bad precedent to establish. In such matters I think we ought to maintain the practice which, so far as I remember, hitherto has been unbroken. Therefore I am opposed to the form of the resolution of the Senator from Pennsylvania. I am in favor of the form of the resolution of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I desire only to say a word of the same general character as that which has been spoken by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER]. My objection to the resolution offered on yesterday by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] was that under it the President would have a right to withhold information particularly called for by the resolution I had offered. Senators will observe when they come to look at that resolution that nothing is called for except only that which is specifically described, and that it is all of a character such as the Senate is clearly entitled to. No one has the right to withhold it from the knowledge of the Senate if the Senate asks for it. That was the only objection I had to having my resolution incorporated with the resolution offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania in a resolution such as was offered by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] on yesterday. The same objection, of course, lies to the suggestion which was made, also, by the Senator from Pennsylvania that we might unite the resolutions. If the Senate sees fit to adopt it, I have no objection to the resolution offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania; but I shall insist in any contingency upon the consideration of my own resolution as calling for information we are clearly entitled to without anybody giving his judgment whether or not it is our right to have it.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, on the matter of precedents I have only had a moment to look back. My memory was that we had sent many inquiries to the President which did not refer to foreign relations. On looking hastily back through a book from the Secretary's desk, I find in the Fifty-ninth Congress the following resolution, offered by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], was adopted:

Resolved, That the President is hereby requested, if not incompatible with the public interests, to transmit to the Senate the reports of the Keep Commission on Department methods, relating to official crop statistics and the investigation of the Twelfth Census report on agriculture.

It seems nothing could be more purely domestic than that. I find another, as follows:

Resolved, That the President be requested to furnish the Senate, if not incompatible with the best interests of the service, the petition and accompanying papers of certain officers of the Army, veterans of the civil war, retired from active service for disability contracted in the line of duty, and who have not yet received the benefits of the act of April 23, 1904.

Those are two very recent ones. I thought I remembered some relating to the Philippines, and I find there are some. This book only goes back to the Fifty-eighth Congress, but I find a resolution submitted by Mr. Hoar, as follows:

Resolved, That the President be requested, if not in his opinion incompatible with the public interest, to inform the Senate whether there be any law or regulation in force in the Philippine Islands which will prevent any native of those islands who may so desire, not under arrest and against whom no charge of any offense against the United States is pending, from coming to the United States and stating his views or desires as to the interest of his people to the President or either House of Congress.

Mr. SPOONER. When was that adopted?

Mr. LODGE. That was referred to the Committee on the Philippines, and printed. It was not adopted. The other two that I read were adopted. I have no doubt that others could be found. Certainly, I think that there can be no question that resolutions of inquiry have been addressed to the President on all possible subjects. In this case, he being Commander in Chief of the Army, it seems to me it is perfectly proper in form to address a resolution to him on a subject where he has taken direct action and about which there is a great deal of public feeling and has been a great deal of public discussion. It seems to me the proper way to get the facts before us is to make inquiry, not only of the War Department, but of the President himself, so that he may have an opportunity to state to Congress in the fullest official manner the reasons which actuated him in rendering this decision, which, of course, as we all know, is peculiarly his own.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I take it for granted the President will find some way to put the Senate in possession of any information he has that he wishes to put before it. On the other hand, it seems to me entirely proper for the Senate to ask the President for such information as the Senate wants, and that he is the proper one to ask. And believing that the Senate and the country want all the information obtainable I am willing, if I have the opportunity, to vote for both resolutions, the one proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] and the one proposed by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER]. I know of no rule against such action. I know of no custom against it. I know of no reason why we should not adopt both resolutions as presented here, though by all means we should indorse the one directed to the President whether or not we adopt the other one.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, the precedents cited by the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] might be increased in great number. For many years past, even during the war, it was a frequent occurrence to call on the President for information. I myself have been somewhat of a stickler in reference to the form of resolutions of inquiry. We request the President, and we direct the Cabinet officers; but, after all, the whole matter of communicating information to this body by Cabinet officers is absolutely under the control of the President. If the President declines or thinks such information should not be sent, it is not sent. We request the President for information, "if not incompatible with the public interest." That is merely a courteous form of making the request. If we left out the expression "if not incompatible with the public interest," he would still have authority to withhold any information. I think it will be found that the rule among Cabinet officers, whenever requests of delicacy or importance have been presented by Congress, has been to consult the President in relation thereto.

Mr. LODGE. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question in that connection?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. My memory is that there have been cases within comparatively recent years where Cabinet officers having been directed by resolution of the Senate to send certain information to it, have withheld entirely, or withheld in part, such information by order of the President.

Mr. TELLER. Undoubtedly.

Mr. LODGE. I think it occurred under Mr. Cleveland on more than one occasion, and I think it has occurred in relation to the Department of the Interior quite recently, though I do not remember the exact date.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. TELLER. Yes.

Mr. CARMACK. I think that occurred in a former session of Congress when an answer to a resolution of mine asking the Secretary of the Treasury for certain information was declined on the ground that it would be incompatible with the best interests of the public service.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, there are undoubtedly a large number of precedents of that kind. I had occasion some time ago to consult the precedents running back forty or fifty years, and I have a very distinct recollection of a number of cases where Presidents have declined to communicate information both to the House and to the Senate.

I do not think there is any impropriety in our asking the President in a courteous, proper manner to communicate information to the Senate. I am under the impression, Mr. President, that the better practice would be to ask the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Treasury, or the Secretary of the Navy, whoever it might be that had the matter under control, without annoying the President and adding to his work. But, so far as I am concerned, I am willing to vote for a resolution asking the President for information, or I am willing to vote for a resolution asking the Secretary of War for information; but I do not think we ought to ask them both. It seems to me we ought to confine ourselves to one or the other. I simply express my preference for the method of asking the Secretary of War, instead of asking the President. If the President or the Secretary of War wish to communicate on the subject, they know how to do so by direct message to this body.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. I was going to say that the resolution I read requesting the President for certain information in regard to veterans of the civil war was introduced by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] himself.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, briefly, and principally to address myself to the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER], I think it may be taken for granted that as a matter of mere official ethics the address of the resolution of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] to the President of the United States is deferential and correct. It must not be lost sight of that the President represents the executive department, a coordinate department of the Government. The right of the President, because of his character as Chief Executive of the Nation, charged with the conduct of our foreign affairs, to be the sole judge as to the communication to Congress of matters relating to our international affairs was well stated by the Senator from Wisconsin.

The Senator further proceeded to say that in case of actual war it would be obviously improper for the Senate to call upon the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy for plans of battle or campaigns, for drafts of fortifications or lines of defense, or for any information which, if made public, might militate against the interests of the country. But the Senator undertakes to differentiate by saying that this is a time of peace, and, therefore, the directions of the President with reference to the Army must be under a different rule as relates to the legislative department from that which would obtain in time of war. The logic of that, I think, will not be apparent to the mind of the Senator from Wisconsin when he reflects upon the particular facts in this case as made known by current information. It is alleged, and not denied, that the troops engaged in the controversy concerning which we seek information actually committed murder in the State of Texas.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. CARTER. I do.

Mr. FORAKER. I do not know whether I correctly understood the Senator. I understood him to say that it is charged, and not denied, that the troops mentioned, or some of them, committed murder in the State of Texas. I want to say to the Senator that I am not surprised that he makes that statement, because that is the popular understanding as I gather from the newspapers; but, nevertheless, it is not true. The record shows that that charge is denied, and there is a great deal of testimony, if not the weight of testimony, in favor of the denial. But that is a matter upon which I do not wish to enter. It is a matter we can discuss after we get the facts for which the resolutions call, one of which facts is the testimony that has been submitted. We can then look it over and see what the state of facts is.

Mr. CARTER. It is not necessary to the elucidation of the point I desire to make that I should characterize the current report as correct or incorrect. I will merely state, then, that it is alleged, and not denied, that certain soldiers of the United States at a point in Texas disturbed the public peace.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me, that also is denied. The question which has been under consideration when the testimony has been taken has been whether or not the soldiers, or any of them, participated in this so-called "shooting up" of the town. The testimony does not clearly show that any of them did, and there is testimony to show that none of them did.

Mr. CARTER. Then, in order to reach an understanding——

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. CARTER. If the Senator from South Carolina will permit me, I will say that it is alleged——

Mr. FORAKER. Yes.

Mr. CARTER. That some disturbance occurred at a point in Texas for which soldiers of the United States were responsible.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. CARTER. Most assuredly I yield.

Mr. FORAKER. I do not wish to be overly particular about this, but I have seen so much of this statement, assuming that this, that, and the other thing has been done, that I feel called upon to set the Senator right in the hope that I may at the same time set a great many other people right.

Mr. CARTER. I will say to the Senator that I do not assume anything. I say it is alleged. Does the Senator from Ohio deny the fact that it is alleged?

Mr. FORAKER. I do not deny that it is alleged that troops belonging to this command were guilty of the offense to which the Senator refers, but what I want to get before the Senate is that it is denied, and there is a very strong lot of testimony in support of that denial. What the fact is I do not pretend to say. I want to get all the facts, and then we can find out.

Mr. CARTER. Then, Mr. President——

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. CARTER. I yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. TILLMAN. I was merely going to remark that I saw in the Washington Post this morning what purports to be an advance copy of something the Secretary of War will send to us in his annual report, and he has thought it of sufficient moment to give it to the press ahead of its official presentation. If I am not mistaken, I saw in that report, or that alleged report—we have to speak by the card this morning, it appears——

Mr. CARTER. The Senator had better put it that way.

Mr. TILLMAN. That the Secretary of War practically asserts what the Senator from Montana asserts; and the Secretary of War certainly would not give out to the newspapers, as an authoritative statement coming from him, a misstatement, would he?

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

Mr. CARTER. I wish to interpolate, to the end that it may not be lost to the record, that the Senator from Montana has made no assertion in reference to the occurrence in Texas.

Mr. TILLMAN. I understand that what the Senator is alleging——

Mr. CARTER. The Senator stated that it was alleged in current reports. Beyond that the Senator from Montana asserted nothing.

Mr. TILLMAN. The Secretary of War alleges, or the newspapers allege that he alleges, that certain soldiers, ten or twenty, did shoot up the town of Brownsville, and the facts in regard to that transaction are what the Senator from Ohio is trying to get, and I hope the Senate will help him to get them.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. CARTER. I yield.

Mr. FORAKER. Just a moment, if the Senator will allow me. I also read in the morning papers what was reported to have been written by the Secretary of War, and I noticed the unqualified statement of the guilt of these men made by the Secretary of War, and it was because I noted that that I was more particular to interrupt the Senator from Montana than I otherwise would have been.

The Secretary of War, as I understand, does not pretend to have any information on this subject except only what is given in a pamphlet which has been printed by the War Department, setting forth all the testimony that has been taken in regard to this trouble, and setting forth also the reports of the several inspectors who have been there to investigate that trouble. This is what the Secretary of War had before him——

Mr. TILLMAN rose.

Mr. FORAKER. Only a line, if the Senator from South Carolina will allow me.

Mr. TILLMAN. I merely want to ask the Senator where he got the copy of that document. I have been trying to get something bearing on this subject.

Mr. FORAKER. I saw in the newspapers that the War Department had printed this document, and I sent there and asked if I might be favored with a copy, and they favored me. I have no doubt the Department will give the Senator one.

Mr. GALLINGER. One was sent to everybody.

Mr. LODGE. One was sent to every Senator.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mine has not come. I should like to have the Senator from Massachusetts give me his, if he has a copy of it.

Mr. FORAKER. Major Blocksom is the first inspector sent to Brownsville and the only one who went to Brownsville, and after he had been there and had carefully gone over the whole situation, and after he had examined all the witnesses and had inquired among the troops he saw fit to call upon, and after he had familiarized himself with the testimony taken by the citizens' committee, he wrote his report, in which occurs this statement:

> The officers appeared to be trying to find the criminals, but it is certainly unfortunate for the reputation of the battalion that they have as yet hardly discovered a single clue to such a terrible preconcerted crime committed by so many men.

Then on the 28th day of August, after he had completed his investigation and after the command had left there for El Reno, he reported to the War Department, to the Chief of Staff, saying, among other things:

> Almost no evidence against men arrested, though believe majority more or less guilty, etc.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President——

Mr. FORAKER. If the Senator will bear with me for just a moment, running all through not only this report, but each of the other reports, is the same uncertainty as to the guilt, the same confession that there is no satisfactory evidence; and I do not hesitate to say that this evidence, on which is predicated the claim that these men are guilty of committing this crime, is the most incomplete, the most unsatisfactory, the most flimsy in character on which a conviction was ever rested to my knowledge. So, instead of saying there is against these men testimony which shows their guilt without doubt, just the opposite is true.

In addition to the character of this testimony, which is so unsatisfactory, is the contradictory testimony, negativing these charges, given by the noncommissioned officers who had charge of quarters, and who had charge of the guns, and who were in a situation to know what the truth was. I understand it will be no trouble to show that these are all men of good reputation for truth and veracity, who have the confidence, as the positions they hold indicate they have, of the officers who put them in those positions. Now, the testimony of all these men is of necessity entirely excluded by those who say there is no doubt whatever about the guilt.

But, as I say, I do not now desire to discuss this matter. When I get the facts I do want to present to the Senate an analysis of the testimony, to show the character of it, and to show how unsatisfactory and how insufficient it is to warrant the serious finding against these men, and especially the men who are conceded to be innocent and who are being punished under this order.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, I think the Senate will agree with me——

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. CARTER. I should like to make an observation just at this point, and then I shall be glad to yield.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Montana declines to yield.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, the Senator from Ohio challenged my statement that it was alleged that some disturbance occurred in the State of Texas with which troops of the United States were connected.

Mr. FORAKER. No; "responsible."

Mr. CARTER. I submit to the Senate that the Senator from Ohio has amply justified by his statement the fact that allegations were made and issues framed to which he very eloquently addresses himself.

I now yield to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, by the courtesy of the Senator from Montana I desire to state that I agree with the Senator from Ohio that this is not the time to discuss the testimony. But I can not permit his observation to pass unchallenged that there is practically no testimony as to the guilt of these soldiers on the 13th of August at Brownsville.

Mr. FORAKER. If the Senator from Texas will pardon me, I did not say there was no testimony or practically no testimony.

Mr. CULBERSON. The Senator from Ohio said the weight of the testimony was to the contrary.

Mr. FORAKER. I said the testimony was insufficient, and that the weight of the testimony, if colored men are to be believed at all, is to the contrary.

Mr. CULBERSON. Occupying but a moment more of the time of the Senator from Montana, I desire to call attention to the fact that the Senator from Ohio omitted, doubtless inadvertently, to read fully from the report before him. I desire to read a paragraph from the report of the commanding officer at Fort Brown upon the subject, which the Senator no doubt has seen. I read from a telegram, dated August 15, to The Military Secretary, and signed C. W. Penrose, Major, Twenty-fifth Infantry, Commanding. The Senator from Ohio will find it at the bottom of page 12 of this pamphlet:

> Were it not for the damaging evidence of the empty shells and used clips I should be of the firm belief that none of my men was in any way connected with the crime.

That was based, Mr. President, upon their statement merely that they were not. Now, what does the major add to that?

> But with this fact so painfully before me I am not only convinced it was perpetrated by men of this command, but that it was carefully planned beforehand. I have the affidavits from three noncommissioned officers who were in charge of quarters on the day and night, and they swear positively the rifles were verified and the racks locked after drill (practice march of Companies B and D, drill of Company C), and the old guard returned to the quarters; that they never left the quarters, and that the keys to the locks of the racks were never out of their possession, and that the racks were not opened until call to arms sounded, and were then opened by them.
> From testimony gathered by the citizens' committee and given to me by Doctor Combe, I believe from seven to ten men were implicated in this matter. Some one of them must have had a key to the gun rack, and after check roll call was taken—for all were reported present at 11 p. m. roll call—they slipped out of quarters, did the shooting, returned while the companies were forming, and at some time during the early hours of the morning cleaned their rifles. This is made possible from the fact that the shooting all occurred within two short blocks of the barracks.

Mr. President, that is all I desire to say for the present, but I ought to have had the indulgence of the Senate while I gave to the Senate and to the country this statement of the commanding officer.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. FORAKER. Will the Senator from Montana yield to me for another moment?

Mr. CARTER. Certainly.

Mr. FORAKER. I wish to correct the impression which the Senator from Texas seems to have received from what I said. I did not say, as I understood him to repeat I had said, that there was no testimony. I said it was unsatisfactory, incomplete, and of a flimsy character, using some such expressions as those; and that I reiterate. I was not unmindful of the fact, when I made that statement, that Major Penrose, the commanding officer, had made this report. I had read it. But, Mr. President, I was, with that in mind, also remembering what the testimony is in this case and what I shall be able to show to Senators it is in this case when we come to analyze it and discuss it and compare it and point out its consistencies and its inconsistencies. I think Major Penrose, when he wrote that report, was of the opinion that certain of the men had unlocked the gun racks and had taken out the guns and had done this firing, and that that was the only way to account for the "shooting up" of the town; and it may be that that is the truth. I do not pretend to say. But I do say that the weight of testimony, if the colored men who have given their evidence under oath are to be believed, is to the contrary, and I think I can demonstrate that, and I think I can explain, too, why Major Penrose made that kind of a concession in the report he made.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, it was no part of my purpose to precipitate at this time a discussion on the merits of this controversy, with only limited information in the possession of the Senate. The purpose of the resolution of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], supplemented by that of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER], is to secure full information concerning those transactions referred to in the respective resolutions. The only question before the Senate, as I understand, is that raised by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] concerning the manner of addressing the President of the United States in the resolution upon which we are about to vote. He objects to the words "if compatible with the public interest," thus leaving it, according to the phraseology, respectfully subject to the judgment of the President as to whether the information shall be given in whole or in part.

Now, the Senator from Wisconsin proceeds to say that this would be an entirely proper address to the President of the United States if we were engaged in actual war. This resolution refers to the management of the Army of the United States by its Commander in Chief, the President of the United States, and I suggest to the Senator that the form of address which would be proper in time of war can not be improper in time of peace.

The Senator upon reflection will realize—and I again approach dangerous ground—that it is alleged that in this case, in the transaction complained of, certain citizens of the State of Texas were murdered, and that the Army of the United States was in some manner, directly or indirectly, concerned in that murder. I submit to the Senator from Wisconsin that it is not improbable, under such circumstances, that the Department of Justice has been in correspondence with officials of the State of Texas with reference to the subject-matter of this alleged murder of citizens of that State. This resolution, if addressed to the President containing no limitation as to that discretion, or suggestion of it, would not only call upon the President to send to the Senate all the correspondence emanating from the War Department and the officers of the United States Army, but likewise all the information contained in the correspondence of the Department of Justice with officials of the State of Texas.

Now, it must be obvious, I think—along the line of reasoning suggested by the Senator—that it would be highly improper for us to ask the Department of Justice to convey to us information, which would thus become public, concerning a public transaction; that it would be highly improper to ask the President of the United States unqualifiedly to transmit to the Senate correspondence with officials of the State of Texas which involves or may involve the possible criminality of a soldier of the United States under the laws of that State. So, according to the reasoning of the Senator himself, I think it is quite obvious that the phraseology of the Senator from Pennsylvania in respectfully suggesting to the President that he may transmit this information, if, in his judgment, it is not incompatible with the public interest, is eminently appropriate in this particular case. I think the Senator from Pennsylvania weighed his words well and considered the situation fully when he framed the language of that resolution, which is in conformity, as I understand, with an ancient and almost unvarying line of precedents emanating from this body.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I have as high an opinion of the legal attainments and knowledge of precedents possessed by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] as has any member of this body, and I do not yield to him in any degree in my jealous regard for the prerogatives and privileges of the Senatorial office. But in the contention he makes in this matter I can not see that he has the slightest foundation in the line of precedents. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] has referred to several of them. I have one here:

JANUARY 16, 1906.

Mr. TELLER submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That the President be requested to furnish the Senate, if not incompatible with the best interests of the service, the petition and accompanying papers of certain officers of the Army, veterans of the civil war, retired from active service for disability contracted in the line of duty, and who have not yet received the benefits of the act of April 23, 1904.

A purely routine departmental matter, having no relation to the high constitutional and international relations referred to by the Senator from Wisconsin. On January 31 the President, in response to the Senate resolution, sent to this body a message of many pages, being Senate Document 179.

On May 28, 1906, Mr. NELSON submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That the President is hereby requested, if not incompatible with the public interests, to transmit to the Senate the reports of the Keep Commission on Department methods, relating to official crop statistics and the investigation of the Twelfth Census report on agriculture.

In response to that resolution, which was passed by the Senate, the President sent a message, known as "Document No. 464," relating to a matter possessing none of those high qualifications—constitutional and international—referred to by the Senator from Wisconsin. I have here a number of other resolutions, but I will not take up the time of the Senate by more than referring to them.

The pending resolution was not hastily prepared by me, but was prepared after having examined a very large number of precedents in the Senate, and the phraseology is identical with those precedents. If the resolution differs from its predecessors, it is only in the element of its greater brevity and simplicity.

It occurred to me that the President, being the Commander in Chief of the Army of the United States, having assumed before the country sole responsibility for this act, having in the public mind, perhaps, incurred some disagreement with his own Secretary of War upon the subject, was the proper person and the only person to whom this body should submit a resolution requesting information; that it would be discourteous to him to go below or beyond him and ask the information from any other person than the one who was primarily responsible and the one who assumed the responsibility before the people of the country.

Mr. President, I introduced the resolution without guile, out of a natural relationship to a large colored constituency in the State of Pennsylvania, whose race prejudice has been aroused and who felt that perhaps an affront had been put upon them. I did not know that I was going to create such a disturbance in the minds of some of my colleagues as was developed when I heard the anguished tones of the Senator from Ohio informing this body that he had a similar resolution which he would like promptly to get before us.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. FORAKER. I did not catch the adjective which the Senator from Pennsylvania prefixed to my tones.

Mr. PENROSE. I had no political purpose to serve and no one to punish.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

Mr. PENROSE. I was in a legitimate mental attitude.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. PENROSE. I will be through in a minute, and then the Senator from Ohio can have the floor.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Pennsylvania declines to yield.

Mr. PENROSE. I was in a perfectly legitimate mental attitude, desiring to seek the truth, a condition of mind to which no reasonable man can object. Nor have I ever known a resolution solely, and in a bona fide spirit, intended for such a purpose to be objected to or delayed or to encounter technical objection or controversy.

I am myself investigating this matter, and if I find that these colored troops have been wronged, if injustice has been perpetrated, I will be as zealous and active as the Senator from Ohio or any other member of this body to see that that injustice is righted. If, on the other hand, grave felonies and misdemeanors and wrongs have been committed and the action of the Department is right, I will be found supporting the action of the Department. At the present time my only interest is to see that this matter is thoroughly cleared up, and that the great colored constituency of Pennsylvania will feel that there is no mystery or obscurity surrounding the subject, and that no injustice has been perpetrated upon their race.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I understood the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] to say that I had offered my resolution in angry tones.

Several SENATORS. Anguished.

Mr. FORAKER. What is it?

Mr. PENROSE. I referred more to a condition of anguish than of anger.

Mr. FORAKER. Oh, anguished. Mr. President, I was not aware that my tones indicated either anger or anguish. They certainly did not indicate either. I, in common with everybody else, I think, was taken by surprise when the Senator from Pennsylvania, violating all precedents, offered his resolution. I happened to have in my pocket the resolution which I had dictated to my stenographer, and which he had furnished to me, but which I had not had opportunity to look over, and not understanding and not liking the kind of resolution offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania, I offered mine as a substitute, and asked that it might go over until another day, when it could be properly considered. I have no purpose in view except only what the Senator from Pennsylvania says he has in view, to get the facts in order that the whole subject may be intelligently considered and acted upon here in the Senate, as I think it will have to be.

But, Mr. President, what I rose to say more particularly than that is that I did not offer the resolution because it involved the race question. It is not necessary to consider that question at all, and I do not desire to consider that question, and have no thought to consider that question. In my opinion, it is a much broader and a much more serious and a much more important question than that. It is a question which concerns white men as well as colored men. It is a question which concerns the Army itself. What avail is it that the Congress may raise armies if, as fast as they are raised, the President may, if he sees fit to do so, disband them? If the President may disband one company he may disband three, as he has done here, and if he may discharge a whole battalion, he can do away with a regiment if he so likes, and if he can do away with a regiment, a brigade, and, as I say, the whole Army.

But that is not the most important question either, Mr. President, for I do not apprehend that any President would do anything like that. I believe it will be easy to show that no President has power to do any such thing and that no President would have disposition to do any such thing. The broader question is one of constitutional right. The President does have power, as the Secretary of War says in the statement published in the papers this morning, to grant discharges without honor in contradistinction to discharges that are dishonorable and to discharges that are honorable. But running through all authority, and necessarily so because of the spirit of our institutions as well as the letter of the law, is this rule, that no such discharge can be granted by any order, from the President down, when it rests upon a conviction of a felony punishable with imprisonment in the penitentiary under the laws of the United States and when as a result of such discharge punishment is inflicted as though it had been in pursuance of the sentence of a court-martial.

Whenever it comes to the point where men are charged with the commission of a criminal act they are entitled to a trial before they are condemned, and they have that right, although they may be enlisted men in the Army of the United States. They have it under our constitutional guaranties, and they have it according to the letter of the statute that is applicable. I shall point out, when the proper time comes, that the Congress of the United States has been careful, in enacting the Articles of War and other statutes for the government and regulation of the Army, to provide that there shall be no conviction of any enlisted man of any offense upon which a discharge can be predicated until he has had a trial before a court-martial or some other duly constituted tribunal.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. FORAKER. I yield.

Mr. WARREN. I assume, of course, that the Senator from Ohio realizes the fact that the President of the United States has power to reduce or increase the Army within certain limits, and that he has heretofore exercised it, decreasing it very materially?

Mr. FORAKER. Yes; and there arises another question, which I did not intend to address myself to now. The President has the right and the power under the law which we have enacted to increase the Army not beyond a named maximum and to decrease it not below a named minimum. If he undertake to decrease the Army below the minimum by discharging a battalion, if it have that result, his act for that reason would be unlawful.

But, Mr. President, I do not stand upon any mere statutory provision of that kind. I stand upon the broad proposition that no man in this country can be convicted of crime until he has had a right to be heard.

Now, how stands the case with these men? I have called attention to the fact in the remarks made a few minutes ago that these enlisted men and their officers, who were in charge of guns and quarters, have all testified under oath. If their testimony be true, no crime has been committed by any of these men, and it is only upon the theory that they have also committed perjury that the conclusion was reached upon which this action has been taken.

So these men are guilty, some of them of murder, if the case upon which the President has acted be established; others from the knowledge of that murder have been guilty of misprision of felony in refusing to tell about it, and others of them still, nearly all of them, have committed perjury in saying they had no knowledge of it. They can therefore be tried for three crimes, all of them involving moral turpitude and all of them involving punishment in the penitentiary.

Is it possible, Mr. President, that by an Executive order men can be so convicted and punished?

But look, if you will bear with me a moment, to the result of this order. The resolution I have offered points out—and I had that in my mind—that we have a statute which provides that when a man has served for thirty years faithfully and honorably he shall have a right to retire on three-quarters pay with a monthly allowance of $9 for clothing and subsistence. That can not be allowed to the man who is discharged without honor. It is only allowed to the man who is honorably discharged. I do not know how many men there are, but quite a number, I know, from the testimony which has been given, of those who have been discharged who would soon be entitled to be so retired. That is an important right. All retained pay is forfeited; so, too, their right to pensions.

Others have served more than twenty years and are entitled to membership in the Soldiers' Homes of the country. They lose that right. All of them, if honorably discharged, will be entitled to honorable burial, without cost to them, in national cemeteries. They lose that right. All this is not important, perhaps, to the Senator from Pennsylvania, but it is important to the men who have served so long and so faithfully to acquire these rights.

So I might go on enumerating other rights.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. FORAKER. I will be through in a little bit, and the Senator can then take the floor and deal in questions of anguish or anger, as he may see fit.

So it is, Mr. President, that this broadens out, as I say, into a case where men are sent forth branded as criminals, threefold criminals—men who have committed murder or who have suppressed the knowledge of murder, although called upon by the legal authorities to give that knowledge, and men who have committed perjury. They are branded with all these crimes, and as a result of it they are stripped not only of honors, but also of property rights.

Now, I say, without any statutory provision on the subject, the Constitution itself protects them. No man can be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law. Due process of law means in accordance with the law of the land. The law of the land says when a man is charged, although an enlisted man in the service of the United States, with the commission of an offense of that character he shall have a right to trial before a court-martial and the sentence shall be such as the court-martial may direct. That is the law of the case.

It was from considerations of that kind, without any desire, Mr. President, to make it a color question, without any desire to introduce into the discussion of the subject any of the race prejudice that we see so much of to our great regret here and there, evinced throughout the country, without any desire to find any fault with any body, but only that we might protect broad principles and protect men who are entitled to our protection in the enjoyment of their acquired rights that I introduced this resolution and specified the facts I want to obtain.

Mr. SCOTT. Will the Senator from Ohio allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.

Mr. SCOTT. May I ask whether any of the white officers who had charge of these three companies were dismissed in the order?

Mr. FORAKER. No, Mr. President, no white officer is discharged. No white officer is really criticised. There is a sort of criticism made by Major Blocksom, the first inspector, as to one of the officers, but that he practically answers and says he does not insist upon it. They go clearly acquit. I think, Mr. President, they are entitled to go acquit until there is some evidence produced that somebody did the thing these men are charged with having done.

Now, the Senator talks about this testimony. There is a great deal of it I might read at length, but if Senators will bear with me a moment I will read just two or three samples. Here is the kind of testimony sent to the War Department, and which along with other testimony forms the predicate of this case of crime.

Mr. F. M. McCampbell's testimony:

I was on my way to the house on the night of the 13th, when we met some soldiers, and they turned the guns on us and asked us, "What are you sons of bitches hunting for?" I think it was a whole company. I did not see any white officer with them. I just saw the ranks of the soldiers. They went in the direction of town, and "We care very little if we shoot you full of holes," they said. Mr. Fielder was going to the hotel. I did not see any firing. I don't think there was a commissioned officer with the soldiers. That's all, about, I know. This happened right about behind the market. There must have been about fifty or sixty men in the company. Mr. Fielder was with me going to the Rio Grande Hotel at that time. That's all.

The testimony shows, and there is no dispute upon that point, that after the firing was over the commanding officer sent one of the companies, consisting of fifty-two men, to patrol the town, and those are the soliders this man saw. Yet that is paraded as evidence that the soldiers did this shooting.

Mr. M. G. Dalling's testimony:

I am a State ranger. I have come into the possession of some information this morning, which I got from this soda-water man who sells soda water. He told me that this soda-water man had been told by a saloon man, who keeps a saloon in the edge of town, that some shooting had been done last night, and that Company C could have taken the whole town if they had wanted to, and that they could take the whole damn State.

Mr. G. W. H. Rucker's testimony:

About Monday night last, about half past 8 o'clock, I took two cases of soda water to saloon near edge of town. There were about thirty or forty negroes inside gambling, as near as I can ascertain about the crowd, and I heard three or four negroes making threats that they would die and go to heaven before they would go back into post, but do not know what the conversation was about. Yes; I know if I would see this soldier again I would recognize him. I could pick him out of a crowd. He was a soldier. Yesterday morning I passed this negro saloon, but nobody was there. At about 12 o'clock, it must have been, as I was picking up empty cases, I went to this saloon, and the proprietor told me that he did not need any "pop," as the boys had been having a little trouble with the citizens and they were all in the post. He is working for two soldiers who are in the post, who own the saloon. He said that if a gun had been fired last night that Company C could have come out without any orders, and would run every man out of town; that Company C could whip the whole State of Texas.

And so on for quantity. Now, here is the testimony of Mr. J. P. McDonald. Here is a right intelligent witness, but he contradicts in one respect the testimony of every man on whose testimony this finding is based. Mr. J. P. McDonald testified:

Question. We are here to get what information we can that will throw light on the circumstance.—Answer. I board on the little block next the garrison, about the middle. I knew there was bitter feeling in town and thought that if they caught any negro soldiers up town they might do them up. So I laid awake; never pulled off my shoes. When the first fire started I jumped up. There were from six to ten shots on Elizabeth street; then they ceased.

There is the testimony of a citizen of Brownsville, who laid awake because he was expecting trouble, and being awake and listening for them, he heard the first shots, and he has a right to testify intelligently upon that point. He tells us where the firing commenced—down on Elizabeth street. Other witnesses claim to have seen colored soldiers and that the firing commenced at the quarters inside the wall surrounding the post.

I might go on at great length, but I think I have gone far enough to show the general character of this testimony. Then, after this testimony there is testimony here that will be given proper attention at the proper time, of people who say what they saw; but, as I said, when I take it up to analyze it I will have something to say about that testimony which I do not want to say now.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. FORAKER. I yield for a moment.

Mr. CULBERSON. The Senator from Ohio in reading the testimony of this man McDonald undertakes to create the impression—in fact, I believe he makes a direct statement, which contradicts the other witnesses—by saying that the first shots were fired on Elizabeth street. The Senator is mistaken in that. He has misconstrued the testimony. The man said:

When the first fire started I jumped up. There were from six to ten shots on Elizabeth street; then they ceased.

Mr. FORAKER. I stand corrected, then. I was not aware that any witness had so testified.

Mr. CULBERSON. It is the same witness the Senator read from a moment ago.

Mr. FORAKER. What witness?

Mr. CULBERSON. McDonald.

Mr. FORAKER. Where does he say that?

Mr. CULBERSON. On page 29.

Mr. FORAKER. That is the same thing I stated.

Mr. CULBERSON. Precisely; but the Senator stated and he undertook to make the impression that this witness said the first shots fired were on Elizabeth street. He only states that from six to ten shots on that street were fired.

Mr. FORAKER. That is what I said. He said the firing commenced on Elizabeth street.

Mr. CULBERSON. That is a mistake. The Senator misreads the testimony of the witness. He says he was lying down when the first firing was heard. Then he adds that "there were from six to ten shots fired on Elizabeth street; then they ceased." Those were the last shots fired, Mr. President, and not the first.

Mr. FORAKER. Now, Mr. President, let us see if they were the last. The witness proceeds:

When the first fire started I jumped up. There were from six to ten shots on Elizabeth street; then they ceased. I went down the street to the next block and on to the alley and stopped on the corner. The shooting commenced again just inside the garrison wall.

So it was not the last. I may be in error about the effect I attach to the witness's statement, but I just happened to have my eye fall upon it as I was looking through the record, and, remembering what he had said, I thought that it would answer for an illustration as well as anything else.

But I would call the attention of the Senator at the proper time to the fact that this testimony is full of conflicts of that character, so full of conflicts that it is absolutely unreliable standing by itself, and I do not believe any jury in Christendom, unbiased, impartial, would find on such a state of evidence anybody guilty of the commission of any serious offense. When I say I do not believe a jury would find them guilty I mean in view of the weight that should be attached to testimony that is in conflict with that given by the troops themselves. They testify in such a way that it would be impossible for any man in that command to have done this shooting.

But about that I do not wish to be understood as taking any positive position. I am only pointing out that there is grave conflict in this testimony, and that no man who is careful as to what he says has a right to say, in view of this state of evidence, that there is no doubt whatever as to the guilt of these men. There is doubt about it—serious doubt. I commenced the reading of it under the impression that there was no doubt. I took that as granted. I supposed, as a matter of course, from what I had seen in the papers and what I had seen of the action which had been taken, that upon satisfactory testimony it had been established that there was that guilt. But when I got through with the testimony, starting in with a perfectly open mind, I came out with grave doubt about it. Now, I want all the facts I can get, for it is a serious, broad, far-reaching matter. When we have all the facts my resolution calls for, we can consider the matter intelligently.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, it is quite apparent that we can not intelligently discuss this question, not having the information we ought to have. It seems to me the only question is how we shall get the proper information. I understand the objection made by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] was practically the question of order, whether the resolution of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] was in order or not. I think he will probably not insist upon that.

The resolution of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] calls for more than the resolution of the Senator from Pennsylvania. It calls for specific information upon the part of the Secretary of War and it calls for the form of the dismissal. I do not know whether any Senators have seen it. I know I have not, and I am not aware what it is. I believe we will get more information directly from the Secretary than from the President, unless the President sees fit to refer the whole matter to the Secretary.

Mr. President, this is a subject that is being pretty actively discussed. I have on my table here now a resolution from a very respectable meeting of colored people in Colorado. Some of them I know to be very respectable people. They are greatly excited, because they are going upon the theory that the President has done something to these people because they were colored. I do not myself suppose that there is anything in that at all.

These colored soldiers were charged with a grave offense. If they had been white men and had been guilty of what is charged they were guilty of, the President would have been certainly justified in proceeding as far as his constitutional authority would allow him to proceed. I do not know myself whether he has proceeded beyond that point or not. I know it is asserted in some circles by some people that he has gone beyond it. That is a matter which I think we could discuss better after we have the form of the discharge and have had an opportunity to look into all the conditions and study the statutes upon this subject.

It seems to me, Mr. President, that the thing to do is to get a report of all the facts and send them to some proper committee, which will be, I suppose, the Committee on Military Affairs as a matter of course. I do not believe that you will ever come to any proper conclusion about it except by some such tribunal as that.

I wish the Senator from Pennsylvania would withdraw his resolution and allow the resolution of the Senator from Ohio to pass, and dispose of this question in what I think would be a satisfactory way to everybody. If the Senator insists upon it, I do not know that we can pass both resolutions. I do not think it would be exactly courteous to ask the President for one thing and the Secretary of War for another.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. TELLER. I yield.

Mr. PENROSE. I understand the friends of both resolutions are satisfied with the arrangement suggested, that both resolutions be passed.

Mr. TELLER. Very well; I have no further remarks to make on the subject.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I desire to submit a few observations.

I agree entirely with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] that this discussion of the merits of the question is entirely premature. For one I intend to withhold any discussion of it until the incoming of a report which puts the Senate officially in possession of all the facts in relation to it.

The Senator from Colorado is mistaken in supposing that I made any point of order against the resolution offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania. I did not. I objected to the form of the resolution—that is, I objected to a resolution addressed to the President as unusual. I still adhere, Mr. President, to that objection as a matter of proper practice, although there is nothing in the Constitution to prohibit it, nothing in the rules of the Senate to prohibit it. It is entirely competent for the Senate to pass it.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. PENROSE. I should like to ask the Senator on that point whether he contradicts the statement made by me and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] that there are numerous precedents of the Senate justifying this course. His present objection is purely theoretical and critical of a bad practice in the past as much as in the present.

Mr. SPOONER. I will get to that. Mr. President, I have not examined the precedents. I speak from my recollection as to the almost uniform practice of the Senate during a period of nearly sixteen years in which I have been a member of the body. It appears that resolutions addressed to the President have been introduced and passed—one offered by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER]. I rather think it must have been inadvertently done, because it was not a subject upon which, so far as I recollect the scope of the resolution, there could have been any possibility of the Executive withholding information from the Senate. The general practice of the Senate has been—and it is a good practice, an almost universal practice, except in those cases where the nature of the subject is such as to warrant the belief that all of the information may not properly and safely be communicated to either House of Congress—not to address the resolution of inquiry to the President, but to address it to the Secretary of the appropriate Department, making it a direction instead of a request.

The precedent cited by the Senator from Massachusetts relative to a request upon the President for a copy of the report of the Keep Commission does not fall at all within the exception. The Keep Commission was not a commission authorized by law. It was a commission appointed by the President composed of officials selected from the various Departments to investigate the methods of the Executive Departments of the Government and to report to the President for his information, as I recollect it.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. CARTER. I should like to ask the Senator from Wisconsin if that portion of the resolution should be amended, thus calling upon the President for all the correspondence and all the facts, whether he would deem it proper to call upon the President, without qualification, to communicate to the Senate, and therefore to the public, the correspondence, if any there be, between the Department of Justice and the legally constituted authorities of the State of Texas with reference to the commission of crimes in that State by soldiers of the United States liable to punishment under State law, if such communication would militate against the ends of justice?

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator from Montana has utterly misapprehended my objection to this resolution. He insists that my objection is because of the presence in it of the words "if not incompatible with the public interests." He is quite mistaken. I know quite well that propriety demands that when a request for information is addressed to the President—and that is why I think such requests are limited, and has been in general practice, to the cases which I indicated when I first spoke—it is always qualified, so far as I recollect, by these words. My preference for the resolution of the Senator from Ohio is because, being a request for detailed information, our right to which is beyond question, it is addressed to the Secretary of War, and contains no evidence that the Senate doubts its right to the information.

I do not take it to be open to debate, Mr. President, that the Senate has a right to obtain from the War Department copies of discharges, records of courts-martial—everything relating to the domestic administration of the Army not connected with plans of campaign or of war.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. SPOONER. I do.

Mr. CARTER. Then I wish to state that I clearly and distinctly understood the Senator from Wisconsin to object to the words "if not incompatible with the public interests" in this form of resolution.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I objected to the resolution because it requires those words and implies in the resolution itself a doubt upon the part of the Senate whether or not this information might be properly withheld from the Senate. That is my objection.

Mr. CARTER. The objection of the Senator was to the addressing of any resolution to the President on the subject.

Mr. SPOONER. For that reason. The almost universal rule of the Senate has been to address no inquiries to the President of the United States without those words; I remember no exception, where the nature of the subject of inquiry was such as to make it perfectly apparent that the Senate or the House was entitled of right to all the information covered by it, the direction, not the request, has been made as an almost universal rule upon the appropriate Cabinet officer, instead of by resolution of inquiry addressed to the President.

I said there were some exceptions, and there are. Foreign relations constitute one exception; the movement or plan of campaign of the Army or the Navy in time of war constitutes another, because even a child would know that the Commander in Chief, under our Constitution, must have the discretion in order to insure the safety of the Republic and the success of our arms, to exercise discretion and to withhold, if his judgment so dictates, information which would endanger the public interest if it were given to the public. The Senator from Montana, with a logic the like of which I have never known him to indulge in before, seemed to think that there is no distinction, and can be none, between the information which the Senate or the House is entitled to have in relation to the Army in time of war and in time of peace.

It does not at all follow, Mr. President, because certain inquiries as to the Army must be in time of war addressed to the President, and he have discretion to withhold or to transmit information, that in time of peace, upon every imaginable subject connected with the administration of the Army, it is proper, or comports with the dignity of the Senate or of the other House as legislative bodies in all cases to address inquiries to the President, qualified as courtesy requires such inquiries to be.

Mr. CARTER. Now, Mr. President——

Mr. SPOONER. I want to get through.

Mr. CARTER. I wish to address the Senator a question at that point.

Mr. SPOONER. Very well.

Mr. CARTER. It is well known that we are expending very large sums of money on our coast defenses.

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. CARTER. I will ask the Senator if he thinks in time of peace it is proper for the legislative department of the Government to make public all the plans of defense that are being prepared in case of war by calling on the Secretary of War or the President to disclose such information?

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator gets back to my path—that is, that the question is to be resolved with reference to the subject-matter. I admitted it, and I admit it now. I must admit that there are numerous cases in which absolute direction upon one of the Departments or upon a Cabinet officer is subject of right, I mean, to a declination by order of the President to that officer to afford the information. But that argues nothing upon a subject like this or upon the subject generally embodied in the resolution of inquiry by the Senate and by the House. We could not call upon the Attorney-General to send to the Senate copies of papers which he has acquired through investigation to be used in the trial of a gang of counterfeiters or to be used in the trial of cases prosecuted under the antitrust law for the obvious reason, Mr. President, that it would lead possibly to the defeat of the Government's litigation. You can not put your side of the case into the hands of your opponent.

If an investigation has been made by the Treasury Department with reference to the apprehension of men who are smugglers, Congress could not expect the President to permit the information to be sent to the Senate or the House, and warning thereby be given to those whom the Government seeks to apprehend.

There are many such cases. Is this a case of that kind? Congress, Mr. President, fixes the size of the Army. The Army is the Army of the people of the United States. It is created by act of Congress. The rules for its government are entirely within the jurisdiction of Congress. The grounds upon which men may be discharged is within the constitutional capacity of the Congress. Whether any man can be discharged for offense without a trial is entirely within the constitutional competency of Congress. Whether the President shall be given the right to dismiss an officer at will without trial is for Congress to say. The Army is supported by moneys appropriated by Congress. The manner of the expenditure of those moneys Congress has a right to know. I do not make any doubt whatever, Mr. President, that it is within the constitutional right of the House or of the Senate either, acting in a legislative capacity upon this subject, to direct the Secretary of War to transmit to the Senate or to the House all information within his jurisdiction upon the subject of the discharge of the three colored companies.

Now, Mr. President, the foundations of the Union will not be shaken whichever of these resolutions is adopted, or if both be adopted. I am surprised that the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] withdrew his resolution. They all three might have been adopted. The Senator from Pennsylvania thinks it improper that both should be adopted. He offered his resolution in the form which he employed addressed to the President—the form is proper if the resolution is to be addressed to the President at all—because the Senator thought it would not be within the proprieties, it having been the President's act, to address it to his subordinate, the Secretary of War.

I do not stop to discuss the question of propriety; but it is very proper, some Senators think, to pass both of the resolutions. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] seems to think so; the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER] seems to think so.

There never has been, within my knowledge, a President who is more frank with both bodies of Congress than the present Executive. The objection is based upon principle and was made because I believe it is the dignified and proper course for both bodies to pursue as to subjects upon which the House or the Senate is entitled manifestly to the information to make a direction in the usual way upon the appropriate Cabinet officer.

I think it will look rather absurd—I shall not further object to it, Mr. President—to pass the resolution calling upon the President, if not incompatible with the public interests, for full information bearing upon the subject, and also to pass the resolution of the Senator from Ohio, directing the Secretary of War, who has probably received most of these papers from the President, to furnish all information upon the subject on file in the War Department. But that is a matter for the Senate to determine.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I do not wish to prolong this debate, but the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] seems to think that the resolution which I introduced some time ago must have been inadvertently introduced. I presume the files of this Senate will show a great many resolutions of mine of a similar kind. I want to say to the Senator, as a matter of history, that if he will take the trouble to go into the question of the right of the Senate and of the other House to call upon the Executive for information, he will find that in the early history of the country such requests went directly to the President. If he will take the pains to go back fifty years he will find that it was a common occurrence, and I will venture to say there has not been a President since the days of Washington who has not been called upon by the Senate and the other House for information.

During the exciting times immediately after the civil war, when Andrew Johnson was President of the United States, a great number of such resolutions from the House and the Senate were day after day directed to the President. Sometimes he furnished the information and sometimes he did not. If he did not furnish it, he would say that he did not think it was compatible with the public interests that he should do so. In such cases I believe he always courteously declined.

When we call upon the President for information, we request him; when we call upon the Secretary of War, we direct him. Suppose the Secretary of War fails to reply. Where is the power of the Senate to compel him? He is a subordinate of the President. He is the mouthpiece of the President in many ways. He becomes the mouthpiece of the President because of his special knowledge in regard to certain matters. You call upon the man who is supposed to know most about the subject concerning which information is desired. If you want to know about public lands or about pensions, you call upon the Secretary of the Interior; but if you want to know about military affairs, you call upon the Secretary of War. There is, however, no way by which you can compel the Secretary of War to reply, unless by impeachment, and we can not institute such proceedings, for, under the Constitution, they must originate in the House of Representatives.

There is nothing unusual in the resolution of the Senator from Pennsylvania. As I said before, the resolution of the Senator from Ohio calls upon the Secretary of War for information that is not in the hands of the President, and therefore I prefer the form of his resolution. At the end of his resolution there is a request for an order issued to Major Penrose. Probably that order is not in the keeping of the President, but is in the keeping of the Secretary of War. It seems to me there is an unnecessary question of propriety raised here. I do not myself want to admit that when the Senate wants information it can not call upon the Executive for it. I do not care whether it is in one Department or another or whether it is solely under the control of the President. You may call upon him for information affecting matters of foreign diplomacy, but he is not obliged to answer; sometimes he would be derelict in duty if he did answer; but it must be fairly presumed that the Senate of the United States will never call upon the President for information which ought not to be given to the country. If he says "I do not consider it compatible with the public interests that I should give it," that is the end of the controversy.

Mr. WARREN. I want to ask the Senator a question before he takes his seat.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator from Colorado has been a distinguished Cabinet officer, and I want to put this question to him: In the present case the President, by the Constitution, is clearly Commander in Chief of the Army—in other words, he is the highest officer of the Army. He bears a relation to the Army and Navy that he does not bear as to other Departments. It seems to me that information regarding this particular case lies not only with the Secretary of War, but undoubtedly with the Department of Justice as well. Therefore I want to ask the Senator from Colorado if, when we make an inquiry of the President, he will not, as a matter of course, call upon the different Departments for such information as he chooses to furnish, whereas if we call upon the Secretary of War alone, he furnishes only that which his Department has? If so, it seems to me in this case—while I am ready to vote for both resolutions—if we are to select one and vote for only one, it should be the one calling upon the President, first, because he has control over both of these Departments that may have evidence; second, he is the Commander in Chief of the Army and its highest authority, and, third, this action concerning the discharge of troops is the action of the President, in the absence from the city at the time of the Secretary of War, and therefore the President is the highest authority to appeal to and the man above all others who is able to furnish us the information we want.

Mr. TELLER. I think the Senator has answered his own question, and I think he is correct about it.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, on yesterday I offered an amendment to the resolution of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER]; which he accepted. Since then that resolution has been detached in a parliamentary sense from the resolution of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], and I do not know which one of these resolutions will be adopted by the Senate. Therefore, I beg to offer the same amendment to the resolution of the Senator from Pennsylvania which I offered yesterday to that of the Senator from Ohio, modified to suit an inquiry addressed to the President of the United States.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas proposes an amendment to the resolution of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE]; which will be stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add after the last word of the resolution of Mr. PENROSE the following:

> The President is also requested to send to the Senate a copy of the order issued to Maj. C. W. Penrose, Twenty-fifth United States Infantry, directing him not to deliver to the civil authorities of Texas certain men of his command charged with assault to murder and murder, at Brownsville, Tex., August 13, 1906, and referred to by Major Penrose in his letter of August 24, 1906, to Capt. W. J. McDonald, of the Texas rangers.

Mr. PENROSE. I accept the amendment of the Senator from Texas.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be so modified. The question is on agreeing to the resolution proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] as modified.

The resolution as modified was agreed to.

Mr. FORAKER. I understand that resolution No. 181 is also before the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is. The question is on agreeing to the resolution proposed by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER].

The resolution was agreed to.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Finance:

H. R. 8124. An act to amend section 5136 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, permitting national banking associations to make loans on farm lands as security, and limiting the amount of such loans;

H. R. 11273. An act to incorporate the National German-American Alliance; and

H. R. 14587. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to issue duplicate gold certificates in lieu of ones lost or destroyed.

GAMBLING IN THE TERRITORIES.

Mr. BURNHAM. Mr. President, I expect to be away from the city for a time, and I therefore ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Order of Business No. 1264.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill the title of which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 10853) to prohibit gambling in the Territories.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to inquire what the Senator wants to do with the bill?

Mr. BURNHAM. I desire to have it considered. I will say that when it is taken up I will offer an amendment which, I understand, will remove all the objections which have been made to the bill. The amendment which I intend to propose will lessen the amount of the penalty and, I think, make the bill free from all objections.

Mr. TELLER. Does the Senator expect to put the bill on its passage this evening?

Mr. BURNHAM. It is a bill that has passed the other House in substance, and so I want it passed by the Senate.

Mr. TELLER. I do not know what the bill is, but I think it is an inopportune time to take it up with the expectation of passing it to-night.

Mr. BURNHAM. I want to say that it is a bill in harmony with the law in every State of the Union and in some of the Territories, and I think when the Senator reads it he will find no cause of objection.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Allow me to ask the Senator from New Hampshire if this is what is known as the "antigambling bill?"

Mr. BURNHAM. It is the antigambling bill.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I object to its being considered at this hour of the day, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection being made, the bill will go over.

JAMESTOWN EXPOSITION.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. DANIEL. I hope the Senator will allow me to offer morning business.

Mr. LODGE. I will temporarily withdraw the motion and yield to the Senator.

[Mr. DANIEL thereupon introduced two bills, which will be found under the appropriate heading.]

Mr. DANIEL. In connection with the second bill, I present a statement which I ask may be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, it will be so ordered.

The statement referred to is as follows:

STATEMENT AS TO THE TERCENTENNIAL JAMESTOWN CELEBRATION.

At the time of the inauguration of the proposed tercentennial celebration it had the earnest indorsement of the President and many of our leading men who are familiar with American history who were in sympathy with the idea of celebrating in the unique manner proposed the greatest event in American history, second only to the discovery by Columbus. The idea was new to many in this country, and there was some doubt in the minds of some men in Congress, as well as in those outside, as to the magnitude which the celebration would assume.

The capital that was subscribed and the appropriations that were made were thought to be in keeping with the probable demands of the occasion. Since then, however, as the information has spread throughout the country and the proclamation of the President has been transmitted to foreign countries, there has been a general appreciation of the importance of the event and the great opportunity it presents not only for an historical celebration, a great naval and military gathering, but also the opportunity for bringing together the representatives of the various States of the Union at the place of its birth for social intercourse and the exchange of courtesies, but also for the exhibition of the products of the various States and for a collective gathering of objects of historical interest.

ACCEPTANCE OF INVITATION BY MANY NATIONS.

About nearly all of the leading nations of the world have accepted this Government's invitation to be represented by their ships and detachments of their soldiers, prominent among which are the following: Great Britain, France, Germany, Spain, Italy, Japan, Russia, Belgium, Switzerland, Venezuela, Denmark, Sweden, and others.

PARTICIPATION OF THE STATES.

About twenty of the States have taken legislative action for the appointment of commissions for erection of State buildings and the exhibit of their products at the exposition and about ten more now have the matter under consideration, to be consummated in the sessions of their legislatures.

Among those who have provided for buildings at the exposition are the following:

Massachusetts building now in course of construction; Connecticut building is nearly completed, and also Rhode Island building; Vermont, which, it is believed, has never voted money for its participation at any exposition, has just appropriated $10,000 for a building at the Jamestown Exposition. Maine has appointed a commission with authority to erect a building from funds to be subscribed by its citizens. Negotiations are now pending with New Hampshire, with good prospect of her participation, she being the only remaining one of the original thirteen States to fall into line.

Pennsylvania has erected a replica of Independence Hall, and it is now nearly ready for occupancy on the grounds.

New York has contracted for the erection of a very handsome building over 200 feet in length.

The New Jersey building, which is completed, is a reproduction of General Washington's headquarters at Morristown.

The governor of Delaware has visited the exposition grounds, selected a site, had prepared a plan for a building, and a strong movement has been inaugurated for the necessary appropriation from the legislature which is about to assemble.

The Maryland building is practically completed for use, and also those for Virginia, Missouri, Ohio, and South Dakota.

The Ohio building is a reproduction of "Adena," the home of the first governor.

North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, and Louisiana have all appointed commissioners and made necessary appropriations for buildings and exhibits.

Florida has appointed a commission to erect a building and prepare an exhibit which is to be paid for by private subscriptions, which are now being made.

In West Virginia, pending the assembling of the legislature, the governor has appointed a very able commission, who have selected a site and are now about to begin the erection of a building, the cost of which is guaranteed by ex-Senator Henry G. Davis, pending an appropriation from the legislature.

In Kentucky a popular subscription is being made for $40,000 with which to reproduce the fort of Daniel Boone, and in it to make an exhibit of her resources.

The States of Oregon, Montana, and Washington have selected the site for a building, which it is expected the three States will unite in building for the exhibit of their resources.

Advices lately received from the governor of California indicate that his State will, when the legislature assembles in January, make suitable provision for representation.

Wisconsin and Michigan have appointed commissions with instructions to select sites and report the amount requisite for the representation of their respective States for consideration at the sessions of their legislature in January.

Several of the remaining States have the matter now under consideration and are expected to act at their January sessions, and several of those States which made appropriations in the early stages of preparations have bills prepared to increase their appropriations. Prominent among these are the States of Rhode Island, North Carolina, Illinois, and New York.

PARTICIPATION OF PATRIOTIC, FRATERNAL, AND OTHER ORGANIZATIONS.

Outside of the legislative action of the States there has been a widespread interest among the patriotic and fraternal organizations of the country, several of which have not only decided to hold their annual conventions at the exposition in 1907, but are erecting buildings on the grounds. The Daughters of the Revolution are among them. The Pocahontas Memorial Association and the Society of Virginia Antiquities are interesting themselves actively.

Among these also are the Travelers' Protective Association, composed of the traveling salesmen of this country; and one of the strongest and most progressive orders in the country, the Modern Woodmen of the World, an organization which has a membership in the United States of over half a million; the Eagles, a beneficial organization with a very large membership which assembles in its national annual convention with twenty to thirty thousand people.

Among the religious organizations which are to meet at the exposition next year one of the strongest numerically is the "Disciples of Christ," which organization has selected a site and has decided to build on the exposition grounds.

CONVENTIONS TO BE HELD AT THE EXPOSITION.

Between eighty and one hundred of these organizations have already in their national conventions this year adjourned to meet at the exposition in 1907.

YACHTS, BOATS, AND YACHT RACES—CUPS TENDERED BY THE KING OF ENGLAND, THE EMPEROR OF GERMANY, THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES, AND SIR THOMAS LIPTON.

In the sporting world of Europe and America preparations are being made for the assembling in Hampton Roads of a great gathering of yachts and motor boats. I am informed that cups have been tendered for the yacht races by the King of England, the Emperor of Germany, the President of the United States, and by Sir Thomas Lipton.

AERONAUTICAL EXHIBITION BY THE JAMESTOWN CONGRESS OF AERONAUTS.

Exhibitions and competitions under the auspices of the Jamestown Congress of Aeronauts, of which Dr. Alexander Graham Bell, of Washington, is the president. The most prominent men in Europe and America are interested in the development of this organization and will be in attendance on this congress.

ATHLETIC GAMES.

The athletic associations of the country are also arranging a series of functions and great athletic games at the exposition, under the auspices of their national organizations.

INDUSTRIAL AND COMMERCIAL AND MUNICIPAL EXHIBITS.

Along industrial and commercial lines not only are a large number of the leading manufacturers of the country either erecting buildings of their own upon the exposition grounds or are arranging for space in the exposition buildings, already so much space having been provided for exhibits as was provided at the Buffalo Pan-American Exposition, but many of the prominent cities of the East, in their corporate capacity, are endeavoring to secure space for the collective exhibition of the manufactures of their several cities.

Among these are the cities of Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington, Boston, Hartford, Milwaukee, Richmond, Roanoke, and Lynchburg.

In the State of Ohio a popular movement has been organized and funds are being subscribed for the erection of a building which will cost over $100,000, in which will be exhibited alone the manufactured products of that State.

MILITARY ORGANIZATIONS.

Owing to the advices which the exposition company has received from various States indicating their intention to send their military organizations to participate in this tercentennial celebration, it has been ascertained that the land originally set apart for military purposes is insufficient, and it has been necessary to acquire additional territory.

ENLARGEMENT OF PLAN AND OF ACCOMMODATIONS NECESSARY.

The widespread interest which has been manifested in the United States, and which appears to be increasing as the celebration approaches, has made it necessary for those who are charged with the responsibility of the celebration to enlarge upon their original plans in order to afford the necessary accommodation to those who are applying for it and to creditably represent the nation in the celebration of her tercentennial anniversary.

This widespread interest also indicates the great concourse of people who are likely to assemble on the shores of Hampton Roads next year, assuring to the exposition a revenue beyond their original expectations. This concourse seems the more probable when it is realized that half the population of the United States is within twenty-four hours' ride of the city of Norfolk, and the transportation is afforded by a number of trunk-line railroads and coastwise steamship lines.

GREAT ATTENDANCE INDICATED AND TEMPORARY LOAN SECURED BY RECEIPTS AND INCOME.

To meet the demands upon them it has been found necessary by the exposition company to ask Congress at this time to make a loan of $1,000,000, to be expended in the completion of the exposition, pledging for the return of the loan a portion of the gate receipts and income from concessions on the exposition grounds in the same manner as the Louisiana Purchase Exposition did in connection with the loan of $4,600,000 made to it by this Government.

The great attendance which is now indicated at this exposition it is believed will indicate an income of something like $4,000,000 from gate receipts and concessions. The exposition company is therefore believed to be safe in assuming the obligation of returning to this Government the $1,000,000 asked for, and is willing that the Government provide the same safeguards for the repayment of this money as were provided at St. Louis.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. LODGE. For what purpose?

Mr. BURKETT. I want to ask to have a bill passed.

Mr. LODGE. I think it is rather late to take up the Calendar. I renew my motion for an executive session.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After twelve minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

PRINTING OF ILLUSTRATIONS.

While the doors were closed the following order was made:

Ordered, That the illustrations accompanying the communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a report from the commissioner of the interior for Porto Rico for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1906; the communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, pursuant to law, the report of the commissioner of education for Porto Rico for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1906, and the memorial of N. E. Dawson, of Chicago, Ill., on the question of a reform in spelling, setting forth a plan for imparting aptitude in spelling by means of a simplified key to pronounciation applicable to all languages, and suggesting measures for extending a knowledge of it over the nation, presented yesterday, be printed with the documents.

Mr. KEAN. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned, the adjournment being until Monday, December 10, 1906, at 12 o'clock meridian.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate December 6, 1906.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, December 6, 1906.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Prayer by the Chaplain, HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

COMMITTEE APPOINTMENTS.

The SPEAKER announced the following committee appointments:

Mr. GILHAMS, to the Committee on Revision of the Laws and to the Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions.

Mr. COLE, to the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. BANNON, to the Committee on the Judiciary.

CALL OF COMMITTEES.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the next committee.

The Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries was called.

COASTWISE PILOTAGE.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, I call up the bill (H. R. 5281) to remove discriminations against American sailing vessels in the coasting trade.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD], on behalf of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, calls up the following bill, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4442 of the Revised Statutes be, and is hereby, amended by adding thereto the following: "Whenever the master or mate of a sailing vessel of the United States employed in the coastwise trade claiming to be a skillful pilot offers himself for a license, the inspectors shall make diligent inquiry as to his character and merits, and if satisfied from personal examination of the applicant, with the proof that he offers, that he possesses the requisite knowledge and skill, and is trustworthy and faithful, they shall grant him a license for the term of five years to pilot any such vessel within the limits prescribed in the license; but such license shall be suspended or revoked upon satisfactory evidence of negligence, unskillfulness, inattention to the duties of his station, intemperance, or the willful violation of any of the provisions of this title."

SEC. 2. That section 4444 of the Revised Statutes be, and is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 4444. No State or municipal government shall impose upon pilots of vessels any obligation to procure a State or other license in addition to that issued by the United States, or any other regulation which will impede such pilots in the performance of the duties required by this title; nor shall any pilot charges be levied by any such authority upon any vessel piloted as provided by this title, nor upon any vessel of the United States employed in the coastwise trade being towed into or out of any port of the United States by a vessel under command of a pilot licensed for such port under the laws of the United States, and in no case shall the fees charged for the pilotage of any vessel exceed the customary or legally established rates in the State where the same is performed. Nothing in this title shall be construed to annul or affect any regulations established by the laws of any State requiring vessels entering or leaving a port in any such State other than coastwise vessels to take a pilot duly licensed or authorized by the laws of such State or of a State situate upon the waters of such State."

SEC. 3. That section 4237 be, and is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 4237. No regulations or provisions shall be adopted by any State which shall make any discrimination in the rate of pilotage or half pilotage between vessels sailing between the ports of one State and vessels sailing between the ports of different States, or any discrimination against vessels propelled in whole or in part by machinery or sail, or against national vessels of the United States; and all existing regulations or provisions making any such discrimination are annulled and abrogated."

SEC. 4. That this act shall take effect six months after its passage.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that we may be allowed two hours on a side for debate, the time on the other side to be controlled by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] and the time on this side to be controlled by myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine asks unanimous consent that debate upon this bill to close in four hours, two hours to be controlled by himself and two hours by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY]. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY].

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention to attempt to discuss the details of this bill. I shall leave that for those who follow after me; but I do wish to call the attention of the House to a few of the main features of this bill.

Let it be understood at the beginning that this bill does not intend to abolish pilotage where there is any necessity of having a pilot. The very name of the present system, "compulsory pilotage," is repugnant to the American conscience, and it means what the term implies in its fullest and worst form. It means that ships must and do pay pilots for services they do not want and for services that the pilots do not perform. It means that one man owns a business and another is given the privilege of levying a tribute upon it without giving anything in return.

The object of this bill is to prevent such tribute from being laid upon American sailing vessels; to prevent these vessels from being compelled to pay large sums of money for which they receive nothing in return; to relieve these vessels from the unjust burden of paying pilots whose services are not needed and not given; to allow these sailing vessels in time of storm to enter American ports in order to save life and property without being compelled to pay this unjust tribute.

Some most astonishing facts were presented before the committee, and not disputed, as to the workings of this system. A sailing ship enters one of these ports, no pilot is needed, none is used, but unless these vessels pay a pilotage they are libeled and held. The safety of the vessel and the protection of property does not enter into the calculation. The only thing necessary is to pay the pilotage. A vessel comes into one of these ports towed by a tug, the owner of which is liable for damages if any injury is sustained by the vessel, yet that vessel must pay for a pilot. True, such pilot is a mere fiction. He is never seen and he renders no service, but he must be paid. To require a pilot on a sail vessel that is towed into port is just as much needed and fully as idiotic as it would be to require an additional engineer on each one of the coaches of a passenger train.

To demonstrate the absolute iniquity of this system, let me relate a few undisputed facts. In some of the States where this system prevails a license is issued to a vessel; then this vessel can sail in and out of the ports covered without pilots. By this act of the legislature the ports are rendered absolutely safe. The dangerous bars are removed. By this act of the legislature a captain of such vessel is immediately endowed with a knowledge of all the dangerous shoals and tides and channels about which so much eloquence and oratory has been wasted. By this act of the legislature the waters are calmed, the storms abated, the winds die, all danger to life and property is dispelled. Talk about an act of God! The Deity would not dare to enter into competition with the legislatures of these States. Does any man want any further evidence to absolutely demonstrate to him that there is no necessity for compulsory pilotage in these ports?

Take one more illustration of the workings of this system: For eighteen years sail vessels have gone in and out of the harbor of Norfolk, and in all that time no pilot has been aboard any one of them, yet they have all paid pilotage. Last year these sail vessels entering this port paid more than $60,000 pilotage. This loot was divided among the pilots of that port, yet not a single pilot performed any service and not a pilot was on board of any of these ships; yet these pilots, for absolutely no service, receive about $10,000 each per year, and all the labor they perform is to collect this legalized blackmail and divide the spoils between them. Nowhere under the flag to-day is there another system as unjust, as vicious, as unjustifiable as this remnant of piracy, known as the compulsory pilotage law. Not only do they levy this tribute, but American vessels seem to be the especial prey of these pilots. It is shown by the evidence introduced before our committee——

Mr. YOUNG. Will the gentleman tell us where these pilotage fees go?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. They go to the pilots. If gentlemen will excuse me, I do not wish to be interrupted until I get through with the discussion, and then I am willing to answer any questions. These pilots are not even just in their iniquity. It was shown by the evidence introduced before our committee, and shown by the receipts signed by the pilots themselves, that they charge an American vessel in the same port three times as much as they charge a vessel flying a foreign flag. What position are these men in to come here appealing to this Government to protect them, when their patriotism is measured solely by dollars?

Another fact I wish to call to the attention of the House is that the pilot charges in these ports are the highest in the world. In these ports the pilot charges are four times what they are in Cuba and five times what they are in Canada. According to the testimony before our committee——

Mr. FOSS. Who fixes the pilotage charges?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. They are fixed by the pilots themselves, and they change them.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman from Washington yield? I know he does not desire to allow that statement to go in the RECORD. Is it not a fact that they are fixed by the State law in their respective States?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. That same question arose in regard to the port at Tampa, and when the question was asked how they were fixed, it was not answered, and we have not been able to ascertain; but this fact is shown, by the receipts of the pilots themselves, that they charge American vessels three times what they charge a foreign vessel, and that fact has not been explained or denied. If the States fix the charges, how do they make this discrimination, and if the State fixes the charges, how are they able to charge a foreign vessel less than they charge an American vessel?

Mr. FOSS. Is the charge for the same service? Do they charge the American vessels three times as much as the foreign vessels for the same service?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. For the same service, in the same ports, for the same character of vessel, they charge the American three times as much as they charge the foreign vessel. And, as I have stated, that fact remains unanswered and unexplained; although they promised to explain it, they have never done so.

About 130 men, according to the evidence, are affected by this bill, and their representatives, or those who pretend to represent them, come before us and say that this bill, if passed, will take away the income of these men. They do not claim that it will take away their employment, for no man contends that they have any employment to be taken away or that they give any service in return for the compensation they receive.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman wish to be understood that these pilots are licensed to perform duties never performed?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Yes, sir; I do. They perform no duty whatever on many of the sail vessels. There has not been one on a sail vessel in the port of Norfolk for eighteen years; and yet every vessel has paid heavy pilotage fees. I mean exactly this, that these pilots are paid for duties they do not perform. So if you pass the bill, while you may take away the income of these men, you do not take away their employment. You might just as well stand here and ask this body not to pass a bill prohibiting highway robbery because it might take away the employment of certain estimable gentlemen.

In the olden times they used to issue licenses—indulgences—to highwaymen, and I have no doubt that when the time came to take that privilege away those highwaymen made the point that to do so would rob them of their income, and they might do it with almost as much justification as is done in this case, when these pilots come and ask us not to take away this right because it will destroy their income.

Certainly nothing more is wanted to demonstrate that the existence of this system is absolutely indefensible. But let me ask you to remember, in addition to the facts already given, that in the port of Norfolk, where for eighteen years no pilot has been aboard of any sail vessel that has gone in and out, and yet no accident has occurred due to their absence. Of all the many vessels that have gone in and out of these ports without pilots in accordance with the privilege given by State licenses, not one of these has suffered from their absence. Of all the vessels that have gone in and out of these ports without pilots, rather than wait for them or be bothered and annoyed by them, no accident has happened because of their absence.

Let it be remembered that of all the thousands of sail vessels that have gone in and out of these ports for years, that have paid for pilots that they did not use, that no necessity has been shown for their services, and that by running without them not one ship has been lost, not one ship has been damaged, not one dollar's worth of property destroyed, not one life lost. You tell me that with that record there is any excuse for the continuance of compulsory pilotage in these ports? If vessels for years sail in and out of these ports without pilots, and in all that time not a vessel is wrecked, not an accident occurs, not a dollar's worth of property destroyed, not a life endangered, will some one please stand up and tell me how much safer or better or what advantage it would be to commerce or to human life to have had these pilots. How any man can look these facts in the face and then defend this proposition on any ground of necessity or justice without blushing surpasses my comprehension.

I am well aware of the ground of defense that is made for this system. Again the ghost of States rights walks, sheeted and grinning—filling with fear a few timid souls. It is urged that as these States want it, regardless of its merit, it should be retained. Unfortunately this tribute is mostly, if not entirely, levied upon vessels owned by men that do not live in the States that permit the system. That this is a subject with which the General Government has full power to deal none will deny. Then shall we permit this outrage simply because the States cry out to be let alone?

The argument is advanced that the local government understands the situation better than we understand it. That they can deal with it better. That they should not be interfered with. This is the argument that every tyrannical government on earth has always advanced as an excuse for oppression and outrages on the weak and the helpless. This was the argument that was advanced in favor of slavery in this country for more than half a century. This is the argument that England advanced as a defense for the nameless outrages permitted upon the wretched people of Ireland. This is the defense made by Russia for her bloody murder of the helpless Jews. This is the defense made by Turkey for her slaughter of the Christians. This is the defense that Spain gives for her cruelties and atrocities that shocked and startled the civilized world in Cuba. When the United States pointed to the awful evidence, the whitening skeletons, the grinning skulls of 200,000 noncombatants, mostly women and children, that had suffered the awful death of slow starvation, Spain replied: "You do not know the situation as we know it. Leave the situation for us to solve. We can take care of it better than you. All we ask is to be let alone." So these States, when we point to the thousands of unearned money and the large salaries of men who do nothing; to the fact that vessels can go in and out without pilots if they will but pay this graft; to the written licenses proving that the system is unnecessary and can not be justified; to the discrimination against American vessels in favor of foreign vessels. When we point to these infamies, they do not attempt to justify them, but they give the excuse that is always given for an inexcusable outrage: They say you do not understand the situation. "We can best tend to our own affairs. Let us alone." This is the only real reason for the opposition to this bill.

Mr. Speaker, as the States have not dealt with it, as they have refused to do their duty, then I ask, Is that any excuse why we should not do ours?

Now, if there are any gentlemen who wish to ask any questions I shall be glad to answer them.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, I would like some information in regard to the bill. It seems to me to be an attempt on the part of the Federal Government to regulate in part only the pilotage service. Would it not be better for the Government to take charge of the entire service? This bill simply applies to sailing vessels, and only those who are fortunate enough to have masters or mates who may pass the examination may escape these onerous burdens of which the gentleman has been informing the House. The bill has no application to foreign boats at all. Ought not the whole matter to be left to the States, or ought not the Federal Government to take charge of the whole business? That is a query in my mind, and it seems to me quite a serious objection to the bill under consideration. It provides for part Federal regulation and part local regulation. It seems to me it is unbusinesslike on that account.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. This bill provides for abolishing compulsory pilotage upon American sailing vessels in certain of these ports, and these are the only ports in the United States where it has not been abolished. That is the reason why it is local.

Mr. MANN. But I do not find any ports named in the bill.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Well, it affects only a few ports.

Mr. MANN. There are no ports named in the bill. This bill is general and applies only to sailing vessels in the coastwise trade.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. The ports I have mentioned are the only ports affected.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think foreign vessels should be compelled still to pay these unjust and burdensome charges?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I am not concerning myself about foreign vessels at this time. It will be time enough when we take care of American vessels to care for the foreign vessels. As far as I am concerned, I would like to see the burden made heavier on the foreign vessels until it would give the American vessels an equal opportunity to do the business of this country. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. That is a selfish motive on the part of the gentleman.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Yes; I am always selfish in favor of American vessels.

Mr. MANN. Representing the coastwise districts. There are some Members of the House who do not live on either the Atlantic or the Pacific coast.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Yes; and there are some Members who do not seem to realize that there is a Pacific or an Atlantic coast.

Mr. MANN. And there are some who do not seem to realize the Atlantic and the Pacific coasts are not the whole thing. That is something which it is difficult to make the gentlemen who live on the coast realize. [Applause and laughter.]

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Yes; and some gentlemen do not seem to know there is any coast or any interest when it comes to any legislation that does not directly affect the cornfields. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I hope that when I shall have used ten minutes' time I shall be notified. Gentlemen, there is an old saying that is very true, that "hard cases make bad laws," and if we needed an illustration of that saying we would have it in this proposed legislation. There is also a difference between facts and declamation, and there is a difference between selfishness for American interests and selfishness for certain American interests. Now, this bill proposes to abolish State pilotage. The gentleman from Washington began his statement by saying that it did not propose to do that. Technically he is right. There is nothing in the bill that says the States may not maintain a system of pilotage, but taking away the compensation that the pilot earns will effectively destroy the State-pilotage system, and the gentlemen who are favoring this bill know that to be a fact. Now, the present law has been the law of America from the beginning of the country. It has always been considered, frequently stated by the Supreme Court, that pilotage was a matter peculiarly within the knowledge and care of the States; that they themselves could best determine what the needs were at their particular harbors and localities, and so long as the national law remained silent that it was perfectly proper for the States to institute pilotage systems. They have instituted those systems, and under the laws passed by the State legislatures they have fixed the compensation, have regulated the duties of pilots, and have made it compulsory upon them that in fair weather and foul they should be outside the bar prepared to meet any vessel and give it succor. The Northern States had this pilotage system, and continued it until recent years. After a while they found that their income from pilotage on foreign vessels was more than sufficient to maintain their pilotage system, and then they abolished the system so far as it related to coastwise vessels. Now, that exercise of judgment on their part, which they did exercise freely, they want to deny to the Southern States, where foreign commerce has not grown to such an amount as to support the pilotage system.

They want to say to the Southern States, "You must now do away with charging pilotage on coastwise vessels and permit us to come into your harbor free, although we charged it as long as the exigencies of the case made it necessary and only abolished it when our foreign commerce was sufficient to enable us to get along without it." Now, it is manifest that it is to the interest of every State to reduce its pilotage charges as much as possible. There is no place hurt quite so much and no people hurt quite so much as the place and the residents thereof where pilotage laws are enforced. If Virginia or South Carolina or Florida have unfair pilotage laws they suffer more than any other people. Any handicap upon the freedom of commerce coming into and going out of their ports affects them of necessity more than it can affect anybody else. Now, we have a peculiar illustration of greed in this case. The advocates of this bill, after having got, at their own request, concessions made in favor of certain classes of vessels and in favor of a license system instead of pilotage fees, have the effrontery to come in upon this floor and urge that the concession that was granted at their own request shall be made the ground of repealing the law in favor of pilotage systems in the South. If there is anything wrong in the license system, if there is anything wrong in the system which exempts these vessels, the proper and fair programme would be to bring a bill in here doing away with that and putting them back under the system that they were originally under and which was only changed at their own instance and request. The gentleman speaks of Norfolk, Va., and tells us that sail vessels have been coming in there for eighteen years without carrying a pilot, but he does not tell you that it was the result of their own request and own instance that they, rather than pay pilotage charges, were willing to take the risk to life and property and pay a general license fee; so that to accommodate them, they being willing to assume these risks under this license system, the concession was granted, and now gentlemen come and urge upon us that fact as a reason why we should abolish the whole system. Now, there is also a distinction that will occur to any fair-minded man between a sailing vessel and a steam vessel. There are times when all vessels need pilots, but the times are very much greater in regard to sailing vessels than in regard to steam vessels.

The steam vessel is always subject to control and can follow the channel easily. It can be navigated with a skill and directness impossible with a sailing vessel. A sailing vessel is subject to the winds and currents in a way the steam vessel is not, and it is infinitely more important that a sailing vessel should have a pilot to bring it into a narrow, changing harbor than a steam vessel. These harbors change from week to week and month to month. Any man at all familiar with either the facts or the evidence produced before the committee knows that that is of necessity true, and yet they propose to license pilots by the Federal navigation officers who have no particular knowledge and could not have of the various ports of America; and they seem to think that a man who is a pilot in the sense of being able to navigate a vessel on the high seas will be a pilot in the sense of being able to come into any particular harbor. There has always been a recognition of the distinction between these classes of pilots, between those who are necessary because of their knowledge of a particular locality and those who have simply the knowledge that is necessary to navigate a vessel.

Mr. RUSSELL. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

Mr. RUSSELL. The statement was made just a few moments ago that in these pilotage charges American vessels are often charged three times as much as foreign vessels. What is the information of the gentleman from Kentucky in regard to that?

Mr. SHERLEY. So far as I know—and I speak from memory of a year ago, not having opportunity to refresh it—there was but one case brought to the attention of the committee, and that the matter was immediately taken hold of by the National Pilots' Association. But my answer to the gentleman about that is this, that he can not come here and ask us because of a hardship in a particular case to make a law that will abolish pilotage in all other cases. The gentleman can not contend with any show of knowledge of the fact that that is an existing condition all over the South. Every State has absolute control over its pilotage system. Every State can and will abolish the pilotage system when it is to the interest of the State and to the interest of life and property that it be done. The movement is already beginning in the South. There are certain ports in the South that have abolished it—ports where they are finding their foreign trade sufficient to maintain pilotage without the requirement of fees from coastwise vessels. Just as in the North the pilotage system was changed gradually by State after State accordingly as the facts justified it, so will it be done in the South.

But now we are asked not to give them the opportunity to change when the facts warrant it, but to force them to dispense with it now. How will it affect those States? Most of their commerce grows out of vessels engaged in coastwise trade. The amount of pilotage that they could obtain from foreign commerce would not be sufficient to maintain the pilots. The advocates of the bill are willing under this act to keep in effect all of the State laws that require compulsory action on the part of the pilots. They are willing to have the State say to the pilot: "You must go out and succor any vessel, no matter what the condition of the weather, and if you do not do it you shall be fined." They are willing to have all the burdens imposed upon the pilots, but they are not willing that they should have any compensation. They tell you that because they can usually go into ports without a pilot, that therefore the pilotage system should be abolished. The same reasoning would abolish the fire system in every city in the land, because you do not have fires all the time. You have got the pilotage system there ready day and night in good season and bad to take charge of those ships, where having a pilot means the safety of life and the safety of property. Many a vessel now, looking to greed rather than safety, stays outside and endures the weather or storm rather than pay a reasonable pilotage fee. No man believes more than I do in freedom of trade. No man believes more than I do in doing away with all restrictions to trade. I have had a quarrel with a good many gentlemen on that side of the House on the proposition ever since I have been here, but the sort of charge that is necessary for the protection of life and the protection of property is an entirely different charge from one that may be put on trade for the benefit of a special class. Pilotage fees belong to this first kind of charge upon commerce. It is only a handicap in the sense that all of us are handicapped by taxation for protection against fire. Here the whole system must be taxed for the sake of protection against the loss of life and the loss of cargo. The facts will show that there have been in those States where they have done away with the compulsory pilotage a very much larger number of shipwrecks and a greater loss of cargo and life than there have been in the Southern States where the pilotage system is in vogue. The facts themselves justify the retention of these systems.

Mr. Speaker, how much time have I consumed?

The SPEAKER. The ten minutes are up.

Mr. SHERLEY. Then I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MINOR].

Mr. MINOR. Mr. Speaker, I believe the first bill that I took any special interest in when coming to this House in 1895 was a bill identical in its provisions with the one now before us. I was then assigned to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, and we considered that bill thoroughly, having it before us perhaps a month, with frequent meetings. I took the other side of this question at that time, and joined in a minority report from that committee, believing, as I did then and as I now know, that the time had not quite come when we might safely enact this legislation. The time to which I refer was the first session of the Fifty-fourth Congress. Then, as I say, I joined the minority in opposing this legislation.

My reasons for it at that time have now vanished. We then found that the Navy Department were opposed to the legislation because of the incompleteness of the harbors in those South Atlantic States. We found the War Department, through the Engineer Corps, were opposed to the legislation because of the incompleteness of the harbors. We found every marine insurance company opposing the bill because they believed it was not to their interest to have pilotage abolished, thereby increasing the danger that would come to the floating property that visited these ports. We found those engaged in the manufacture of lumber and the shipping of lumber and other products of the South were opposed to it, and assigned the same reason—the incompleteness of the harbors of the South.

To-day, and for four years last past, these reasons have not been urged. None of these interests have appeared to oppose this legislation. On the contrary, the demand for the passage of this legislation is not alone from the North Atlantic coast to-day, but from the South as well. It comes from the insurance companies, it comes from the shippers, and it comes from everyone interested in the maritime welfare of our coastwise trade. I believe that after expending $56,000,000, as we have done in these southern harbors, to make them deeper and more commodious, the time has come to abolish compulsory pilotage on sailing vessels. If it has not come, then, in the name of common sense, how many more million dollars must we pour into those southern ports in order to make their harbors sufficiently commodious and safe, with depth of water sure and permanent enough to dispense with local pilots that are now employed in these southern ports?

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MINOR. If the gentleman will make it short.

Mr. SHERLEY. I would like to ask the gentleman this question: In Georgia, where there has been a deepening of the harbor to twice the depth which it originally had, the bar outside has lengthened greatly and makes the pilotage much more a necessity than before.

Mr. MINOR. In reply to the gentleman, I desire to say that during the last session of this body, when the matter was before our committee, we sent over to the Coast and Geodetic Survey and brought a chart into the committee room, and there was not a man, I do not care whether he was from the North or the South, that could show a change in bars for the last four years. The bars that they are talking about down there are entire myths. It is a bar which has gradually slipped off into deep water. The fact is that the bars have all gone ashore, so that the bars down there are on the dry land, and not in the water. [Laughter.]

Now, how does this bar pilotage system work? You take the State of Virginia as a sample, and this illustrates what I am now about to exploit and will explain the whole thing so far as the necessity for bar pilotage in that State is concerned. A captain can go into the port of Norfolk and for 10 cents on the measured tonnage of his vessel he can buy the right to navigate all the ports in the State of Virginia for one year. It does not matter whether there is a woman or boy in charge of the vessel or no one in charge of the vessel, because the question of competency is not raised. It is not required that any qualification shall be shown before he can get the right to navigate all the ports in the State of Virginia. If he pays in advance 10 cents a ton, he gets a license. That proves conclusively that a pilot is not a necessity. Furthermore, it is proof positive that the harbors are deep and commodious, and that this bill should pass.

Take another illustration. Two vessels come through the Capes, both bound up the Potomac River. They have been spoken by the pilot outside of the Capes. One of them is bound for Alexandria, 7 miles below here, and the other for the city of Washington. The vessel that is bound for the city of Washington pays no pilotage, but the vessel dropped off at Alexandria has got to pay her regular pilotage or a pilotage license of 10 cents a ton for the entire year, though no bar pilot has been on board of her. Is there any sense in it?

Now, it will be told us that this bill will endanger human life. I suggest for your information that these sailing vessels do not carry passengers. They have crews numbering from 8 to 10 men. The steam vessel, that does not have to submit to compulsory pilotage, carries the human freight.

A steam vessel may come into one of those southern ports, carrying 200 passengers and a cargo valued at half a million dollars and drawing 20 feet of water, without a pilot. You transfer that same captain that brought her in, whose competency is unquestioned, whose skill is undoubted, to a sail vessel drawing just half the number of feet, namely, 10, and he has got to pay a pilot. Is there any sense in it? And where is the necessity to continue this thing?

Then again they have tugs down there in those southern ports, strong, powerful, abundantly able to take care of all the shipping that comes, and unless a vessel has a leading wind—that is, a fair wind, she will remain outside until the tug comes and gets her, and when that tug puts a line on that vessel it is the duty of the captain of the vessel to obey the orders of the captain of the tug, because he is licensed by the United States, he is competent to handle his own boat as well as the vessel he has in tow, and if that vessel disobeys his orders, namely, to follow the tug or to port or starboard the helm as the command may be from him, he assumes all liability and releases the tug from any obligation. The tug, if she is large and powerful, draws as much water as the vessel does when she is loaded, so that the vessel may safely follow where the tug leads. The result is that no vessel leaves a southern port without one of these tugs taking her outside, and the charge of those tugs, that cost from fifty to a hundred thousand dollars apiece, with twelve men in the crew, is often and often only one-third of the charge of the fellow who goes aboard as a bar pilot and toasts his shins in the cook's galley of the vessel. That is a fact.

Now, there is not one vessel in ten visiting the southern ports but what her captain is competent to pilot his vessel into harbor, and therefore he needs no pilot, and he takes no pilot. But if he has been spoken outside by a pilot the pilot walks to the dock and collects the bill. Has the Congress of the United States ever heard of anything so infamous? I pronounce it today pure and simple graft, and I told the president of the Bar Pilots' Association four years ago that never again could I oppose this legislation. I said, "The time has passed when there is necessity for your organization to exist;" and he told me himself that he did not blame me or any Congressman for taking that position. He recognized the truth and force of what I said. He is as fair and square a man as ever lived. He is here working for himself and for those he represents, and he is doing it honorably and fairly, but that does not make it right. If you are going to enact legislation for the preservation of life, then you should include the steam vessels and compel them to pay a bar pilot the same as you do your sailing vessel, but you dare not do that, though the steam vessels are the ones that carry the human freight.

A noted labor leader came before our committee and said that he opposed this bill on the ground that it endangered human life. There is nothing in that argument. It falls of its own weight, because, as you know, the steamer carries the passengers and not the sail vessel.

Now, how does it work as regards freight charges? The steamer was exempted from this pilotage charge in 1871. The great shipment from the southern ports is lumber. Steamers carry from one-fourth to one-third of all the lumber manufactured and exported from those ports. They pay no pilotage, but the sail vessels competing with them do pay the pilotage every trip they make, and the steamer makes the freight on lumber, and the sail vessel has got to come to it or go out of those ports empty. If she comes to their terms and loads, she must pay the pilot. Ah, gentlemen, that is an infamy. Is this General Government going to continue to pour its millions of dollars into the improvement of the harbors of those Southern States and compel sailing vessels to pay tribute to local pilots? I say to you now, from observation, I know that those ports are perfectly safe. I know that they have a sufficient depth of water. I know there is no necessity for this organization to exist any longer, when their only mission is to compel vessels to pay them whether they employ the pilots or not. I say that time has gone by. I call the attention of the River and Harbor Committee to the fact that if, after the expenditure of all this money, more than fifty millions, you have not perfected those harbors so as to dispense with the necessity for these men you had better let go and compel them to take care of themselves—let them keep up their own harbors and light their coasts and keep their system of bar pilotage to themselves if they desire to do so.

Now, I do not know that there is very much more to say in this matter. I know that vessels have gone into those southern ports and traded there during an entire year (and they did not make many trips, by the way), but their pilotage bills in some cases amounted to $459, and the net earnings left to the owner of the vessel at the end of the season were only $350. I know vessels that have gone down there and paid $200 for tug service for a year and paid the bar pilot four and five hundred dollars a year. And what did he do? Two-thirds of the time he was not aboard the vessel at all, but at home; he simply had spoken to the captain outside, and the captain, who was thoroughly competent, refused his services and had taken the vessel in. Will you perpetuate such a system as that, you gentlemen who ought to be interested in the southern ports? If you are bound and determined to do it, and I were a member of the River and Harbor Committee, I would cut down your appropriations accordingly. [Applause.]

Mr. FOSS. I understood the gentleman to state that he found a year ago that the War Department and the Navy Department were unfavorable to this legislation.

Mr. MINOR. Oh, that was way back in 1896.

Mr. FOSS. Does the gentleman know how they feel about it now?

Mr. MINOR. I have seen reports of commanders of battle ships saying that they have gone into these ports and have found them of ample depth and capacity, large enough to hold the entire Navy, and that there was no need of any bar pilots. Formerly they did require a pilot in the early days, when the channels were crooked and tortuous and the shoals were constantly shifting. At that time there had been no improvements outside, and every norther that came shifted the bars. They needed a pilot in those days. In 1896 the Navy Department was against this bill, and so was I.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask a question for information. Is it true that American vessels have been discriminated against?

Mr. MINOR. That was the testimony before the committee, and not disputed.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, before I yield time to another gentleman, as I shall in a moment, I will say in answer to the question just asked by the gentleman from North Dakota, that the Supreme Court of the United States has on two occasions, to my knowledge, and I think more, expressly held invalid and unconstitutional laws that undertook to discriminate between vessels of one State and those of another; and it is as absolutely impossible to pass that sort of a law as it is to legislate a tax on imports from one State to another. Mr. Speaker, I now yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN].

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. If the gentleman will excuse me, I will say that while the law is as stated by the gentleman from Kentucky, the evidence before the committee, uncontradicted, was that there were gross abuses in the line of discrimination against American vessels under this compulsory pilotage system.

Mr. SPARKMAN. The gentleman does not mean to say that that discrimination is in the State laws?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. The evidence before the committee was uncontradicted that there were gross discriminations against American coastwise vessels under this compulsory pilotage system. I could read now the statement of the president of the association, in which he himself admits that he made a contract discriminating against coastwise vessels under this legislation, although it might be unlawful.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman knows that there are violations of all sorts of laws and that the commission of a crime does not justify a change of law. Mr. Speaker, I again yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN].

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, it has been stated by the distinguished gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MINOR] that a demand has been made by owners and masters and insurance companies for legislation seeking to abolish compulsory pilotage. No one says that there is any demand being made for this legislation by the people of the United States who believe in the protection of life and property. There ought not, from a humanitarian standpoint, it seems to me, to be any legislation enacted which would allow, if you please, any master of any vessel to enter into a port without a pilot. It is unfair to assume that the master of a vessel going into a foreign channel, knowing nothing whatever about the currents of the channel or its course, can safely pilot that vessel to its destination.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that thousands of vessels do go in and out without a pilot, and that not one accident has occurred in them?

Mr. MADDEN. It may be true that thousands of vessels do enter various harbors throughout the country.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I mean these particular ones.

Mr. MADDEN. It may also be true that no accident has occurred in recent years. It is also true that the Slocum was running in the East River, New York, with a large number of excursionists; that it had no pilot; that the captain was unable to manage the vessel, and every person who was on board the vessel, or nearly every person, lost his or her life.

It is also true, as this report shows, that in 1853 the ship New Era appeared off the New Jersey coast with a load of immigrants from Antwerp. Its captain was hailed by a pilot, but refused to take one. He declared that even if it did take him until next day he was fully capable of piloting his own ship into the harbor. That night a tempest arose. Before daylight the ship was a total wreck. Hundreds of lives were lost. Four hundred and eight bodies drifted ashore and were buried in a huge grave on the site of what is now Asbury Park.

It is true, too, that this was in 1853; but why hesitate to protect the lives of the people who may be compelled to ride on board ships because the last serious accident occurring from that cause was in 1853? Better by far that every vessel sailing in the coastwise trade should be compelled to pay exorbitant pilotage fees than that in the next century one life should be lost by reason of the failure of the vessel to carry a pilot to direct it safely to its destination. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that if such legislation is to be enacted it should be enacted by the States. This is a matter over which the States have jurisdiction. If it is to be enacted it should also include steam vessels. The men who favor this bill favor it because the sailing vessels to which it applies come from the section of the nation from which they hail.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MADDEN. Not because they believe it is in the interest of commerce, not because they believe the pilotage charges are unjust, not because they believe the pilotage charges should be dispensed with, but simply to give an opportunity to men owning sailing vessels to make more money than they now make. Because of their avarice they seek to jeopardize the lives of the men, the women, and the children who are compelled in their movements from one place to another to ride on board these ships. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that the bill ought not to pass. [Applause.]

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I would like to have the gentleman state to the House how many passengers are carried upon these sailing vessels?

Mr. MADDEN. I do not believe that I know any more about it than does the gentleman who asks the question.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. He does not know as much.

Mr. MADDEN. The men who are employed and running vessels are just as important as men and women who are riding as passengers. Because a man happens to follow the avocation of a sailor, that is no reason why his life is not as dear to him and to his family as is the life of the greatest man in the country. [Applause.]

Mr. SCOTT. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. SCOTT. I understood some other speaker on this bill to say that no pilotage charge is made for steam vessels.

Mr. MADDEN. That is true, as far as I can understand.

Mr. SCOTT. I should like to ask the gentleman the reason why a sailing vessel should be charged and a steam vessel should be excused from that charge.

Mr. MADDEN. If there is any reason why a pilotage charge should be made against one vessel, it should pertain to all vessels. If they want a bill which meets the wishes of the American people, it seems to me they will provide that the pilotage charge be made against the steam vessel as well as the sailing vessel. The captain of a steamship is no more qualified to run that ship into a strange harbor than is the captain of a sailing vessel, and neither captain should be allowed to do it under any circumstances.

Mr. SCOTT. Is the rule in regard to steam vessels the result of a State law?

Mr. MADDEN. All State laws.

Mr. BONYNGE. Oh, no.

Mr. MADDEN. Yes, they are.

Mr. DAVIDSON. Would the gentleman state, therefore, that legislation should be enacted to compel compulsory pilotage in all the seaboards, on all the coasts, and on the Lakes as well.

Mr. MADDEN. No; I do not make that claim.

Mr. DAVIDSON. Then why should there be compulsory pilotage on certain southern harbors, when there is no necessity for compulsory pilotage on the northern Atlantic coast, in the Pacific coast harbors, or on the Lakes in order to save life and property?

Mr. MADDEN. Because these harbors are not so dangerous. There are no tortuous channels, no shallow streams, no shifting bars, and the States, realizing this condition, have not enacted any law requiring compulsory pilotage. The States in which compulsory pilotage prevails understand the needs of their communities better than we do, and they ought to be allowed to enact laws to govern the question.

Mr. DAVIDSON. One other question, if the gentleman will permit. Is it not a fact that the north Atlantic coast States did have compulsory pilotage, and from time to time they have repealed those laws because it was unnecessary to continue them?

Mr. MADDEN. I believe that is so.

Mr. DAVIDSON. And if that is true because of the improvement of the north Atlantic coast harbors—and we know that the south Atlantic coast harbors have been improved in substantially the same manner, to the same depth of water—why should the compulsory pilotage be necessary in the Southern States?

Mr. MADDEN. Let the Southern States have the same rights in connection with legislation of this character that the Northern States have assumed to have. That is my answer to that question.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY].

Mr. FORDNEY. Briefly, Mr. Speaker, I will explain why I am in favor of this bill. First, let me say to the gentleman who has just spoken on the subject: He said that the men who were interested in this bill were interested for no other motive except the fact that there were vessel ownerships in the district from which they came. I want to say to the gentleman that he is sadly mistaken. There are no vessels on salt water that sail between ports south of Old Point Comfort and the Southern States to Texas that are owned by anybody from the State from which I have the honor to come. I have no interest in any vessel property anywhere, either on fresh water or salt water. I am in favor of the bill because I believe that it repeals a law that permits men to heap injustice upon parties who own vessels sailing into those ports. Before the bill came before the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries I had some correspondence with men who were opposed to the measure, in which I had in a measure stated that I would oppose the bill, but when hearings were given to men interested on both sides of the subject, I told Mr. O'Brien, who represented the Pilots' Association, that I would not support the bill, but later told him that unless he could to my satisfaction answer statements and testimony presented to the committee, showing that there were injustices heaped upon men who owned vessels sailing into those ports, that I would be compelled to support the measure, and that I would use every effort to give him every opportunity to answer those questions. He failed to do it in any respect, although given ample time. One vessel owner who appeared before that committee showed that he had a vessel sailing into a Gulf port, as I now remember it, carrying lumber to and from those ports, which were compelled to pay $150 pilotage fees when foreign vessels of equal capacity, drawing no more water, were permitted to sail in and out for a charge of $40.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. That was at Tampa, Fla.

Mr. FORDNEY. And at Gulf ports also. I have the names of vessels here, and I will call attention to one of them, the Gertrude Bartlett, a foreign ship. The testimony shows she paid $40 pilotage fee. The S. M. Bird was assessed a hundred and fifty dollars for like services. The owner of that ship went to the Pilots' Association and presented his claim, showing that he was charged more than other vessels of like capacity, and offered to settle the case by paying $75. His ship was libeled and tied up at the dock, and he could not even get a tug to take it out. The answer came from the captain of the tug that it would be a violation of the law to take that ship out, and especially contrary to the pilotage law.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I would like to know who has power to regulate this matter?

Mr. FORDNEY. A commission, as a gentleman stated, representing the Pilots' Association.

Mr. SHERLEY. Does not the gentleman know the pilotage law of the different States is the result of the action of the legislatures of those different States and that they have full control to make or change any law?

Mr. FORDNEY. I know only, my dear friend, just what was stated to the committee. Mr. Pendleton, a vessel owner well informed on the subject, gave testimony. I have it here of record where a vessel was libeled, and he had to give bond.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman has not answered my question. It only requires a yes or no answer.

Mr. FORDNEY. I do not know what the law is, but I know what the practice is.

Mr. SHERLEY. Then the gentleman would take a violation of the law as an argument for this House to believe that was the law.

Mr. FORDNEY. I want the House to understand me on this subject. Mr. O'Brien was given opportunity to answer to my satisfaction why this extortion was allowed, and he failed to do it, and because there is a law that will permit a set of men to extract from another man, contrary to the law, a sum of money and compel him to pay it, I favor this bill. I have no interest in vessels. I am supporting the bill in the interest of simple justice.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Does the gentleman desire more time?

Mr. FORDNEY. Three or four minutes.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. FORDNEY. Now, it may be claimed by some men that the reason why one vessel is charged $40 and the other a hundred and fifty dollars might be on account of their carrying capacity. The vessel Gertrude Bartlett carried 28,000 feet of lumber more than the other vessel; that is all. In one instance Mr. Pendleton stated before the committee, and that statement is in the records, that the profits on his cargo amounted to $32 and the pilotage was $40.

Mr. Speaker, there is nowhere else in the United States where the law compels a vessel owner to employ a pilot. There is nowhere else in the United States where there is more danger to life and less loss of life than at those ports. Other ports on the Pacific and Atlantic coasts are not compelled by law to hire a pilot, but they do hire a pilot in these ports referred to, and notwithstanding the fact that the captain of a tug is a pilot himself, competent to take a vessel over the bar, a vessel owner is also obliged to employ a pilot to ride upon the tug beside of the captain, and he pays not only a tug hire, but a pilotage charge as well. All men who sail or who own vessel property are interested in the saving of the lives of the sailors as well as passengers. However, there are no passengers to speak of on sail vessels. They go on steamships. The loss of life is among the sailors.

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for one question?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. PRINCE. Has there been request on the part of any national or State quarantine association for this legislation?

Mr. FORDNEY. Not that I know of.

Mr. PRINCE. Has there been any request on the part of any chamber of commerce for this legislation?

Mr. FORDNEY. Oh, there may be lots of them. I am not just familiar with the requests that have been made.

Mr. PRINCE. Has there been any request on the part of any labor organization in this country for this legislation?

Mr. FORDNEY. It does not make any difference to me whether there is any request from any labor organization or not so long as the measure appeals to me to be one of justice, sir. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BRANTLEY].

Mr. BRANTLEY. Mr. Speaker, it was my privilege during the last session to consume some considerable time in the discussion of this identical bill, and I put into the RECORD at that time a much more comprehensive discussion of the questions involved than I can hope to do in the time allotted me to-day. I will be glad if those who are interested will look now at what I then said.

This is a bad bill. It is bad in principle and it is bad in its effect if enacted into law. No one questions the jurisdiction or the power of Congress to regulate pilotage. When the attempt is made to bring about such regulation we will meet that question. It is not now involved, and although some gentlemen say they favor this bill because they favor Federal regulation of pilots, I wish to call the attention of the House to the fact that this bill does not seek to regulate pilotage by Federal laws or otherwise, but the only effect of it if passed would be to, not directly, but indirectly, destroy the pilotage systems of the Southern States now existing; to substitute no system by the Federal Government in its place, and to leave these States with their hands tied and unable to provide any other system of pilotage in lieu of the one destroyed. Mr. Speaker, the principle of compulsory pilotage is upheld the world over. It has been repeatedly sustained by the decisions of our Supreme Court and sustained and enforced in many other countries of the world.

What this bill seeks to do is not to abolish compulsory pilotage—for it is still to be authorized, notwithstanding the passage of this bill, against all foreign vessels—but this bill is to prevent compulsory pilotage being enforced against coastwise sailing vessels. What, now, would be the effect of such a law? Back yonder, thirty-five years ago—in 1871—Congress prohibited compulsory pilotage against steam vessels engaged in the coasting trade, and it is now proposed to supplement that legislation by prohibiting compulsory pilotage against sailing vessels engaged in the coasting trade, and with what result? With the result that the system of pilotage we now have in my State—the State of Georgia—would fail. Why? Because there would be no funds with which to support it. Our system of pilotage is maintained by fees paid by the vessels that receive the benefit of it and for whose protection it was inaugurated. We had at my port—the port of Brunswick, Ga.—last year some forty millions of commerce. Perhaps 75 per cent of it was domestic or coastwise business, handled in large part by sailing vessels. We have a great port and a great commerce, amply protected by competent pilots, but if you relegate us to pilotage fees from foreign vessels to maintain our pilotage system we can not maintain it, for there will not be sufficient revenue from that source for the purpose. What is true of Georgia is true of other Southern States.

When this Government first started, in the very first Congress it was deliberately enacted that in the matter of pilotage each State should be free to make such laws as it saw fit. From that first Congress to this, the second session of the Fifty-ninth, that rule has not been changed. Each coast State during all these years has enacted pilotage laws to suit its needs and as necessary to protect its commerce. Until those States on the eastern coast had gradually builded up their foreign trade so that they had foreign vessels enough to support their pilots, they maintained, the most of them, compulsory pilotage against sailing vessels in the coasting trade. Each State has been free to establish or abolish compulsory pilotage as it saw fit, and at all times to legislate in this regard as the interests of its commerce justified or authorized it to do. All that we ask for my State to-day is the privilege enjoyed by all States heretofore of changing our pilotage system whenever in our judgment it is wise to do so.

Mr. Speaker, this bill is entitled "A bill to remove discrimination against American sailing vessels." The plea is made that it is a bill directed against discrimination, and yet in its very essence it is a bill to impose discriminations of fundamental character against those States in the Union which are not fortunate enough at this time to have a sufficient number of foreign vessels coming into their ports with which to maintain a pilotage system. A more unjust, unfair, and inequitable measure was never proposed in the American Congress. It is no justification for it to say that Congress has already released coastwise steamers from compulsory pilotage. The vessel under steam is under control and can feel its way; the vessel under sail can not do so. The one as a rule plies regularly between certain ports; the other does not; neither is there any real competition between sail and steam. In slow freight steam can not now compete with sail, and, pilotage or no pilotage, sail can never compete with steam where dispatch and certainty of time of delivery are necessary.

Mr. Speaker, it is an absurdity to talk about any State or any port imposing or maintaining for any length of time unreasonable pilotage fees. When it does so it injures its commerce. Each State is a competitor with every other State, each port is a competitor with every other port, and each State and each port is going to make its charges against commerce just as low as it can consistently with the proper protection of that commerce. Each individual State can better be relied upon to protect its commerce than can the United States, and knows better what protection is needed.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question? It has been said here that we have a condition whereby different rates are imposed and collected as pilotage from ships of the same capacity. I have been trying to find out by what authority pilots are allowed to collect discriminating rates against ships of the same capacity, and especially why they discriminate against American vessels in favor of foreign vessels, if the facts are so.

Mr. BRANTLEY. In answer to the gentleman, if he does not know it already, I will inform him that in each of the States with whose laws I am familiar the matter of pilotage is regulated and fixed by law—by acts of the State legislature. I have heard no complaint that any State has enacted bad laws or laws authorizing the discriminations to which the gentleman refers. I have heard some complaint to the effect that at one or two ports discriminations had been made, but in each instance such discriminations have been shown to be in direct violation of the laws of the State, and nothing is simpler and nothing easier than to correct such discriminations, if persisted in, by an appeal to the courts.

Furthermore, no complaint of this character has been made, so far as I know, that has not been investigated or is not now being investigated by those competent to correct any and all abuses. But I would say to my friend that he can not maintain the proposition that because, for instance, the State of Mississippi, or some other State, does not enforce its pilotage laws he is justified in abolishing the pilotage laws of my State, against which no complaint of discrimination exists.

The proposition before us is to wipe out all the pilotage laws of all the States because, forsooth, at some port the State laws regulating its pilotage system have not been fairly or properly enforced.

Mr. Speaker, I am concerned in the maintenance and protection of the commerce of my port and my State. Now, we get down to this proposition: Do we need pilots to protect our commerce? No man will gainsay the proposition that we do. No one has attempted to do so. It being conceded that pilots are necessary, the next question is how to secure them, how to support them. We can only support them by paying them fees. Who is to pay those fees? In all justice and fairness the fees should be paid by the vessels coming into the ports—the vessels that the pilots are on duty to protect. Oh, gentlemen say it is a great outrage for a vessel that does not use a pilot to be taxed with pilotage fees. Let me say to such as take that view, go down to the coast of Georgia and inform yourselves on the subject—look over our laws and see on the statute book who can become a pilot. See that not only must he be a man of good moral character, but must undergo a period of years of apprenticeship before he is qualified to serve as a pilot, and when he does become a pilot, see what are his duties. The law says to him that he must stay on the outside of the bar. What about this compulsory pilotage that he collects? He does not collect it unless, outside the bar, he tenders his services to the vessel coming in. He can not stay at home at his fireside and tax the vessel with his fees, for the law says he must be on the outside—across the bar—in deep water; that he must be there in storm as well as in fair weather, by night as well as by day—be there on the watch to serve when his services are needed; and if he stays there, I ask you why shouldn't he be paid for doing so?

Mr. PALMER. Will you allow me to call your attention to this statement in the report, and ask you whether it is true?

> The system of compounding for pilot fees exists in Virginia and Georgia and reduces the business to one of revenue alone to the pilot, as it licenses the vessel and proceeds upon the theory that the services of the pilot are not in any sense necessary to the vessel.

That is found on page 49. Is that true—that a vessel can get a license for a sum of money paid into the hands of the Pilot Association down there and enter and depart from these harbors without a pilot?

Mr. BRANTLEY. Mr. Speaker, in answer to my friend from Pennsylvania I want to say to him that, in the interest of making commerce as inexpensive as possible at my port and the ports of Georgia, a concession was made to the vessel owner by which, under certain conditions and certain regulations, certain vessels coming regularly into our ports may pay so much per year as a license fee, the money to go to the support and maintenance of the pilots of the port.

Mr. PALMER. They get fees from such vessels without rendering any service?

Mr. BRANTLEY. They may not render any service, trip after trip, to a particular vessel, but they are on duty ready to give assistance if by chance it should be needed.

Mr. PALMER. But they do get a fee from the vessel for services they do not render?

Mr. BRANTLEY. They get the license fee paid by the vessel.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. And all of this element of protection to life and property is entirely eliminated so far as the pilotage system is concerned. Is not that true?

Mr. BRANTLEY. It is not true.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I should like to know, if the vessel has no pilot, under your system, how the pilot, under your system, does the vessel any good?

Mr. BRANTLEY. Mr. Speaker, I would think that if any man on this floor ought to understand this question it would be my friend from Maine.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Well, I hope I do.

Mr. BRANTLEY. Under the license system our pilotage system is maintained. We have pilots and they remain outside the bar, and although vessels may and do come in which do not need them, they are there when their services are needed, and the day comes to all vessels when the services of a pilot are absolutely necessary.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. For the purpose of ascertaining whether I really do understand anything about it, let me ask my question again. I understand you to address your remarks now to the system in general. My question was addressed (I had hoped to make myself understood, but it seems I was not) to the specific vessel that had the license. With reference to that vessel, quo ad that vessel, where does the element of protection to life and property as to that vessel come in under your system?

Mr. BRANTLEY. The answer is very simple. As to that particular vessel the element of protection comes in this way—that under the license system the pilot is maintained on the bar to protect that particular vessel in time of storm, when it does need the services of a pilot. If the Congress should follow the lead of the gentleman from Maine, the pilot would not be there when the time came that his services were necessary, so that under our system each particular vessel is protected by the mere presence of the pilot on the bar. The master of the vessel has no hesitancy in seeking a cargo at our port, because he knows that if the weather is thick and the wind high when he reaches the entrance to our harbor there will be found a pilot competent and ready to take him inside. We can not require the pilot to be there, require him to undergo years of apprenticeship, to purchase, equip, and maintain his own pilot boat, to risk his life, to remain at sea in foul as well as fair weather, and not provide adequate compensation for him. You can do one of two things—abolish pilots altogether or provide reasonable compensation in return for duties required.

On our Georgia coast the mainland is low and in thick weather can not be seen. There are shoals projecting far out to sea, and mariners have to be cautious when the weather is not fair. The pilot boat stationed just across the bar is always there to direct not only the vessel needing a pilot, but the vessel not needing him, where the entrance to the channel is. We have ever found the pilot necessary, and we want the privilege of keeping him at the expense of those whose property he protects until the time comes when we can either dispense with his services or have sufficient foreign shipping to support him.

Mr. DRISCOLL. The gentleman said that in case of a storm the pilot was out there, outside the bar, prepared and ready and willing to pilot the ship in. Is any extra charge imposed in case he does pilot that ship in?

Mr. BRANTLEY. Not a penny.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I mean the ship that has paid the license by the year.

Mr. BRANTLEY. Not a penny.

Mr. DRISCOLL. No extra charge?

Mr. BRANTLEY. Not a penny. A vessel is piloted in in time of storm for the same money that it is piloted in in fair weather.

Mr. DRISCOLL. But I am speaking of those who have paid a license, and therefore are not required to take a pilot except when they wish him.

Mr. BRANTLEY. If they take a pilot, they pay him.

Mr. DRISCOLL. They pay extra for the pilot that they take to pilot them in during the storm?

Mr. BRANTLEY. They do not pay extra. They pay the pilot for his services when they take him, but if they have this license they do not pay any pilot fees when they do not have a pilot. The license fees, which are small, exempt them from all pilotage charges, except where they actually use a pilot.

[The time of Mr. BRANTLEY having expired, Mr. SHERLEY yielded to him five minutes.]

Mr. BRANTLEY. Mr. Speaker, I just want to say, in conclusion, that this bill is so manifestly unfair upon its face, is such a manifest discrimination against certain of the States of this Union, that although it has been introduced in this House year after year for a quarter of a century——

Mr. BARTLETT. More than thirty years.

Mr. BRANTLEY. It has always received the stamp of disapproval in the American Congress, because the American Congress has stood against discrimination and in favor of equality of treatment of all the States. We would be glad in my State if we could make commerce absolutely free, but we believe that the duty is incumbent upon us to protect commerce at our ports, if we would invite it to come there, and we know that the necessity exists to have pilots to bring vessels into our ports. They may come in at times without needing the services of a pilot, but the day comes for each and all of them when the pilot is hailed as a savior, when his services are of inestimable value, and we want to have him there against the time when his services are needed. We want at all times to regulate the matter for ourselves. If any of the people of my State have any fault to find with our pilotage system, they have but to appeal to the legislature of the State to have any changes made that appear necessary or proper to make.

Mr. Speaker, this bill is entitled "A bill to remove discriminations against sailing vessels." The plea is made that the sailing vessel is discriminated against, and that its owners must be allowed to make more money. Yet turn to the hearings before the honorable committee having this bill in charge and read there where the leading advocate of the passage of this bill—himself a shipowner—testifies that he has gradually increased his ship holdings from year to year until he has a controlling interest in more than one hundred of these sailing vessels. Evidently he has found it a business profitable under our laws as they now exist, and yet in order to make it still more profitable he would sacrifice and imperil the commerce of my port and imperil the lives of the men who serve on his vessels. There is no excuse or justification for this bill except to put money into the pockets of a few people.

There is no industry in the world that is to-day so protected, so taken care of, so watched over and looked after as the coastwise sailing business of this country. We are expending millions for its benefit every year. We have removed all competition from abroad with the men engaged in it; we have given them an absolute monopoly. We spend millions to deepen our harbors and deepen our channels for them; we build light-houses and station light vessels for them; we set up buoys and range lights for them; we tax them nothing for these great aids to their business, and yet when my State asks that they contribute something to the protection of the lives they employ and the protection of the commerce they handle, and the protection of the good name of our ports, they rise up and say: "No; we are the favored children of the nation, and you must not tax us anything." That the sailing vessel is the great beneficiary of improved harbors and deeper channels is easily demonstrated. At the port of Brunswick, Ga., the coastwise steamers draw from 14 to 18 feet of water, while it is a matter of almost daily occurrence for sailing vessels drawing 19, 20, and 21 feet of water, and sometimes more, to enter our harbor. It is to accommodate the deep-draft sailing vessel that we are constantly seeking to deepen our channel. It is to protect the sailing vessel that pilots are primarily needed, and it is but small return for them to make for all that is done in their behalf to assume the burden of paying these pilots. I hope this bill will be defeated. [Applause.]

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Speaker, I am unable to agree with the distinguished gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BRANTLEY] who has just spoken, and who contends that this is a bad bill. Upon the contrary, I think that the commercial interests of the entire country, and, I am sure, the commercial interests of the South, as illustrated by our coastwise trade, will be benefited by the passage of this particular legislation.

Substantially this bill provides that the masters or mates of all sailing vessels may be licensed under the authority of the United States to pilot any vessel within certain limits and that the authority granted by such license shall not be limited by any State regulation. The purpose is to make the acceptance of a pilot by a sail vessel optional instead of compulsory. The bill does not apply to foreign vessels, but only to American vessels engaged in the coastwise trade. By the act of 1871 all steamers were relieved from compulsory pilotage, and the purpose of this bill, as the title implies, is to remove this discrimination against sail vessels and put them on an equality with vessels propelled by steam. With the commercial growth of our country, with the constant improvement of our harbors by providing a greater depth of water and by marking the channels with day and night beacons, the tendency has been to remove all burdens upon our coastwise shipping, and this is true because any burden upon interstate trade is ultimately borne by the consumer and because the necessity which formerly existed for compulsory pilotage has ceased. Compulsory pilotage has been abolished by the action of the several States upon the Great Lakes, upon the Pacific coast, and upon the North Atlantic coast above Cape Henry. This burden—and I think I can show it is an unnecessary burden—is only imposed in the ports between Cape Henry and Galveston.

Until about three years ago I was opposed to this legislation, not upon its merits, but because I clung tenaciously to the opinion which actuates so many of its opponents, that the regulation of pilotage should be left with the several States. In truth, this is the only reason which can be advanced against this bill. Since the foundation of our Government it has been our policy to leave these matters to the several States, but like so many other subjects affecting our domestic trade and commerce conditions have so changed as to demand uniformity of legislation and regulation and to demand that Congress shall assert its unquestioned jurisdiction. No one denies the authority of Congress to enact this legislation. At the best it is only a question of policy and of commercial necessity. I would be the last person to invade upon any vital question the reserved rights of the States, but this legislation not only follows beaten paths, and for which there are numerous precedents, but it is in line with the admitted trend of legislation to make uniform and consistent all laws affecting interstate trade. The only manner in which this result can be accomplished is through Congressional action.

Does the necessity exist for this legislation, or ought the South Atlantic and Gulf States to be permitted longer to regulate pilotage? I think the time has arrived when the States ought voluntarily to surrender these privileges or in default thereof that Congress should assert its jurisdiction. If pilotage was ever a local question, that time has passed. There was a period in our history when it was strenuously contended that Congress had no power to appropriate money for the improvement of our waterways or harbors, but now public sentiment everywhere has yielded this position, and no one questions that the maintenance of our harbors is a function of Congress. The harbor of New York is not the property of the Empire State, but of the country. Hampton Roads, in its magnificent area, is not the property of Virginia, but is the pride of every American. Galveston, with its enormous shipping and great tonnage, does not alone belong to Texas. In so far as these ports and others are useful for commerce, to this extent does every State in the Union possess an interest in them. Every burden upon interstate commerce in these ports, every obstacle to the freest movement of steamers and vessels should be removed, and every encouragement for their use by American shippers should be afforded. Commerce can and should be as free as is consistent with safety.

If these burdens in the way of pilotage regulations imposed under the authority of any State are not only unnecessary, but the charges are extortionate and are harsh and inconsistent, and particularly if they foster a monopoly, then the necessity for Congressional action is imperative. I think that all of these onerous conditions exist at the several ports between Cape Henry and Galveston, and in a more or less drastic form.

Mr. BRANTLEY. Will the gentleman from North Carolina yield for a question?

Mr. SMALL. Certainly.

Mr. BRANTLEY. Is it not true that the port of Wilmington, N. C., has abolished compulsory pilotage fees?

Mr. SMALL. Yes.

Mr. BRANTLEY. And that the change of the position of the gentleman on this question changed with the action of the port of his State?

Mr. SMALL. I will answer the gentleman.

Mr. BRANTLEY. If the gentleman will pardon me, I want to ask another question in that connection. Is it not true that following the declaration that Wilmington is a free port its lumber business in a large measure got away from it, and has been away since it has been a free port? Then I want to ask the gentleman further if abolishing compulsory pilotage in Wilmington has resulted in giving this port an advantage over every other southern port that has not abolished pilotage fees, why isn't it for the interest of Wilmington to have this bill defeated and compulsory pilotage maintained at the other southern ports?

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Speaker, answering the question of the gentleman, I will say that Wilmington, N. C., is the principal port of my State, and that the legislature of North Carolina has made it a free port; but that was not the controlling reason which actuated me in coming to a belief in the merits of this legislation. It is not true that the coastwise trade of the port of Wilmington, either in lumber or any other commodity, has decreased since it has become a free port, but upon the contrary there is evidence the other way, which has been presented, if I am not mistaken, to the committee.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I can hand the gentleman a letter, if he desires it, to the effect that the trade has not fallen off.

Mr. SMALL. I would be glad to have it. There is evidence to the effect that the commerce of Wilmington has shown a healthy increase since these discriminations were removed from sailing vessels engaged in the coastwise trade.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. There is a letter from the president of the chamber of commerce, which I hand to the gentleman.

Mr. SMALL. Yes; here is a letter which I will read. It is from Mr. J. A. Taylor, president of the chamber of commerce of that city, and is as follows:

THE WILMINGTON CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,
Wilmington, N. C., March 21, 1906.

Hon. CHARLES E. LITTLEFIELD,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Referring to the minority report on the Littlefield bill, beg to call your attention to figures on page 78 purporting to represent the relative shipments from Charleston, S. C., Georgetown, S. C., and Wilmington, N. C., for the years 1904 and 1905, in which the Wilmington shipments of lumber to New York are represented as having fallen off more than 4,000,000 feet. This statement is intended to convey the impression that shipments received at New York are practically the total output of this commodity from Wilmington, and a lamer argument we can not well conceive. For your information, beg to say that the shipments of lumber from Wilmington for 1904 were 40,000,000 feet, and for 1905, 46,000,000 feet, and this notwithstanding that one of the principal mills was shut down for five months, due to a boiler explosion. It is estimated that lumber shipments from Wilmington for 1906 will exceed 60,000,000 feet, or an increase over 1904 of 50 per cent. New York no longer receives the proportion of shipments that it formerly enjoyed, and if the signers of the minority report had been as zealous in ascertaining facts as they were in putting forth a misleading argument they would never have appended their signatures to a report so easily refuted.

On this same page appears this clause: "Cause, reduced freight, as the freight always pays the pilotage." This is the conclusion of the argument and is the capstone to the contention that a free port suffers a loss of commerce. In the same paragraph the action of Wilmington in abolishing compulsory pilotage is represented as a short-sighted step on the part of a few grasping shippers. As a matter of fact, the Wilmington Chamber of Commerce, by unanimous vote, condemned compulsory pilotage, and the members of the chamber raised a large fund to prosecute repeal before the State legislature. The subscribers to this fund embraced, with three exceptions, every manufacturer and wholesale dealer in Wilmington.

For your further information I will state that ten pilots are now engaged in the business at this port, and the service is more satisfactory and efficient than it has been for more than ten years. There has not been a single disaster to shipping chargeable to the abolition of compulsory pilotage or to inefficient pilotage service, and the commercial interests of Wilmington are highly pleased with the results of the free port.

I hope that you will feel at liberty to use this letter in meeting the erroneous assumptions in the minority report.

Yours, respectfully,

J. A. TAYLOR, President.

I will state that the act of the legislature making Wilmington a free port took effect in March, 1905.

Mr. PATTERSON of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, representing the Wilmington district, I would like to ask the gentleman if the statistics from the Department of Commerce and Labor do not show that there is an actual falling off in the shipments of lumber from Wilmington since it was made a free port, and if those statistics do not show an increase from Charleston and Georgetown?

Mr. SMALL. If the gentleman has any such statistics, he can produce them in his own time and then they can be answered. I have not any to that effect. I was but recently in Wilmington, and there I found among the commercial interests of that port a unanimity of sentiment in favor of a continuance of the law making the city of Wilmington a free port.

Mr. PATTERSON of North Carolina. I desire to say simply that those facts are so, and I tried to get from Mr. Taylor his explanation, but have not been able to do so—that is, as to the falling off.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. What was the statement of the gentleman?

Mr. SMALL. The gentleman from North Carolina, my colleague, stated that the statistics of the Department of Commerce and Labor showed there had been a falling off in the coastwise trade since the city of Wilmington was made a free port.

Mr. PATTERSON of North Carolina. On lumber only.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. May I ask if the gentleman questions the credibility of Mr. Taylor, who writes the letter which the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL] has read?

Mr. PATTERSON of North Carolina. No; I do not, nor do I question the credibility of the Secretary of the Department of Commerce and Labor.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. May I ask the gentleman if it does not embarrass him if he questions the intelligence and credibility of Mr. J. A. Taylor?

Mr. PATTERSON of North Carolina. Not at all. He is an honorable gentleman. He is in favor of this bill. Yet the largest shipper there is opposed to it.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. That does not change the fact—the circumstance that these people are for or against the legislation.

Mr. SMALL. I will say to the gentleman that the shipper to whom he refers, the firm of Alexander Sprunt & Son, is engaged exclusively in the foreign trade, as I understand.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. And they want the coastwise trade to pay to help them out in the foreign trade.

Mr. PATTERSON of North Carolina. Before the matter is closed I would just like to say that my own opinion about the falling off is that it is due to the destruction of our forests, and not because Wilmington is made a free port.

Mr. SMALL. I am obliged to the gentleman for that statement.

Mr. PATTERSON of North Carolina. That is my own opinion.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, I understand the gentleman to say that the State of North Carolina, through its legislature, made Wilmington a port of entry.

Mr. SMALL. A free port.

Mr. SPARKMAN. A free port, I would say; and that it did so because it evidently found that the foreign shipping was sufficient to sustain the pilot system there, I presume.

Mr. SMALL. I do not understand that that entered substantially into the reasons controlling the commercial interests of Wilmington in a movement for a free port.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Whatever the reason may have been, does not the gentleman think the balance of the Southern States or any State in the Union can also be trusted to do the right thing whenever the time comes for doing it?

Mr. SMALL. I will say, in answer to the gentleman, that the only possible merit in the opposition to this bill is the contention that it should be left to the State, and I think the time has come when the Congress of the United States, in the interest of interstate commerce and freedom of trade, should remove this discrimination against the coastwise trade.

Mr. HARDWICK. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. SMALL. Certainly.

Mr. HARDWICK. I want to ask you this: Why will not the same argument made by my friend from Florida apply, and why did it not apply, to quarantine just as well?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I can answer that——

Mr. SMALL. Oh, the question of quarantine has been thrashed out, and a majority of this Congress has admitted that it was the duty of the United States to take jurisdiction.

Mr. BRANTLEY. What objection has the gentleman from North Carolina to allowing the State of Georgia to do as the State of North Carolina did, abolish compulsory pilotage at its pleasure and not at the command of the Government of the United States?

Mr. SMALL. Without reflection upon the Empire State of Georgia I might suggest that Georgia is not as wise as North Carolina and may not do it, and therefore the Congress of the United States ought to step in and free commerce from this restriction. [Applause.]

Mr. BRANTLEY. Will the gentleman let me suggest just there that if his State has been more wise, and you have got an advantage over Georgia, then why do not you keep it? Have you not made a mistake and want to pull us in the hole with you?

Mr. SMALL. I hope the gentleman will not think that in North Carolina we are so narrow we would withhold the benefits we are enjoying from the great State of Georgia and her ports. We are liberal in these matters and we wish to extend the benefit to every port of the country. Now, as to one question propounded by the gentleman from Georgia, my friend Mr. BRANTLEY. He intimated that the reason for my position at this time was because Wilmington was the chief port and a free port. I would not intimate that the gentleman represents the pilots of his ports. I would not represent that other gentlemen here, residents or representing districts which have ports in them in States which recognize compulsory pilotage, are representing their ports alone. I will give them credit for a wider range of vision in this matter than to say they represent their particular ports or particular section.

Substantially every reason which was adduced in favor of a system of compulsory pilotage at each separate port has been eliminated in the course of our commercial growth and in the extension of our domestic trade. Many beautiful sentiments have been written in praise of the heroism of the pilots as they brave the storms upon the ocean, seeking the luckless vessel and bringing her safely into port. Under the old conditions the pilots were desired by the masters and in stress of weather they were a necessity. But by no wild stretch of the imagination can such sentimental reasons be advanced to-day in favor of the present system. Steamers are not required to take pilots and yet strange vessels frequently demand their services. The master and pilot of a sail vessel accustomed to trade with more or less frequency at the same port are just as well acquainted with the channel as is the local pilot. So that the arguments of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] and several other gentlemen who have appealed to the sentiment of Members are dealing not with the present but with the past.

Let me illustrate some of the inconsistencies in the application of compulsory pilotage. At Cape Henry a sailing vessel entering Hampton Roads and bound for Norfolk or Newport News must take a pilot or pay the fee. If she is bound for Baltimore she is not so compelled, although subject to the same conditions, because Baltimore is a free port. If the same vessel is bound for Alexandria she must take a pilot, but if her destination is the city of Washington, just a few miles farther, it is optional. Can such inconsistencies be explained?

Again, a practice exists at Cape Henry, and I believe to the same degree substantially at the other ports where pilotage is compulsory, by which an annual license for a consideration is issued to a vessel, and which relieves such vessel from the necessity of taking a pilot during the life of the license. Mind you, the license is not to some skillful and intelligent pilot on the sail vessel, but it is issued in the name of the vessel itself. It is, therefore, a fair inference that at least one purpose of compulsory pilotage is to raise revenue for the pilots rather than to protect shipping or conserve the interests of the port.

It has been said in this debate that the object of this legislation is to benefit owners of sail vessels in the State of Maine. I am unwilling to believe that none of the sail vessels engaged in trade with the South Atlantic and Gulf ports are owned by the southern people, but if every such vessel was owned in the State of Maine such fact would not justify unnecessary discrimination against and unnecessary exaction upon such vessels engaged in the trade. These vessels are the instrumentalities of commerce, and are not only entitled to freedom of movement, but every dollar extorted from them is necessarily added to the freight charges and is paid by the southern owner of the lumber or cross-ties or other material so transmitted by them. It was said by one gentleman, Mr. BRANTLEY, I believe, that this bill was intended to put money in the pockets of a few individuals—referring to the vessel owners. This was an unfortunate allusion. The representative of the pilots stated that this legislation would not affect more than 1,000 pilots, and there was evidence before the committee to the effect that the number would not exceed 130. It has been shown that wherever a compulsory pilotage system exists that the number of pilots is limited; that they are well organized; that they receive large incomes, and it is well known that they have maintained at this capital one or more intelligent and distinguished representatives to protect their interests. Evidently it can be said upon the best authority that those opposed to this legislation are seeking, perhaps unconsciously, to maintain a profitable monopoly at a few ports.

May I call attention to another form of discrimination? The kind of vessel which has more than any other revolutionized water-borne trade and reduced the cost of movement to a minimum is that of barge transportation. Therefore every encouragement should be afforded, and yet a tug entering the harbor from Hampton Roads with a tow of, say, three barges, need not take a pilot, but each barge is compelled to accept a pilot or pay the fees for an annual license. How can this be justified?

We have heard in this discussion some panegyrics upon labor. It is said that the pilots belong to the American Federation of Labor, and that this fact may prejudice this bill. How the pilots under modern conditions come to be associated with any labor organization is one of the unfathomable mysteries. At least a goodly portion of them sit in comfortable offices and collect the vessel licenses, with occasional visits to their State capitals while the legislature is in session in order to relieve the monotony of the daily grind. Instead of being laborers, they resemble more the traditional lily, "which toils not, neither does it spin." If I had authority I should at once institute an inquiry in order to ascertain how these pilots were mustered into the ranks of labor, and I am sure some skillful legerdemain would be discovered.

If compulsory pilotage is necessary, then who should be in favor of it? I should say that the vessel owners would favor the system for the protection of their property. I would say that the owners of the cargoes of such vessels would advocate it. I would also suggest that the marine underwriters would be zealous friends of the system. But in all the hearings before that committee I have seen no evidence that any one of these interests was opposed to this bill, but, on the contrary, they are advocating its passage.

Fortunately, I represent my own constituency in the position I have advocated. Millions of feet of lumber are manufactured in eastern North Carolina, and large quantities are shipped to Norfolk and there transferred to sail vessels or barges and thence transported to Philadelphia and other northern ports. I think every manufacturer and shipper of lumber in my Congressional district has written to me asking me to support this bill. They are not interested in maintaining the compulsory pilotage system at Cape Henry, and they realize that its maintenance imposes upon them an unnecessary exaction.

Mr. Speaker, I have endeavored to consider this legislation alone from the viewpoint of public duty. I am sorry that many of the southern Members and Democrats differ with me. I yield to no man in loyalty to the South and to the tenets of the Democratic party, and in supporting this measure I make no sacrifice of either. Whenever I can do so consistently and in the line of duty I stand for that legislation which makes for commercial growth, for industrial activity, and for the development of the rich resources of the South. Any legislation which tends to freedom of commerce, which increases the number of vessels engaged in our coastwise trade, and which lightens the cost of transportation will tend to increase our prosperity. Obstacles may temporarily be thrown in the way, but in the march of progress they will ultimately be removed. [Applause.]

Mr. BRANTLEY. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY], I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK].

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I shall not undertake in the few remarks which I shall submit upon this bill, to go into details. That would be impossible in the short time I am allowed. While no one questions the authority of Congress to deal with this matter, the fact remains that ever since the formation of the Government Congress has deemed it wise not to interfere with the States along this line. This bill has been presented at almost every Congress for possibly thirty or forty years, and the Congress has never seen fit yet to take from the States the control of this subject. Why should Congress do so now? What particular reason exists now for this bill? Who is demanding the passage of this bill? Not the people at interest; not those of the States where these ports are located, but the cry for the abolition of compulsory pilotage by Congress comes from the shipowners of the State of Maine. Now, Mr. Speaker, if this bill should pass it would absolutely destroy the pilotage system of the State of Florida, which I in part represent upon this floor. A bill to repeal compulsory pilotage has been repeatedly introduced in the Florida legislature, and it has failed of passage every time, because our people recognize that the commerce from foreign nations coming to our ports is so exceedingly small that it could not possibly maintain an efficient pilotage system in any of those ports. There is another thing that gentlemen should remember. The channel in southern ports, particularly with us, is constantly changing on account of the shifting sands. They are not like the ports of rock-ribbed New England, that remain the same all the time, and it is absolutely essential that pilots thoroughly familiar with the channel should be on hand to guide these vessels safely into and out of our ports. It is necessary in the interest of human life, it is necessary in the interest of the preservation of property; and, I say, Mr. Speaker, that the saving of one human life, the saving of one human being, is worth more to the country than every dollar that these shipowners would be taxed.

I want to say, too, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the main reason assigned for the necessity for this bill is the fact that there have been some acts of injustice somewhere. Here and there isolated wrong has been perpetrated; here and there instances of hardship upon some shipowner have occurred. That does not demand the abolition of the law; that does not demand the destruction of the system. It ought to be regulated; its inequalities and injustices ought to be cured; but it does not demand the entire abolition of the system and the denial to the ports of my State of the right to maintain a pilotage system. Why not do with Florida as has been done with the State of North Carolina? Let us go on under this system until our foreign commerce has reached that point where we can voluntarily abolish it, as they have done at the port of Wilmington; and it will be abolished whenever our foreign commerce reaches such a volume as to maintain an effective system of pilotage in our ports.

This pilotage system as we have it, too, Mr. Speaker, is a great aid to us in matters of quarantine. The pilot, I say, is always, as has been so eloquently said by the gentleman from Georgia, outside. He is the first man who comes into contact with a vessel seeking entrance into our ports. If there be any disease on board he discovers the fact before the vessel enters our port. He discovers and reports that fact, and it is valuable to the quarantine system. Mind you, Mr. Speaker, there is no demand in my State for the passage of this bill. It is true that some gentlemen have sent telegrams to the committee, and so forth; but the sentiment of the people, the overwhelming sentiment of the people in my State, is in opposition to this bill.

Probably the largest shipper at Jacksonville, which is the largest city in my State and in my district, is the Cummer Lumber Company, people who represent over $2,000,000 in lumber, turpentine, and other interests, and they are absolutely opposed to the passage of this bill. In 1905 I believe they sent a telegram here supporting it, but last winter the Cummer Lumber Company put themselves on record as opposed to this bill and are anxious that it be not passed by Congress. So I say there is no demand there for it. The only demand comes from the shipowner of Maine. The only demand comes from him, and only to save a few dollars, regardless of the danger to human life, regardless of the danger in the destruction of property, and regardless of the rights of labor in this country.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Certainly.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Is the gentleman able to show where there has been any loss of life or any injury to the vessels that have gone in and out of these ports without a pilot?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I will say to the gentleman that I can not state from memory, but I know there have been a good many.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. That challenge was made before our committee to those who oppose this bill, and it was shown that not a single vessel was injured, not a life was lost, and no danger to property happened on any vessel out of the thousands that had gone in and out of these ports without a pilot; and yet to-day the gentleman is opposed to the passage of this bill, as he says, in the interest of the protection of life and property. I fail to see what basis the gentleman has for his argument that it is for the protection of life and property, because the testimony shows that where they employed pilots there were lives that were endangered and vessels that were injured.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I do not doubt the gentleman's statement; but, Mr. Speaker, I oppose it upon this proposition—that the pilot living at the port, there every day and every night, knowing every possible change in the channel, is bound to know more about it than the pilot upon a vessel coming into that port once a year.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him one question?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I will if I have the time.

Mr. SHERLEY. I yield five minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Suppose, as in the case of Norfolk, where a pilot never leaves the shore, and only sits in his office and collects the pilotage, and as has been shown by the evidence before the committee, that there has not been a pilot on a sailing vessel in that port in eighteen years, how do they learn it by simply sitting in their offices ashore and simply collecting the revenue?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I presume the gentleman who represents the Norfolk district can take care of that. I am speaking solely for my own constituency, and I know that at the port of Jacksonville and Pensacola and other Florida ports there is a body of pilots inferior to none in all this country and true to their trust. They do not sit in carpeted offices and draw a salary, but in sunshine and in storm the Florida pilot is outside of the bar seeking only to assure to property and to life a safe guidance into the port; and I say to the gentleman again that I know that so far as our own pilots are concerned—the Pensacola pilot and the Jacksonville pilot and the other Florida pilots—they know more about our own ports in a minute than the pilots on one of these Maine schooners will know about those ports in forty years, because they stay out there.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him one more question?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Certainly.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. After the eloquent eulogy you have pronounced on the pilots of Florida, will you please explain why, under the pilotage system of Florida, they charge American vessels three times as much for the same service as they do to the foreign vessel at the same port?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I said at the opening of my remarks that there might be occasions where injustices or wrongs have been done, but I stand here to urge these gentlemen to correct it. But because there is one wrong or one injustice, because here and there you can point out one individual act of injustice, do not destroy the whole system that means so much to us.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Certainly.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. It appeared before the committee that the acts of injustice and discrimination were repeated and continuous, and that as a matter of fact there was more discrimination than there was regular treatment. Now, why not join with us in wiping out the system that renders that kind of conduct possible?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. If the gentleman wants to wipe out systems that are objectionable, where injustice creeps in and wrong is triumphant, then why does not the gentleman join with me to adjust the inequalities of the Dingley bill? [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. "The gentleman from Maine" will be perfectly ready to debate that interesting proposition with the gentleman from Florida at any time when the occasion arises, but that does not answer my question.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. All right. The gentleman is now talking about existing wrongs.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Is that all the answer the gentleman can make to my question?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I say to the gentleman from Maine that I am ready to do my part in aiding him to wipe out any inequality that may exist, but I am not willing to destroy a system that has done so much for us and promises so much for us in the future. This Congress ought not to treat us differently from the way in which they have treated the other States of the Union. They have waited upon them all to abolish compulsory pilotage when their foreign commerce justified it. They waited upon North Carolina until such time as their foreign commerce justified it. When ours reaches that point we are ready to join hands with the gentleman from Maine in repealing compulsory pilotage. [Applause.]

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman from Maine use some of his time?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR].

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, in 1896 this bill was pending in the House of Representatives, and for a reason which I gave at the time I voted against its passage. Eighteen hundred and ninety-six was a time of starvation, and it was represented to the House of Representatives that if we should abolish this subsidy, or whatever else you may call it, one hundred and twenty-odd pilots and their families would suffer during the coming winter. I made a speech in opposition to the bill, putting it upon that ground, and asking, in reply to the pressure made by Mr. Dingley, that he postpone the passage of the bill until a better condition should justify the action of Congress. From that day to this, and, indeed, going back to 1892, every Administration of the Federal Government, through its proper officer, has appealed to Congress to repeal this discriminating charge. Now is the first time since 1896 that a bill has been presented before the House for its passage. At the time of the original discussion of this matter there was not the condition that exists at the present time.

It is a most astonishing thing that which we have here disclosed. First, every business man in the great cities of the South who has spoken has appealed for the passage of this bill. I am amazed to hear the gentleman from Jacksonville [Mr. CLARK of Florida], whose home is in Jacksonville, speak in opposition to this bill, when apparently as many business men as there probably are in the city of Jacksonville have appealed for its passage, and their names are signed to the memorial to Congress.

It is a new development in commercial trade that there shall be handed over to a little organization of men the power to license or refuse to license the shipping of the American people. The long lease of power that this little coterie has had has emboldened these men until it now appears that in more than a majority of cases they never touch the wheel of a ship, and in very many cases they never go on board the ship. They sit there in an organized body and issue licenses by the year to the owner of a ship or a half dozen ships. They say to him, "It is very true now, you have your own pilots. You understand how to come into these ports. Give us so many dollars, and you need not take a pilot at all." If there is any gentleman here who wishes to question that, here are the receipts for money and here are the statements of the men themselves that they do not go on board of the ships. They simply issue to the owners of the ship a permit for a year, for $500, $300, or $200, and the owner of the ship makes his own arrangement for the piloting of the ship, but pays this tribute to this organization. What do you call that? What would that be called in these days of "muck raking?" An honest man with a cargo going into the port of Norfolk, attempting to enter the James River, is charged a percentage of his cargo in value, and sometimes the majority of the profit of his cargo, in order that he may sail up that harbor, and furnish his own pilot. He takes a receipt for the money, and in that receipt they say that they did not go aboard of the ship, but "spoke her." "Spoke her!" In other parlance, they "touched" her. [Laughter.] From Norfolk to Eastport, Me., there is no such condition, there is no such charge. From the north coast of the Pacific, clear down to the extreme southern part of California, there is no such condition. It is just this little piece of property down there that is just now coming here and asking the Government of the United States to loan them $1,000,000 to run a show down there, so that their pilots can "touch" every vessel that comes into that show. [Laughter and applause.] We will cross that bridge when we come to it.

What is there that justifies this condition? North Carolina and the whole business men of Florida protest against it. Here they are by hundreds, representing millions and millions of dollars of property; here they are asking Congress to take off of their commerce a burden that is not the slightest benefit to them.

The very eloquent gentleman on the other side who talked about the pilots being out there to save property and save lives does not undertake to say how it happened that they themselves certify over and over, continually, from the beginning of the year to the end of it, that they simply charged the ship and did not go aboard of her at all.

We spend millions of dollars making the harbors of our coast easy of access; we spend vast sums of money to dig out the obstructions of our harbors; we spend vast sums of money to light our harbors, and we have got these harbors. Take the harbor of Norfolk. Is there any necessity for any especial skilled pilot to steer a ship into the harbor of Norfolk? Does anybody suppose that they could make the masters of these vessels, southern men, men who have built up this business in that harbor—convince them of the necessity of having a special pilot when the captains can go into these harbors at any hour of the day or night with absolute safety under the light and with the depth of water that is furnished them by the Government?

Why, Mr. Speaker, there is no excuse for this tax. It is a distinct tax and burden for nothing. What other occupation in life is there that compels a man with his little schooner, with no life on board of it, perhaps, that is not as skilled as the pilot himself, to pay a tax for the privilege of entering one of the harbors of the United States? For the credit of our country be it said that it affects no place north of the harbor of Norfolk and no place on the great Pacific coast, including the dangerous entry to Columbia River and of all the other rivers and harbors along the Pacific coast. It exists nowhere else than in these few ports that are entered by the commerce I have spoken of.

Take the harbor of Galveston, to-day second in importance of exports to the greatest in the United States; second only to New York in its export trade. Do they require in that magnificent harbor that has cost this Government untold millions of dollars—do these shipowners require that there shall be put upon that sailing vessel skilled men? Who is interested in saving the lives on board ship so much as the owner of the ship—who next to him but the captain and the men who are handling the ship itself? The whole of this, Mr. Speaker, is an unnecessary burden upon this commerce, and if gentlemen want to see how heavy it is, take this report and read it and you will find that many a ship loaded with the products of industry of laboring men has been taxed more than one-half of the profits of the three weeks' trip in order that they may sail into a harbor, and no pilot ever touched a wheel on the ship. [Applause.]

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD].

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I represent a district that nowhere touches the coast. I have no pilots in my district and no shipping interests, but we are very much interested in commerce. My district is one of the largest manufacturing districts in the South. We ship a large amount of the products of our manufactories abroad. We are interested in foreign shipping, and I am going to vote against this bill, because I believe it will interfere with our commerce, exactly for the opposite reason that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] says he is going to vote for it. I say to this House that I believe we in Alabama are better able to judge what will advance or improve or foster the commerce of Alabama than some gentlemen living in some other State. From Fort Morgan, at the mouth of Mobile Bay, to the port of Mobile is 18 miles. It is a channel where it is absolutely necessary to have a trained pilot to bring a ship from Fort Morgan to Mobile. It is true that a great many of these coastwise vessels engaged in the trade up and down the coast have men or masters aboard them who are thoroughly trained and thoroughly competent to bring a vessel through the channel at Fort Morgan and carry it to Mobile Harbor without any danger, with perfect safety to the vessel, but when foreign vessels come from foreign ports to Mobile to receive the commerce that the State of Alabama carries there to have taken abroad in these ships, of necessity they have no pilot aboard or master or captain who can steer that ship from Fort Morgan to Mobile city and deliver it in safety. Therefore unless we intend to abandon our foreign commerce entirely it is necessary for us to maintain the pilotage system. Now, how can you do it? The custom the world over has been to charge the vessels that come into a port the fees for pilotage, and our people who are on the ground, who understand the situation, who know the amount of commerce, are maintaining this system of pilotage of all vessels coming there, because they find if we only charge pilotage on the foreign vessels at the rate we are charging to-day we would not get enough in return to support the system, and if we charge enough on the foreign vessels to support the system without maintaining the tax on the commerce between the States, on the coastwise trade vessels, then the tax would be so great on the foreign vessels that we would drive the foreign ships away from our harbors. I can say to you that I have no personal desire in the matter to maintain a system of compulsory pilotage, but I do want to maintain a system that will let foreign ships come into our port and carry our iron and steel and cotton to the foreign markets of the world, and I believe that if you pass this bill and take away the right to tax the coastwise vessels for pilotage, you will put the pilotage fees so high on the foreign vessels that you will drive many of them away from southern ports, and thereby prevent us from engaging in that share of foreign commerce that we are entitled to. Therefore I shall not support the bill.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. LAMAR].

Mr. LAMAR. Mr. Speaker, I shall vote against this bill because it is both unnecessary and unjust. If the gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD] desires to prevent discrimination, excessive charges, and injustices on the part of the pilots against shippers or the shipping trade, if any there be, then let him introduce a bill here to correct those excesses and limit those tolls and not destroy at one fell swoop the entire system, built up with the approbation of the American people. I remember that upon the attempt on the part of this House to regulate railway extortionate and discriminatory rates the gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD] was not so zealous in behalf of that bill as he is here in protesting against an alleged injustice done to American shipping by pilots of my State or of any other State.

Mr. Speaker, the bill is unjust from the simple fact that it destroys at one fell swoop, as it were, the property rights grown up under this system with the approbation of the American people. It has been said by the Supreme Court of the United States that the services of a pilot is as necessary to the vessel as are the services of the captain and the crew. That has been the sentiment of the American people, and to destroy it at one blow, as it were, without notice, is unjust. Will the House stand for an unnecessary act? Will it stand for an unjust act? Mr. Speaker, the men who will suffer if this bill is passed are the laboring people of the country. I have no disposition to twit the distinguished gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD]. He is just out of a tilt with the American Federation of Labor. He is "still in the ring," and I shall not even suggest that he came out of that tilt "a little disfigured;" but this bill comes upon the meeting of this Congress early, swift upon its convening, and the gentleman is just out of a serious collision with laboring men, not only in his district, but all over the country.

I would not do the gentleman the injustice to suggest that the rapidity with which this bill comes forward at this time might spring, even in the slightest, out of feelings engendered by that conflict, but I will say that, holding the views that the gentleman does with regard to the propriety of this bill and its justice, it may be that his advocacy of it is accentuated a little by the scars of that conflict, recent as it has been. The gentleman from Maine, I repeat, was more solicitous, from my understanding of his words upon the railroad rate bill, to preserve those powerful discriminatory corporations from regulation by law than he was to enforce upon them the remedial statutes that this Congress finally stood for. The success of his efforts on the railroad rate bill would have been to relieve those powerful corporations from regulaton by law of a stringent character. But he comes here with a piece of legislation that is aimed, not at powerful corporations, but at defenseless laboring men. The American Congress in its decision between the large and powerful shipping interests of this country and the laboring interests should hesitate before it passes this bill. Not only because those interests are laboring interests, but because those interests are poor, and hence they are not capable of withstanding the immediate effect of this crushing piece of legislation, which breaks down their means of livlihood at one blow, which destroys all the property accumulated for years past by the sanction of American public sentiment. I shall vote against the bill.

Mr. SHERLEY. I will ask the gentleman from Maine to yield some of his time.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEVENS].

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, those of us who live in the interior of the country are not concerned as to this measure in whatever way it may affect the interests of the pilots on one side or vessel owners on the other. We are really interested only as it may affect the broad national interests or the national commerce, and it is because I do believe it does affect both that I want to be recorded by my vote and by my voice in favor of the passage of this bill. It is a matter of national policy nowadays to have the interstate and foreign commerce—the commerce of this country—controlled by the national authority, and unless there be the very strongest reason and necessity for State control of any portion of it, the national authority and regulation should prevail. I have had the honor to serve six years upon the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries. In my youth I lived upon the Atlantic coast and know something about maritime conditions, and from my experiences I believe that the present system of pilotage in the South, the system of compulsory pilotage, is not necessary for the protection of life and property entering those ports. If it is not absolutely necessary for State systems and control, then the general national policy of Federal control of these maritime matters should prevail. It is the only safe, fair, and progressive method of doing this business. Unquestionably the present system of compulsory pilotage under State laws is a burden upon interstate commerce, and wherever it interferes with the free movement of commerce, wherever it is an unnecessary or an unjust charge upon national commerce, Congress should remove the burden, and remove it by the enactment of just such a bill as is now before this House. The present system of compulsory pilotage also causes the grossest discriminations against the most helpless class of our maritime traffic. Under the act of 1871 ships propelled by steam were removed from the payment of compulsory pilotage in the South, leaving the whole burden of maintaining this system upon the sailing vessels and vessels in foreign trade; and if there is any one class of business that needs protection, if there is any one class of business that needs encouragement by this Congress and by the country, it is the sailing vessels of the country. Nearly every maritime nation in the world protects and encourages and develops sailing vessels in their various nations. It is by means of these sailing vessels that real sailors are made. They are the nursery for the sailors of the Navy; they are the nursery for the real protection of our country and our coasts, and it is a matter and should be a matter of broad national policy to encourage the building, encourage the maintenance, encourage the operation of sailing vessels. Now, the present system is the worst kind of discouragement, the worst kind of discrimination against sailing vessels. It discriminates against them by placing a burden on them and not on their competitors; it takes away a large portion of their earnings to support a worthy class which should be borne by the whole shipping interest or not borne by any class. For that reason, as a Member from the interior, as one who is only interested in the broad national aspect of this question, I am in favor of giving sailing vessels an equal chance with steamships on our southern coasts. It is objected strongly on this floor that this compulsory pilotage system should be continued as a matter of safety.

In the State from which I came originally they have as rocky coasts, as forbidding harbors, as hard conditions of navigation as in any part of the world, and yet they do not have compulsory pilotage there and do not need it. They have but little foreign commerce with which to maintain any kind of a pilotage system and do not need it. The conditions in the South are easier than they are on the Atlantic coast, and yet the system of doing business there is the worst sort of discouragement to those interests of navigation which ought to be fostered by this Congress and by the country. For these reasons, as a Member from the interior, I am strongly in favor of the passage of this bill.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Speaker, how much time did the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEVENS] have left?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Five minutes.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEGARE].

Mr. LEGARE. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I am very glad that after struggling for a number of years over this matter it has at last been brought into the House, where we can settle it definitely, squarely, and for all time. In discussing it, it is necessary for me to first call your attention to the fact that it is absolutely nonpolitical and nonpartisan. No branch of the National Government is asking for this legislation, no body or set of men in any part of the country are coming before you and asking for this legislation, but to the contrary, so far as I can ascertain—and believe me, gentlemen, I have followed very carefully this question for the past four years—so far as I can ascertain this bill originated with one particular individual or firm of shipowners of which he is a member, one who has followed it closely year in and year out, and one whom I heard say in the presence of the members of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries that he was the controlling owner of more than 100 sailing vessels—a Mr. Pendleton. In other words, gentlemen, you are called upon to settle a question not asked for by the Administration or by any part of the Administration, or by any one single set of men or individuals, but rather a movement which has been instigated, fought for, and lobbied for by a single firm of shipowners.

You must first understand the nature of this business and the reasons why those of us who stand here to-day representing southern ports are asking you to kill this bill. You have been led to believe that a pilot is practically a nabob who sits in his office and draws an enormous salary without doing service for it.

Gentlemen, I want to tell you that that is absolutely untrue. I am speaking now for the port of Charleston, there where we have in the neighborhood of twenty pilots, there where every commercial organization and body of business men have signed a petition asking that this bill be killed; and I am telling you not what I heard some one say before the committee, not quoting evidence delivered there, but I am telling you what I know to be absolutely true, because I took the trouble to go upon the high seas with these men and to stay with them in their pilot boats—morning, noon, and night, in clear weather and in foul—to study this question and to know whether those people in whose behalf I am speaking here to-day were doing right or wrong, and whether they were violating the law or whether they were applying it honestly and conscientiously.

In order to explain the service which they render, let me say to you that they have a sailboat, a two-masted schooner, and that vessel is required to stay at sea and look out for incoming vessels morning, noon, and night, and that they are always on watch—always on guard. Not only that, but they make soundings of our channel every day, week in and week out. Each day they drop their lead lines and make new soundings, and thus keep thoroughly posted as to the shifting of those sandbar channels in order that they may be able to safely deliver a vessel into port. I have been with them at sea when the wind was blowing a gale. I have seen a vessel coming in, when they would take a pilot and place him in a little skiff, and taking the skiff at both ends, pitch it absolutely into the sea in order that he may get aboard of the incoming vessel, take hold of the wheel, and carry her safely into port. At no time is that harbor left unprotected.

Now, it may be true that the gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD] needs no pilot. It may be true that in the northern part of this country they need no pilot. Why? Simply because they have a magnificent harbor, a rock-bottom channel, a channel which never shifts and which is the same to-morrow, next day, and next year. With us, gentlemen, it is different. My friend the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] spoke of the enormous amount of money spent for improvements by the United States Government in order to deepen, to widen, and to expand these channels. That is all true, and it is all the more necessary, therefore, I say to you, that we should guard what the Government has done. The time is not yet ripe when we can abandon those channels.

It is necessary at this time, until these channels have been further widened and completed, and not until completed can we say to any and every vessel, "Come into the harbor and you do not need a pilot;" but at the present time if a vessel grounds in my harbor and goes down there, and the sand piles up higher and higher, that harbor is forever blocked and barred. They have an instance down there now, where in cutting a channel they struck in their dredging an old schooner that had sunk there many years ago. They blew it up without any effect.

They did everything in their power to get that schooner out of the channel and make a clear channel there, but failed, and she lies there to-day, and they were finally compelled to change the course of the channel. They were compelled to go around the schooner in order to make that channel.

Now, then, gentlemen, I say you run a danger if you remove this pilot system, if you abolish the pilots, if you take them away from our ports by the passage of this law. If, in time, a vessel shall go down there the hundreds of thousands of dollars that have been spent by the United States Government will have been wasted.

Much stress has been laid on the fact that there has been discrimination between American and foreign vessels by the pilots. I want to say to you gentlemen that that was an individual case. I want further to say that if I knew there was discrimination by the pilots of this country between foreign vessels and vessels carrying the United States flag I would vote for this bill, although I knew it would destroy commerce in my community. But this is an individual case solely and simply. There is a wrong done there. There is crime committed in every association, in every profession, in every body and class of men. Lawyers often commit wrong and violate the law. Even in law-making bodies we find men who violate the law. But they have ferreted out one or two instances of wrongdoing on the part of the pilots, that which the pilots themselves, or a large majority of the pilots, are opposed to, and they astutely come into this House and say that this great wrong has been committed, hold it up to you to arouse your patriotism, your prejudice, and your enthusiam by telling you that they are discriminating in favor of foreign vessels. Gentlemen, as a matter of fact that is absolutely untrue, except in this individual case, which was ferreted out and corrected.

I understand that the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MINOR] has spoken in favor of this bill and enthusiastically urged its passage. I want to say to you, gentlemen, that this fight has been going on for years, and up to the last session of Congress the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MINOR] was one of the strongest opponents of this bill. I want to read the report made in 1900 by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MINOR]. I want to quote some language that he then used to you. In fact, I can use no stronger language, I can use no better language, I can use no stronger logic and reasoning to you as to why this bill should not pass than the very language of the gentleman from Wisconsin, who was opposed to this bill up to one year ago. In making his report he said:

> Under the fostering care of the several States, by virtue of the recognition by Congress of the pilotage laws thereof, a system of pilotage has grown up that is almost perfect. The pilot laws of the several States will be found in the report of the Commissioner of Navigation for 1885 (Treasury Department Document No. 756), and a most cursory examination of these laws will demonstrate that all that human ingenuity can devise has been devised to render the pilots what they should be, viz, competent, capable, painstaking, careful men, thoroughly acquainted with their respective bars and harbors, able to navigate, without danger or risk to the lives and property intrusted to their care, all vessels seeking to enter or leave their respective ports.

This fell from the pen of the gentleman who addressed you in favor of this bill this morning. He went on to say:

> The charts issued by the Coast and Geodetic Survey, while probably correct at time of issue and publication, become uncertain and unreliable—

And, gentlemen, that is true. It was true then when the gentleman from Wisconsin wrote it, and it is true to-day—

> The charts issued by the Coast and Geodetic Survey, while probably correct at time of issue and publication, become uncertain and unreliable in those sections of our common country where the bars and channels are of sand, which is constantly shifting and changing by reason of the force of tides and wind.

He says that—

> A sand bar is constantly changing, and the only protection to lives and property in navigating thereover is the accurate knowledge of the condition thereof, acquired by constant soundings and observations, which are by the several State pilotage laws required to be made by the pilots.

He also says:

> Under the pilotage system as it now exists the pilots constitute the coast guard necessary to commerce, and in addition thereto they always cooperate with the quarantine authorities in maintaining efficient quarantines, to the great benefit of the public health. This cooperation and the value thereof have at all times been recognized by the Marine-Hospital Service.

He goes on to say—

> This bill—

And mark you, gentlemen, what he said then is true to-day. It is the same bill, almost in the same words, and he tells you that—

> This bill proposes to destroy this system and to take the control of this important service from the hands of those most interested in its efficiency, by whom it has been brought to its present satisfactory condition—

Listen, gentlemen, to what the gentleman from Wisconsin said then—> and to confide it to those who, whatever ability they may have in other respects, can not be said to have had any experience whatever with the duties and requirements of this important service.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman allow me a moment?

Mr. LEGARE. Certainly.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Will the gentleman be kind enough to give the date of that report?

Mr. LEGARE. 1900. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MINOR] signed a similar report in 1896. This is the language that he used in 1900.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Did the gentleman hear the statement made by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MINOR] giving the reasons why he had changed his views in connection with that matter?

Mr. LEGARE. Well, I suppose the gentleman had to give some reason.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I simply asked if he had heard the statement of the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. LEGARE. I did not listen very particularly.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Well, that is all, if the gentleman did not listen.

Mr. LEGARE. I suppose the gentleman from Wisconsin had to give some reason, but it does seem to me that it would take a very strong reason——

Mr. BARTLETT. Better reasons than he gave.

Mr. LEGARE. It will take a very strong reason to change, in this short time, from that report and to advocate exactly the opposite position. Not only that, Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, but I believe that, no matter what reasons he gave here to-day, the reasons that he gave in the report from which I have quoted are stronger and better than the reasons given here to-day. [Applause on the Democratic side.] He goes on to say:

> Is it not safer to continue this important matter in the hands of those who have successfully built up the system which is conceded to yield the best possible results, a system which has been evolved in the past one hundred years until to-day it is almost perfection?
> "Perfection," gentlemen!
> Local pride in a matter of such great importance is a powerful factor. Every seaport desires to be known not only as a safe port, but as having a safe entrance, competent pilots, and low port charges. This reputation is essential to the prosperity of each port, and the history of the operation of the pilot laws of the several States demonstrates that in the hands of the local authorities the best results have been and are obtained.

Now, then, we are not asking much of you to-day, gentlemen on the other side of this House. We of the South have had almost half a century of hard times and struggle in our effort to forge to the front once more. We have gradually built up and prospered. To-day we are in such shape that we are taking care of our commerce to our satisfaction, to your satisfaction, to the satisfaction of this entire Union. I stand here backed by every business man of any consequence and every commercial body in my town and in my district, and I say to you that we do not want this bill to pass. I say to you that down there in the State of South Carolina we know best what we need. Believe me, we are not going to turn ships away from our ports. Believe me, we want them there. We are struggling to bring them there. We know better than you know what we need down there. [Applause.]

[The time of Mr. LEGARE having expired, Mr. SHERLEY yielded to him five minutes.]

Mr. LEGARE. We know better than you know what we need down there. We are studying these matters and are in touch with them from day to day.

Our legislature passed upon this particular matter. We are yearly framing laws to govern this matter, and from time to time we have made pilotage lighter through our laws. In time, gentlemen of the House, we will take away the pilotage, but let us be the judges. Do not come down there and try to crush any enterprise that we are trying to build up. That is all we are asking of you.

I want to say that, as a matter of fact, I can better give an exact summary of the reasons why this bill should not pass by using the language of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MINOR] who this morning so ably advocated the opposite side of the question, but who a short while back, when with us in this matter, said in his report that the bill should not become a law because—

> First. The measure is opposed to the settled judgment of Congress as exhibited by our legislative history from August 9, 1789, to the present time.
> Second. We believe that this bill, if passed, would tend to endanger life and property by the abrogation of the wise provisions of the laws of the several States governing the duties, obligations, and liabilities of pilots appointed under the law.

Third. The proposed legislation would entirely overcome the pilotage system in the United States, and would leave many ports without pilots.

Fourth. All of the shipowners and marine underwriters who have expressed themselves to the committee are opposed to the measure, and their views are entitled to great weight.

Fifth. The Steamboat-Inspection Service is now overburdened, and, as an entirety, is without knowledge as to the requirements in regard to bar pilots at the several ports.

Sixth. The system of pilotage is best controlled and governed by those residing in the community contiguous to the place where the piloting is to be done, and it can not intelligently be governed, controlled, and regulated from a distance.

Seventh. No reason whatever is assigned for the overturning of the present system, which has proved, and is now proving, itself entirely satisfactory to all interested in ships and shipping.

Now, gentlemen of this House, I want to say to you that I am standing here and asking you to allow us to settle this question down there in the South for ourselves. Believe me that we will not turn any enterprise from our doors. To the contrary, we are reaching out all the time, trying to build up our commerce, both foreign and native. I say, further, that whenever you hear of these great charges made by the pilots' association, whenever you hear about how they are fleecing the poor shipowner, I want to say that that is in each instance a violation of a State law, a crime, an offense in violation of the law of the State in which it is done; that all these things are regulated by the laws of our State and of other States. You hear of enormous charges. Why, if a vessel owner stands idly by and permits a single individual pilot, or a bunch of pilots, in any part of the country, to violate the laws of his State and rob him of that to which they are not entitled, he deserves to be robbed, for he has his redress in the courts of the land. You might as well tell me, because some Member of Congress went out here and committed a crime, that we should destroy this great American system of government; that we should do away with the Congress of the United States and the Senate because some one member commits a crime in some part of the country.

Gentlemen, do not listen to or be carried away by the statement that in an individual case some pilot, or some one or two or more pilots in some sections of the country, violated the laws of his State and of the country and made an overcharge or discriminated against American vessels. Believe me when I tell you, in conclusion, that I myself, as opposed as I am to this bill, would be the first man in this House to vote in its favor if I thought for a single instant that these pilots were as a mass or a whole discriminating against American vessels carrying the Stars and Stripes. [Applause.]

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I now yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR].

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I want to read a statement made by a company of Charleston, S. C., which manufactures and ships from 120,000,000 to 130,000,000 feet of lumber annually and operates systems of vessels, barges, and tugboats on a large scale:

ATLANTIC COAST LUMBER CORPORATION,
Georgetown, S. C., January 10, 1906.

Hon. CHARLES H. GROSVENOR,
Chairman Merchant Marine Committee, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We wired you to-day as follows:

"As manufacturers, shippers, and owners of vessels and steamers we desire to state that we favor the passage of the Littlefield bill abolishishing the compulsory pilotage bill, as same works a hardship, injures business, and is unnecessary," and now beg to confirm same.

We not only manufacture and ship from 120,000,000 to 130,000,000 feet of lumber annually, but also operate steamers, vessels, barges, and tugboats on a large scale. To our minds the compulsory pilotage system entails an unnecessary expense each year which we have to pay on account of the toll levied upon the vessels, barges, and steamers, whether they use the pilotage or not. This system is a relic of the old days and has lost its usefulness, having originated when we had no improved harbors or coast surveys or modern light-houses. Its necessity for existence having now ceased, its usefulness also, it has decidedly become a menace rather than a benefit. In canvassing our local shippers we find that they, with the marine insurance companies, favor the Littlefield bill enthusiastically. We sincerely trust that this bill may be favorably reported by your committee and passed by the Congress.

Yours, very truly,

DEAR SIR: We notice that the Littlefield bill for abolishing compulsory pilotage on coasting vessels will come up for discussion before your committee this week. We want to urge the passage of this bill.

We are sure that the present laws on the subject were made to suit conditions that do not exist to-day, and are now, under the changed conditions, working injury and hardship to business, particularly the lumber business.

Yours, very truly,

Messrs. WINYAH LUMBER COMPANY,
Georgetown, S. C.

DEAR SIRS: As compulsory pilotage on coasting vessels trading to southern points is now being fought in Congress, I would like to give my experience of thirteen years out and in of Georgetown, S. C. It is not once out of six months that I get a bar pilot outside of the bar buoy. They have no boat suitable to cruise outside, and it is only in very moderate weather or when they go out in a tug that they are seen outside of the jetties. The work is done mostly by the towboats, that have experienced captains, and the pilot takes a free ride to town, and any sailor that can steer a course can steer to follow a tug. The pilots claim that on schooners going to sea loaded they are needed on board the vessels to see that they are kept in the proper channel, and yet I have seen vessels grounded when they would put the blame all on the captain of the tug and not know themselves when the vessel was in deepest water. To prove the presence of a pilot is not necessary on a vessel—hundreds of vessels are towed up and down the Black, Pee Dee, and Waccamaw rivers, both light and loaded, both day and night, in shallow water and narrower channels than in the bay, with only their vessel crews on board, and not one vessel in fifty ever had any trouble in any way. The service of a pilot is not necessary to any vessel making this port with a good chart, and as there is a telephone system from the light-house to the city a tug can always be had, if not at the bar, in a very short time.

The expenses of towing are quite heavy, and with the additional expense of pilots makes port charges very high. The present rate of pilotage is the same as it has been for many years, and lumber freights were nearly double what they are to-day when the rates were made. And to-day we pay from $10 to $12 per man more for sailors, the same for mates and stewards, 25 to 30 per cent more for provisions, and the rates for stevedoring increasing almost every year. Vessel expenses are also higher, and yet we have less freights to meet their expenses. With the present business of about 12,000,000 feet of lumber per month shipped from here, anyone can readily see that it takes many vessels to carry it, and the plain facts are that we are supporting a class of pilots in comparative luxury for no services at all. Again, some ports have pilot licenses for one year. Why should we walk up to their offices and pay them from $25 to $200 for the privilege of handling our own vessels, when there are no better pilots than the captains who are going in and out every month for years? I think the pilotage system in this port the worst system in the South, and we are surely paying a bill for little or no services rendered. This seems to be the experience of about all the vessels coming in here, and I hope they will express their opinion on it.

DEAR SIR: We have wired you as follows:

"We strongly recommend passage of Littlefield bill abolishing compulsory pilotage on coasting vessels. It is needless expense and no longer necessary."

The present compulsory pilotage system seems to be doing neither manufacturer, shipper, shipowner, or the consumer any good, but all of whom seem to be paying their pro rata share of this unnecessary expense in the high freight rates, which could be reduced if this toll were removed.

Under the present improved conditions of our harbor it would seem that there is no longer any necessity for this expense, and we sincerely hope that it will be abolished.

Yours, very truly,

CHAS. H. GROSVENOR,
Chairman Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

The Richmond Chamber of Commerce is absolutely opposed to the existing pilot laws of Virginia, and has endeavored frequently, but in vain, to have them suitably amended to present conditions. Failing in that effort, it has favored Federal control of the question of pilotage, recognizing that it is a matter properly within the jurisdiction of the General Government, and that the States exercising the function of control in most instances have regulated it in the interests of monopoly and to the serious detriment of the commerce of the country, both foreign and coastwise.

R. A. DUNLOP,
Secretary the Richmond Chamber of Commerce.

Mr. LEGARE. Will the gentleman yield for a statement?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Well, I would suggest to the gentleman from South Carolina that he make it in his own time.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman five minutes, or so much time thereof as he may require.

Mr. LEGARE. Mr. Speaker, in answer to the statement made and the letters read by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] I want to say I investigated those letters. I received several such letters myself. They are signed by lumber people here and there about South Carolina, and those lumber people ship their lumber in vessels owned by this very gentleman, Mr. Pendleton, who has been agitating and lobbying this matter through for several years; they ship their lumber in his vessels. I investigated some of the letters particularly. The gentleman read one from Davis Station. I wrote to a gentleman in Davis Station and asked him why he had written me the letter—he, too, is a lumberman—and I told him my reason why I was opposed to this bill. He wrote me back that he had never signed such a letter; that it was a forgery. I have his reply. I suppose that all of them were sent out in the same way, originating with this shipowning company, sent to the same people, and we all know that the vast majority of people will sign almost any letter and send it to their Congressman.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Does the gentleman from South Carolina say that these telegrams that I have just read are all forgeries?

Mr. LEGARE. Oh, no; not by any means. The vast majority have been signed and sent to me and to him.

Mr. GROSVENOR. One of them, the gentleman says, wrote that he never signed such a letter. Well, he did not send any letter at all. He sent a telegram.

Mr. LEGARE. I got a letter from him myself, and he wrote me that he had never signed that letter; that somebody else signed his name, and that it was a forgery. Who inspired the telegram? Why was there such a hurry?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I will state that I feel sorry to find that in the State of South Carolina there are such a set of rascals as that.

Mr. LEGARE. Oh, well, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] published a paper last year telling about a lot of rascals in another State in this Union—his own. [Applause and laughter.]

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MINOR].

Mr. MINOR. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEGARE], who has just been addressing the House, that if he was present when I opened the few remarks I submitted on this question this morning he knows as well as other Members of this House that I frankly stated that I took the other side of this question in the beginning. I took the other side of this question in 1896, in 1898, and in 1900. I did not change my mind, nor think of changing my mind, until the gentleman's own constituents changed their minds and said that this system was not any longer necessary. I did not change my mind until the War Department, the Navy Department, and the insurance companies reversed their positions, for the reason that the harbors of the South are pronounced to be as good as the harbors of the North, and that we need no pilot system of this kind there, and it is not believed that we need any such system in the South Atlantic States. That is the universal judgment submitted to this House by letters and telegrams from manufacturing interests in the gentleman's own State and city.

Mr. LEGARE. Will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. MINOR. No; I have only three minutes. I want to say further to the gentleman that outside of this Chamber there is not a southern Member of this House who will not advertise to the whole United States that they have the best harbors, or equally as good harbors, as any in the Northern States. If that be true, why is it that the Northern States do not inaugurate this system; and if it is not true, then what are you talking about? Mr. Speaker, finally I want to say to the gentleman that I did sign that report and that it is the strongest presentation of his side that has been submitted to-day; and what he has read from my report is the valuable part of his speech. I was right in my position then, and I am right in my position to-day, notwithstanding the fact that the gentleman attempts to tear that report to pieces, but uses it to justify his position now by my position taken eleven years ago. I am just as earnest in my conviction now as I was when that report was drafted and I signed it. I saved the pilots on this floor in 1896, and the pilots themselves know it, and I believe I was right in doing it; and I am just as earnest for the passage of this law now when the necessity no longer exists for the continuance of this graft system as I was when I signed that report. Wise men with sufficient reasons will change their minds, and there is another class of men who never change them. [Applause.]

Mr. LEGARE. Mr. Speaker, I just want to say that I accept the gentleman's apology; that is all.

Mr. MINOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to add a statement prepared at the Department of Commerce and Labor by the Commissioner of Navigation, showing the increase of entrances and clearances of vessels engaged in the foreign trade to and from the southern ports where this unjust system prevails. Let it be understood that under existing law vessels, both steam and sail, must pay a pilot when entering ports of the United States, if they are engaged in the foreign trade. We are making no objections to this, but we do strenuously object to the levying of this tribute on the American sailing fleet.

Combined entries and clearances in the foreign trade.

SOME OF THE REASONS WHY H. R. 5281, A BILL TO REMOVE DISCRIMINATIONS AGAINST AMERICAN SAILING VESSELS TRADING BETWEEN THE STATES, SHOULD BECOME A LAW.

1. It removes a heavy and unnecessary burden from trade between the States.

2. It completes the act of 1871, giving to American sail vessels in the coasting trade (as said act gave to steamers in that trade) the right when in charge of United States pilots, to enter and leave American harbors without paying for additional State pilot services neither rendered nor required.

3. It gives the coasting sail vessels the same rights in the harbors between Norfolk and Galveston that they already have on the Pacific coast, the Great Lakes, the Atlantic coast north of Virginia, and on all American rivers.

4. It stops an unnecessary and heavy drain of pilot taxes which are discouraging the building of medium-sized sail vessels, and thus destroying the class of carriers to the disadvantage of shippers and consumers which from their size are essential to the business of these ports.

5. It in no way interferes with the general pilot system of the country, which applies to all vessels in the foreign trade, but merely provides that American sail vessels engaged in trade between the States, when in charge of a duly licensed United States pilot, or in tow of a tug, which under existing laws must have two such pilots on board, may enter and leave these ports, as they do in other parts of the country, without paying for additional State pilots not employed.

6. It provides that these sail vessels must either have a United States pilot in charge or must accept and pay for a State pilot, thus insuring all safety to life and property. Every marine insurance company that has expressed an opinion on the bill favors it.

7. It is an exercise of power specially granted to and previously exercised by Congress and removes a manifestly unjust discrimination against American sail vessels in the coasting trade.

8. Steamers and sail vessels are on a perfect equality as to pilotage in the foreign trade. Why should sail be discriminated against in the coasting trade, hampering traffic between the States?

9. The total amount of these unnecessary pilot taxes collected since Congress relieved steamboats of this burden is greater than the present value of the entire Atlantic sail fleet to-day.

10. Ten years ago we had 35 per cent more sail tonnage in this trade along the Atlantic coast than we have now, while during that same period the same class of shipping on the Pacific coast, where there are no compulsory charges, has increased 100 per cent.

11. Steamboat corporations that make through rates on freight with Southern railroads have always opposed this bill, because the coasting sail vessels, if they were relieved of these heavy pilot charges, which often amount to more than the net earnings of a voyage, would compel these steamers to reduce their present freight rates.

12. If it be said that State pilots are necessary for these coasting sailing vessels, then the abolishment of this compulsory feature will not affect the income of the pilots, for they will be employed just the same, and under this proposed and also existing law they must be paid the full regular fees. But if it be said that the abolishment of this compulsory feature of the law will impair or destroy their pilot system, it is a complete admission that these State pilots are not required by these coasting sail vessels, because if they were they would be employed, and if not needed or employed, why should they be paid?

13. The pilots themselves state that they will relieve the coasting sail vessels of these burdens as soon as the fees from vessels in the foreign trade are large enough to satisfy them, a clear recognition of the fact that these compulsory pilot charges are levied not for the protection of the vessels so charged, but for the pilots.

14. In ten southern districts, viz, Norfolk and Newport News, Va.; Charleston, S. C.; Savannah, Ga.; Key West, Fla.; Pensacola, Fla.; Mobile, Ala.; Mississippi, New Orleans, and Galveston, Tex., the net tonnage of vessels entering and clearing in the foreign trade was as follows:

1874	2,195,418
1884	3,363,643
1894	5,700,382
1904	9,884,008

The percentage of increase from 1874 to 1904 in these ten southern ports was 350 per cent, while the increase at all other seaports of the United States was 115 per cent. The expenditures by the Government for improvements of harbors and approaches at the above-named ten ports amounts to $39,431,979.59.

15. The entrances and clearances of tonnage engaged in the foreign trade alone at those ten ports above named is now much larger than was the tonnage of vessels engaged in the foreign trade, together with the coastwise sailing vessels, there in 1894, is twice as great as was that combined tonnage in 1884 and three times as great as was that combined tonnage in 1874—and yet the pilot system existed all right during those years.

16. More than 80 per cent of the ports of the United States have no compulsory pilotage in the coastwise trade, and more than 75 per cent of these ports have far less foreign business than these Southern ports, yet there is no lack of pilots when required.

17. If a general system of pilotage were required it is obviously unjust to compel the class of carriers which do not require it to maintain it, while their competitors go free; and it is manifest that any unnecessary charge on transportation is a burden which affects producers and consumers alike and ought not to exist however much it may be favored by men who desire unearned incomes.

18. In view of the fact that the Federal Government has appropriated and expended such enormous sums to improve these southern harbors, making them ample in size, channels sufficient in width, and deep enough to float all classes and sizes of vessels that enter and clear at these ports, it is evident that the necessity no longer exists of compelling sailing vessels in the coastwise trade that require the least depth of water to longer submit to this unreasonable levy of pilot fees. If this fact is disputed by the opponents of this bill, then it is respectfully submitted to the Congress that authorizes these princely appropriations, is it not time to consider the unwisdom of going farther by appropriating money that seems to have fallen short of accomplishing the object sought?

19. All the shippers of the South, all the lumber dealers of the North, and great commercial bodies like chambers of commerce of Richmond, Va., Wilmington, N. C., New York, and Boston all strongly indorse this bill, which is manifestly in the interest of freer trade between the States.

20. At the hearing before the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee on January 12, 1906, Mr. Andrew Furuseth, the official representative of the International Seamen's Union and the American Federation of Labor, stated:

"It is true in our opinion that there is a discrimination against the sailing vessels. It is also true in our opinion that the passage of this bill which is now submitted would not destroy the efficiency of the pilotage system in the different ports where compulsory pilotage is necessary."

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON].

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I desire only five minutes. I have not had the good fortune to hear the discussion upon this bill nor time to give any considerable attention to the report, but I am strongly in favor of the passage of the measure. In the first place, it is not fair to have different regulations in different States with reference to the provisions under which boats engaged in interstate trade may enter.

The Congress of the United States makes appropriation for the improvement of harbors, and now in a majority of the States there is no compulsory pilotage under State authority. If it is a good thing to have such regulations as exist in Virginia and South Carolina it is a good thing in every State of the Union; it is a good thing not only on the Atlantic and the Gulf, but on the Lakes and on the Pacific. Now, let us see what is the logical result of the present system. By day or by night, in stormy weather or in fair weather, in channels which are broad and ample, as well as in those which are narrow and tortuous, there is in those States a law that a boat to enter the harbor must have a pilot, and must pay him. Why, to reduce it to one sentence, pilotage must be paid whether the service rendered is necessary or not, whether any service at all is rendered. Take the leading port of the South in point of tonnage, which is Norfolk. I am informed that for years a pilot has not even gone upon a sailing vessel entering that harbor, and yet in the last year $60,000 was paid to pilots in that harbor—for what? For tribute. What is it except a levy upon commerce, an unfair discrimination against sailing vessels, an unfair collection under the authority of law by those who hold a monopoly in the harbor. Now, I am not going to argue here that we should leave in all cases to the owners of vessels the question of having a pilot or not having a pilot. There may be harbors where that may be required. But that could be worked out under national regulation by those who will act impartially for the whole country. The absurdity under the present system is the one to which I have called attention, that whether needed or not, in a broad, ample harbor or in an inferior one, the same regulation is enforced, and I submit that that is entirely unjust and unfair.

I yield back the balance of my time to the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the Chair announce what time remains to the respective sides?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Maine has thirty-eight minutes remaining and the gentleman from Kentucky has twenty-nine minutes remaining.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I will yield five minutes, Mr. Speaker, to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE].

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I investigated this subject pretty carefully ten years ago. I was of the opinion then, and strongly, that this outrage upon commerce ought to be abolished, and from what I have gathered from the report of the committee—and I have had very little time to examine it—I find that the abuses which existed then have been intensified as the years have proceeded. Gentlemen say, Why not leave this whole question to the States? That it is a proper matter for the States. Why do the States improve the harbors? Do they open channels and keep them open? Do they provide light-houses? Do they provide safe entrances to these harbors? It would be just as good an argument to say it should be left to the States to maintain these harbors as to say it should be left to the States to require that a pilot should be employed whether he is of any service or not. It has been the theory of this Government from the adoption of the Constitution that there should be no taxes imposed upon commerce between the States, as in the case mentioned just now by the gentleman from Ohio of the port of Norfolk, where they charge $60,000 a year—a levy pure and simple—upon commerce coming into that port from other ports of the Union. It is simply and is nothing else than a tax upon commerce between the States. No service is performed, nothing is done. The vessel owner pilots his vessel into the harbor, the captain of the sailing vessel sails his vessel into the harbor, but still this outrageous charge is made. Then discriminations are made in the same port; discrimination is made against the vessels coming from another State and in favor of vessels coming from a foreign country, from New Brunswick, for instance, as appears in evidence before the committee. Shall we permit this thing to go on? The Constitution authorized Congress to take charge of this matter completely, and in the act of Congress giving it to the States we reserved the right to regulate it ourselves. Now, as years have gone by it clearly appears that we should regulate it, that these charges may be uniform, that these regulations may be uniform, that there shall be no discriminations, that when a port is made so easy of access that there is no more difficulty of taking a vessel in than there is of steering a carriage up through Pennsylvania avenue there should be no tax, no levy upon vessels entering such a port.

It is not a matter simply for the State and the commerce coming into the State. It is an interstate matter. All of the States are interested. The port from which the vessels sail is more interested even than the port into which the vessel comes. Why, then, should Congress follow simply in the lead of these few men who are getting these large fees from year to year, oftentimes for services never rendered? Why not look out for the greatest good to all of the people of the United States? The time that has passed since I first studied this question has only strengthened my conviction that it is the duty of Congress to remove these barriers from commerce by passing this bill.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time. How much have I left now?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD] has thirty-four minutes remaining.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WHARTON] five minutes.

Mr. WHARTON. Mr. Speaker, I come from a district which does not hold human life cheap, and I believe that all protection and safeguards possible which can be given to those wayfarers on the high seas, even though it cost a little money, should be given, and I believe that the people who are interested in the passage or defeat of this bill are the people who own ships and the pilots who are guiding the ships into the harbors of these ports. I believe that the man who takes his life in his hands and is compelled to go out there on the high seas in stormy weather at the call of duty, which is always dangerous, to safely guide the ships to a haven of safety, is worthy of his hire and is entitled to some compensation. This is a matter which is of interest peculiarly to the people of one locality, and the people of one locality have decreed by their legislatures that it shall be managed in this way, and if there is any desire for a change on the part of those people, it seems to me that it can be done nicely in the same legislature that created the laws. Yet they now come to this Federal body of lawmakers and ask them to make laws governing the entrance of ships into these harbors and against the expressed will of the interested States. I believe the place to govern this matter is back there in the locality which is most interested and who have the power to repeal the law if it is unpopular. And there is only one reason to my mind why I should be turned against my honest convictions concerning this bill, and that is that the agitation against its passage is favored by that arch enemy of the principles of veracity, that arch demagogue and liar, Samuel Gompers, who willfully and maliciously misstated and falsely misrepresented my attitude and vote on the eight-hour proposition in connection with the Panama Canal last session. But I have decided not to let that interfere with my position upon this question, but to vote as my honest convictions demand and as I believe the rights and exigencies of this case demand. If anybody is interested in legislation such as proposed and desires to have this law repealed and a new one enacted, they should go back there to the legislature which created the law. I believe in the best possible protection to shipping. And the man who is a passenger on a boat at the mercy of wind and weather should be given the best protection possible, and that protection can best be given by the pilot who knows the condition of the harbor, the man who has made a lifelong study of the conditions of that particular harbor into which he has to pilot these ships. I believe that he, and not the master of the schooner, who may know nothing at all of the conditions of the harbor, should be the one to guide and pilot that boat to safety, and for that reason I will vote against this bill and in the interest of honest labor and protection to human life. I thank you. [Applause.]

Mr. MAYNARD. Mr. Speaker, the attacks that have been made upon the pilotage system by the advocates of this bill have been chiefly directed at the system of pilotage maintained at the port of Norfolk, in the State of Virginia. And I want to say that I am surprised at the ignorance I find prevalent upon the floor among the Members as to the fixing of pilot charges in the various States. I have heard it boldly asserted by the advocates of the bill in conversation upon the floor of the House that the pilots fix their own fees. I want to say, Mr. Speaker, even if this were true, the gentlemen who contend that the pilots fix their own fees when a client comes to them with a case charge for their services and fix their own fees. When they make an arrangement to deliver a lecture at Chautauqua they fix their own fee, and it would not be unjust if pilots, for the service they render, did fix their own charge, which would be just and adequate. But I want to correct the impression that seems to prevail here that this is true. The pilots of Virginia and the pilots of the other southern ports are not a band of highwaymen upon the high seas holding up the commerce at the point of a gun, demanding unlawful tribute for the services they perform.

I have here the Code of Virginia, which fixes the rate of pilotage, and in another section—section 1985—"penalty on pilots for receiving unlawful fees." It says:

> If a pilot demand or receive for any service less than the lawful fees, he shall forfeit the amount of the lawful fees, which may be recovered by any person who will claim the same, by warrant or by motion, one-half of which recovery shall be paid to the board of commissioners, and may, moreover, be suspended by said board not exceeding six months. If any pilot demand and receive greater fees than are allowed by law, he shall forfeit to the master or owner double the amount of the fees paid to him in any such case, to be recovered in the same manner.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that that would dispose of the rumors that have been circulated on the floor of this House that the pilots are a band of highwaymen, holding up commerce and demanding at the point of a pistol a tribute on commerce which is unjust.

I want to say, Mr. Speaker, there have been charges made in private conversation, and openly in speeches upon this floor, that the pilots of the ports of Norfolk and Portsmouth get large and extortionate fees for the service they perform for commerce—that they receive salaries aggregating anywhere, as was said by one Member, from $5,000 to $10,000 a year. It is easy to charge anything. Mere assertion is not proof, and if there is any man who advocates the passage of this bill on that ground, let him produce the proof as to what the pilots of Norfolk do receive. They receive nothing like this amount.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Will the gentleman say how much they do receive? We tried to find out in our committee, but the pilots have been very cautious to keep it to themselves.

Mr. MAYNARD. I am coming to that. It does seem to me that the advocates of this bill should have waited until they found out what these pilots in Norfolk did receive before they charge that they receive sums of between five and ten thousand dollars. I do not believe that the pilots have received anything like that sum. I do not believe they receive a sum that would amount to more than $300 a month.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. The gentleman says that he does not believe. Has he got any information? Now, that is just exactly where they have been on this proposition; everybody said they did not believe it. Now, do you know what it is?

Mr. MAYNARD. I said I do not.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Oh, I see.

Mr. MAYNARD. But I heard the charge on the floor.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Now, I will tell you what Congressman WACHTER, from Maryland, said they received——

Mr. MAYNARD. I have not much time.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I beg your pardon. I was informed by Mr. WACHTER last year they did receive $9,000. Now, that comes nearer to being information than anything you have. That is all the information we have.

Mr. MAYNARD. You say that Congressman WACHTER told you that they received that amount?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Congressman WACHTER said that he was told that they received $9,000 a year.

Mr. MAYNARD. Did he say that he knew that as a fact or as a rumor heard in the lobby?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. He gave that as some information he had received in Baltimore. I do not believe that it originated with him.

Mr. MAYNARD. Any statement that Congressman WACHTER would make on his own knowledge I am ready to believe; and I am prepared to believe now—and I am sorry Congressman WACHTER is not present so that he could answer here—I am prepared to believe that if he were here he would tell this House that that was his belief, based on the rumors heard around the lobby and from reports of rumors going around the lobby about Virginia pilots getting that, and not that it was a matter that he knows of his own knowledge.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Well, I stated that the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. WACHTER] had said that he got his information in Baltimore, and not around the lobby. What disposition will you make of that part of it?

Mr. MAYNARD. I come from the home of the Virginia pilots, and I have not been able, I state frankly, to say just what they have received, but probably the people of Baltimore know more about that than the people of Norfolk. But I do not believe they know it; I do not believe they get anywhere near that sum. I do not believe what they do get will average $300 a month.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SPARKMAN].

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, this is a measure that ought not to pass this House. Its avowed purpose is to destroy compulsory pilotage on coastwise sailing vessels. Its effect will be, if it becomes a law, to destroy the splendid pilot systems at many and to seriously cripple them at other ports in all the Gulf and the Atlantic ports south of Norfolk, Va.

Now, I had supposed it would not be necessary for anyone at this late day to stand upon this floor and urge the importance to commerce of the pilot systems of the South or anywhere else in the country; but I understood the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] to say a little while ago (and, if true, that would really be the only ground upon which this legislation could be justified) that there was no further use whatever for the pilot anywhere in the country. The other gentleman from Ohio, however, admitted that there was use for them, perhaps, in some of the ports, without mentioning the ports so in need of them.

Now, Mr. Speaker, gentlemen ought to know that notwithstanding the various ports throughout the country have been, many of them, very greatly improved by deepening and widening their channels, yet pari passu with the improvement of those harbors the vessels entering them have also been increased in tonnage and draft, rendering the difficulties of navigation, so far as these larger vessels are concerned, as great as before the improvements were made, so that there is as great necessity for pilots in the navigation of those harbors as at any time in their commercial history. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD], however, would not, perhaps, seek to justify his action upon any such grounds.

He will probably, as heretofore, base it upon the ground that the foreign shipping would be sufficient in these South Atlantic and Gulf ports to keep up the pilot systems there. I want to say to you that in my judgment that will not be the case, that while in two or three of the ports to be affected by this bill these pilot systems can perhaps be maintained by foreign shipping, Wilmington being one of them, in all the others they will either be destroyed absolutely or seriously crippled, as the pilotage on foreign shipping alone will not be sufficient to sustain them.

Now, why was the law changed so far as steamboats were concerned, as it was in 1871? The reason was that the steamboat does not need the use of a pilot as much as a sailing vessel. Another reason was that it costs more to run and operate a steamboat, seven or eight times as much, than it does to operate a sailing vessel, thus giving, it was no doubt thought, the sailing vessel a great advantage of the steamboat, and the idea no doubt was to place them more nearly upon an equality by exempting coastwise steam vessels from compulsory pilotage. No one, perhaps, dreamed that the passage of that law would discriminate against sail vessels, and in my judgment there was none, nor is there any now. In my opinion the removal of compulsory pilotage from steam vessels did not begin to equalize the advantages the sailing vessel had and still has over the vessel propelled by steam.

I had occasion to submit some remarks upon the floor of this House last session on this bill and to deal at some length with this feature. The contention was then being made as now that the sailing vessel running into these southern waters was earning nothing, and could not be made to pay, and yet I called attention to a long list of sailing vessels from New England trading in these southern ports which the owners claimed were coining money and paying handsome dividends.

Now, Mr. Speaker, a remark was made by some gentleman a while ago about exorbitant charges in a few individual instances. I also either heard or saw the statement in the testimony taken at the hearings on this bill that $140 was charged one vessel for pilotage, and that after paying that charge and other charges it had only some $300 left to distribute among the owners. But when I looked further I found that the other charges in addition to the pilot charges amounted to $1,700. And yet the gentleman testifying, the owner of the vessel, seemed to think his whole trouble came from the pilot charges of about $140, as I now remember.

Now, so far as the local discrimination is concerned, the laws of the States fix the pilot charges, either directly by saying what they shall be, as in Florida, for instance, or indirectly through boards of pilot commissioners authorized by State laws to do that very thing; and, sir, I know of no State law, nor has any been pointed out, which makes or authorizes such discriminations. If, therefore, there has been any discrimination, it has been made by individual pilots here and there; and to say that this pilot system, which a gentleman now on the other side in a former Congress stated was the finest in the world, should be destroyed because, forsooth, some individual has violated the laws of his State is folly. As well might we condemn the whole penal code because a few evil-minded persons now and then should violate some of its provisions. I said to the gentleman who is pressing the bill not later than day before yesterday that if he would exhibit one-tenth of the energy he has put forth in favor of this bill in having the parties violating State pilotage laws, if such there be, prosecuted in the States where such discriminations are made, he would have no cause for complaint. But he seems to prefer to come here.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I wish to refer to just one other matter and I think I am done. Something was said about the States of Georgia and Virginia having license laws. It ill becomes the gentlemen who favor this bill to charge that up against the opponents of the measure, because it was done in the interest of the shipping of those ports. The legislatures of those States said to the shipowners: "You think you can occasionally pilot your vessels into the ports of this State, and that you may not at all times need a State pilot. Very well. But if you are to have a pilot ready when you do need him, he must be paid in some way. So if you will pay a certain amount toward keeping up the system, we will permit your vessel to come in without paying for a pilot, except when you avail yourself of his services." But this bill does nothing of that kind, and if you pass this measure, I want to say to you that when the storm comes and ships are in peril the pilot will not be there to serve them.

Let me say again, Mr. Speaker, that there is little in the matter of the harbor improvements to justify the passage of this bill. Pilots are needed, nevertheless. Take my own port, for instance, that of Tampa, where much improvement has been made, and there is not a foot of the way from the entrance of that harbor up to the dock at either Port Tampa or Tampa, a distance of 30 or 35 miles, where a ship can pass without a pilot. The channel is narrow at many places, requiring a skillful pilot all the while to take the ship to the dock and out to sea again. Then, again, at many of the ports and harbors the bars are constantly shifting, requiring soundings daily to determine the condition of the channel. [Applause.] I now yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. LACEY. Will the gentleman from Florida answer one question before he sits down?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. LACEY. I would like to ask the gentleman why is it that these gentlemen living in the localities where the pilotage burden is are opposed to taking it off? Does it not follow that if it is cast on your commerce the gentlemen residing in that locality are more interested in taking it off than the people living outside or up in Maine?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Exactly, and when the time comes when it can be taken off with safety to the commerce it will certainly be done, just as it has been done by the States north of the Potomac and by North Carolina in the case of Wilmington.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I shall not burden the House with any very lengthy speech in conclusion; but, like any debate of any length, there is a tendency to get away from the real issue, and especialy when it is in skillful hands, and I must compliment my friends of the opposition on the way that they have thrown their strength upon individual instances of wrongdoing without addressing themselves to the real question at issue.

There is, perhaps, no man in this House who receives, or more deservedly receives, consideration than the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON], the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. So I was glad to hear him say in his opening remarks that he had not looked into this matter, but that he simply spoke his impressions, because I knew what was about to follow did not properly represent the situation, and that if he had made a more complete study he himself would have seen it. It is not a case of substituting a national system for a State system. It is a case of abolishing all system in certain places or localities. The gentleman commends the bill to the House on the ground that there are to be different regulations in different places.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Will the gentleman allow me an interruption?

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. The gentleman would not misrepresent my position?

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly not.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. What I meant and thought that I so expressed myself was that if it was necessary to have regulation in ports, they should be national regulations, but that ordinarily it was safe to leave that to the individual judgment of the owner of the boat.

Mr. SHERLEY. I answer the gentleman by saying that when he brings in a bill providing for national regulation we will meet that issue, but it is premature now. The present bill does not undertake to substitute any system. It does permit the licensing of pilots and giving them permission to carry ships into all ports without employing special pilots. Does the gentleman believe for an instant that the men at the head of the Navigation Bureau have themselves the knowledge to determine by examination whether any particular pilot, who may be a very good pilot on the high seas, has the peculiar local knowledge necessary to carry a ship into a tortuous channel?

Now, the fact is that in the State whence this bill originates and where its chief champion lives they have pilots, because they know, as every man of sense must know, that you are bound to have pilots under certain conditions. They do not need to tax the coastwise trade in order to support their pilots and in order to maintain a system, because they have sufficient revenue growing out of the trade with foreign countries. Yet the South, which is not able to maintain by tax upon foreign commerce only a pilotage system, is to be denied the opportunity and the means of maintaining that system. So I say to the House that the question you are to vote upon is not whether you want a system of national pilotage; it is whether you want in the South any pilotage or not. And I have yet to see the man who is willing to stand up and say that pilotage should be done away with. Oh, a great fuss is made about individual abuses. I think they ought to be corrected.

I believe that if some of the gentlemen who have been so active in lobbying for this bill here would turn their energies to some of the State legislatures they would find, if the abuses they speak of exist, that they would be remedied. But are you going to punish those States, are you going to punish those communities where they have a proper system of pilotage because somebody else does not happen to have a good one and because the law is violated? If violation of the law is justification of a change of law, we will have to write our entire statute law over again. The appeal is simply made on behalf of a certain class of shipowners. The sailing-vessel owners complain of a discrimination. If I were the owner of a sailing vessel I would come to Congress asking a repeal of the law that exempted the steam vessel from pilotage charge rather than undertake to be exempted myself.

To-day there are no people who are better protected than the sailing-vessel owners. They have no competition practically by the steam vessels, because the two engage in carrying different kinds of freight, one carrying fast freight where certainty of speedy delivery is necessary, the other carrying slow freight, where it is not necessary; and any man knows, and the testimony will show, that the sailing vessels can more than hold their own. They can carry more cheaply than the steam vessels, and the fact that they have been able to bring such powerful influences to their aid, to get so many large lumber people back of them, is evidence of their wonderful prosperity.

But the argument is made that because there is a license system—and, by the way, the license system applies only in certain of the States and not all—therefore you must abolish pilotage. I do not believe in the license system, but how did it come about? These very men who to-day are using it as an argument are the men who got it introduced. They said: "Our pilots have the particular knowledge necessary, and we are willing to take the risk, and if you will let us pay a license it will be satisfactory." Now, one of the reasons for taxing the coastwise trade at all is because the foreign trade is not sufficient to pay for the support of the pilots and pilotage system, and so these States, unwisely, I think, but still at the instance of the very men who are advocating this bill, agreed to permit licensing some of them and thus help to maintain the pilotage system. This condition would then arise, that while in fair weather and under ordinary circumstances by paying a license they could come in without harm, yet the paying of that license, together with other pilotage charges enabled a pilotage system to be kept up, so that in fair season and foul pilots were always there on the bar ready to take these vessels in, and when storm came and stress of weather that made pilots necessary the licensed ships had the advantage of having a pilot there.

Why, the logic of the gentleman's argument would go to the abolition of every system of fire protection in the land; that because a man did not have a fire every day and did not have need of a fire engine and its company, therefore he should not be taxed. He is taxed because it is necessary for them always to be ready, day and night. And so the shipping entering into a port is taxed because it is necessary in order to maintain a pilotage that may be ready day and night, fair weather or foul. In closing this debate I hope the Members of the House will bear in mind the real issue. I know the distinguished gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD]; I know the wonderful advantage he has in a closing argument. I know how enthusiastic he is about this particular bill. It has been brought close home to him. I do not object to that; but during his ingenious argument I wish you to bear in mind that you are not substituting one system for another; you are abolishing a system.

Bear in mind that you are denying to the Southern States what was given to Maine. As long as Maine was struggling, as long as her foreign commerce did not yield enough to maintain a pilotage system, she taxed the coastwise trade, and so did all the other Northern States; but when in the fullness of their prosperity they reached a point where they did not have to do it they abolished it. And why? Out of magnanimity? No; they abolished it because every community and every section that is intelligent wants to do away as rapidly as it can with any impediment upon trade or freedom of trade. The South is anxious to get away from any hindrance and will do it when she can, but she asks you to-day not to hold her up and say because of an abuse here or an abuse there, that can be corrected by the States in which they exist, that you are going to deprive her of the only means she has got for the continuance of a pilotage system necessary for the preservation of life and property. [Applause.]

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Speaker, in asking the attention of the House during the time, now limited, for the close of the debate, I would be very glad indeed if I could have careful attention, because I desire to call attention to what seems to me to be the salient and important considerations involved in the determination of this matter. From Old Point Comfort to the Rio Grande is the only locality in the United States where American citizens are required to pay for service that is not needed or rendered. From Old Point Comfort north to Eastport, Me., and from British Columbia to Mexico on the Pacific coast there is free pilotage, and no sailing vessel, coastwise, and no coastwise steam vessel in that territory is required to pay compensation for any service that is not rendered. This bill, Mr. Speaker, proposes to place the territory between Old Point Comfort and the Rio Grande simply upon a precise level, so far as the rights of sailing vessels are concerned, with the balance of the United States. In 1871 the American Congress relieved the steam coastwise tonnage from the payment of compulsory pilotage in the territory in the South to which I have referred, and from that time until now the steam coastwise tonnage has had that advantage and handicap over the sailing coastwise tonnage in that territory. If this bill passes it will leave the sailing tonnage in that territory upon an equality with steam tonnage. It will place the individuals owning the sail fleet on a par with the corporations owning the steam fleet.

Now, bearing upon the question of protection to life and property—and I will call attention to that in detail a little later—I ask you to note that life and property, from Old Point Comfort to Eastport, Me., the most dangerous part of all the Atlantic coast and more dangerous than the Pacific or Southern coast, for a great many years have been adequately protected under a system of free pilotage. No gentleman has been heard yet to rise in his place and say that in that territory of free pilotage, where a vessel takes a pilot when she needs one—and when she needs one takes one and pays for it—that in that territory, from Old Point Comfort to Eastport, or from British Columbia to Mexico, upon the Pacific coast, there has been any danger involved in free pilotage to life, person, or property. There has not been such a suggestion, and if it had been made it would not be borne out by the facts. If free pilotage is adequate in these sections for the protection of life and property, why would it not be in this territory in question, especially as I shall show that there is plenty of foreign tonnage to maintain all pilotage that is necessary?

Now, if this bill passes, it will simply prohibit the imposition of compulsory pilotage upon the sailing fleet within this territory. It also further provides, bearing upon the question of protection to life and property, for a pilot to be selected and examined and licensed by an inspection board, to be carried on every sailing coastwise vessel that gets the exemption from compulsory pilotage, so that the bill itself undertakes to protect and does protect the persons and the property that may be upon the sailing coastwise fleet by providing for their use a proper pilot properly licensed. The suggestion that this bill would impair the protection of persons is, moreover, obviously absurd in view of the fact that the sail fleet does not carry passengers and that the steam coastwise fleet, which is not required to take these pilots, carries all the passengers that are carried by the coastwise fleet.

Now, I should say just a word for the purpose of removing more or less misunderstanding that perhaps may have arisen in connection with this proposed legislation. A great many people have had the opinion that this bill in some way affected the pilotage system outside of this particular territory. It has been suggested that it was an effort to assume national control of the whole pilotage system of the United States. By reason of the fact that another bill has been pending before the committee that undertook to prohibit the employment of pilots under certain circumstances upon vessels, it has been suggested that this bill was subject to that criticism, and by reason of that misunderstanding the pilots' associations in various parts of the country have seen fit to register their opposition to the legislation, not understanding that this bill, if it becomes a law, would not have the slightest effect upon the pilotage system in any other part of the United States. In San Francisco, for instance, it would have no effect whatever. Pilots would continue to operate in San Francisco hereafter precisely as now. They have free pilotage there for the coastwise trade. It would continue to be free, and the passage of this legislation would not affect in any way or in any degree the relation the pilots elsewhere sustain to the merchant marine. It is true that there are pilots in other sections of the country. It is also true—and I am glad to call the attention of the gentleman from Kentucky to the fact—that there are pilots under the free system and that they have been properly and adequately maintained under the free system and have properly and adequately protected life, person, and property.

Now, a little bit later I am going to contrast this section of the country we have now under discussion with the balance of the Atlantic coast bearing upon this question of the efficiency of the respective systems.

TWO NATIONAL ADMINISTRATIONS SUPPORT THIS BILL.

Before I reach that, however, let me say that there is a trifle of a misapprehension or misunderstanding as to the interests that are in favor of this legislation. Let me remark that there are other people besides the "gentleman from Maine" and the Representatives from Maine and vessel owners in the New England States or in New York, and I may say right here, by way of passing, that Mr. Pendleton, who has been alluded to once in a while in the debate, does not happen to be a citizen of Maine, but resides in New York, and all the vessels which he is interested in are largely located there and are operated from there. But let me call your attention to the fact that while my friend from South Carolina suggests that there is no Administration influence behind this legislation, that there was nobody asking for this legislation, in substance, except, perhaps, "the gentleman from Maine;" let me call his attention to the fact that in 1895 the Commissioner of Navigation, who did not then and does not now reside in the State of Maine, and who was not then and is not now controlled by people in the State of Maine, said in his report:

> Pilotage is one of the heaviest charges upon navigation, and to exempt one description of American vessels in the coasting trade from that charge while imposing it upon another description of American vessels in the same trade comes close to ruling the sailing vessels out of the business and bestowing it upon steam vessels exclusively.

In 1896 he said further, urging the enactment of the bill:

> Its enactment by Congress is almost indispensable to the existence of our sailing fleet on the Atlantic coast in the coastwise trade, virtually the only trade open to it under present conditions.

I call the attention of my friends on the other side to the fact that this was a report that came from a Democratic Administration.

Mr. SHERLEY. Would not the gentleman get the equality that he desires by repealing the law that excludes steam vessels engaged in the coastwise trade from pilotage charges, and then more vessels being taxed the pilotage charge as to all of them could be reduced?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Certainly uniformity could be reached by putting the steam vessels back under the compulsory pilotage system. That would give uniformity, but we have not any bill pending for that purpose. Nothing of the kind is seriously suggested, and I will show the gentleman in a few minutes that there is not any occasion, either from an economic or a revenue point of view, for having any vessels subject to compulsory pilotage except possibly those engaged in the foreign trade. His suggestion, however, admits the injustice of the discrimination.

Let me go a little bit further, so far as the Commissioner of Navigation is concerned. In 1899 he said:

> It is contended that Congress is a proper tribunal to which to appeal for the correction of this unfair discrimination.

In 1900 he repeated his declaration of 1899. In 1902 his declaration was substantially the same. In 1903 he said:

> The abolition of the discrimination in pilotage charges against sail vessels in the coasting trade is again earnestly recommended as an immediate and practical method of fostering American sail tonnage.

In 1904 he said:

> The discrimination is severely felt, and it has undoubtedly contributed to retard American sail tonnage.

I ask the House to note that the Commissioner of Navigation, who has entire charge of this great interest and is supposed to be acting from a disinterested and independent standpoint, from the year 1895 up to the year 1905, and repeated in 1906, declared over and over again that this compulsory pilotage is an unjust discrimination against the sail coastwise fleet.

In answer to a letter from Senator FRYE, asking for the opinion of the Department of Commerce and Labor upon this legislation, Secretary Metcalf, of the Department of Commerce and Labor, on January 3, 1906, said:

> While seagoing American steam tonnage has practically doubled in ten years, seagoing American tonnage under sail has remained virtually stationary.
> Congress has spent in recent years many millions of dollars in harbor improvements, which should have lessened the need of pilots and made navigation easier.
> All tonnage entering and clearing the United States in foreign trade is subject to pilotage charges. Such tonnage has increased from 40,261,353 tons in 1894 to 59,967,985 tons in 1904. This increase of nearly 50 per cent in ten years should suffice, under all the conditions, to maintain the pilotage system at its full efficiency.
> I have the honor to submit that the passage of S. 30 will be the most effective measure of any now before Congress for the maintenance of the American seagoing fleet under sail, and relieve it from a discrimination which each year grows more onerous.

So that instead of this bill being without the support of the Administration, as some gentlemen, as the result of inadequate investigation, have asserted, it has been and is now vigorously supported by the present Administration and had the support of the preceding Democratic Administration, because it "is almost indispensable to the existence of our sailing fleet on the Atlantic coast in the coastwise trade."

All this does not, of course, foreclose the proposition, nor does the fact necessarily that hundreds of men engaged in the lumber trade and in other business industries from Texas to Virginia, and boards of trade and chambers of commerce and marine insurance societies in various sections of the country all favor and support this legislation and urge it as legislation needed in the interest of the American sail coastwise fleet. It does show a widespread demand for it that is in no sense confined to any particular locality.

ABSURDITY OF DISCRIMINATION AGAINST SAIL VESSELS.

The discrimination in favor of the steam coastwise fleet, owned and manned by powerful corporations, which now exists against the sail coastwise fleet, owned almost exclusively by individuals—a single vessel being owned in fractions as small as one one hundred and twenty-eighth or one two hundred and fifty-sixth—is not only grievously burdensome, but absurdly grotesque in its practical operation.

Under the law as it stands to-day, the master of a steam coastwise vessel drawing 20 feet of water, worth $500,000, with a cargo worth from $100,000 to $300,000, with 250 passengers, consisting of men, women, and children, can enter and clear from any port in the South without taking a pilot, the master navigating his own vessel. If the same master the next day takes charge of a sailing vessel drawing 12 feet of water, with no passengers, the vessel being worth from $10,000 to $12,000, with no cargo, with a crew of seven or eight men, and navigating his own vessel, as in the case of the steamer, undertakes to enter any one of the same ports the owners are obliged to pay for the services of a pilot, whether he is used or not, notwithstanding he may have been, as in nine cases out of ten he would be towed out and in by a tug on which there are two United States pilots, belonging and operating daily in that particular harbor.

FOREIGN COMMERCE AMPLE TO SUSTAIN PILOT SYSTEM IN THE SOUTH.

The growth of our commerce in the southern ports demonstrates that there is ample business in that section now without levying this tribute upon the sail fleet for the purpose of maintaining any necessary system of pilotage; and I beg to say, before I reach a discussion of that proposition, that the proposition proceeds upon the hypothesis that in order that they may have in these ports an adequate system of pilotage, so that the foreign trade can be piloted out and in, it is necessary to levy this tribute upon the sail fleet that the benefit may be derived therefrom by the ocean or foreign going fleets. And that upon its face is an obvious and odious levying of tribute upon the sail coastwise fleet for the alleged benefit of the ocean-going fleet.

Now, let me call your attention to the fact that in 1874 the total combined entrances and clearances in the foreign trade in the ports affected by this legislation aggregated 3,120,868 tons. That is the foreign trade. Of the coastwise trade I have not been able to get the statistics, as they are not kept; but the coastwise trade probably was about the same.

We have to-day in these same ports for the same foreign trade 9,894,608 tons. Now, then, if in 1874, 3,000,000 tons of foreign trade and perhaps 3,000,000 tons of domestic trade—and in assuming 3,000,000 tons as domestic trade I make a very large and favorable assumption for the other side of this discussion—if in 1874, with 3,000,000 tons of foreign trade and 3,000,000 tons of domestic trade, the revenue to sustain these pilots was adequate, and nobody has contended up to date that there has not been an adequate revenue for the maintenance of the pilotage system of that section—if that were true in 1874, when in 1904 we have 9,894,000 tons of foreign trade (more than 3,000,000 tons in excess of the foreign and domestic trade in 1874), how is it, I inquire, that they have not the foreign trade that can adequately sustain every pilotage system necessary in that section, when the amount of tonnage is 50 per cent greater now than the aggregate foreign and domestic tonnage in 1874?

A detailed statement of this growth is as follows:

It has been frequently asserted that when it appeared that the foreign commerce was sufficient to take care of the pilotage system the States would repeal the compulsory legislation and cease compelling the payment of tribute from the coastwise fleet for that purpose. Mr. O'Brien, in testifying before the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee in 1903, said that the States will do it—that is, remove the compulsory pilotage—whenever the foreign commerce of any port is sufficient to keep up a first-class pilotage system for the port. The figures show that in 1904 that condition of things existed and that there was ample foreign commerce for that purpose, and upon their own statement the States should have repealed compulsory pilotage. Notwithstanding that fact—the existence of this amply sufficient business—not the slightest change, so far as appears here, has been made in the pilotage system in any Southern State in the last fifteen years, except in the port of Wilmington, N. C.

PILOTAGE CHARGES EXCESSIVE.

It is worthy of notice also that the pilotage charges in these ports, although they have had millions of dollars spent upon them for their improvement, are very much in excess of the nearby foreign ports, which are practically unimproved. A few specific instances will suffice to illustrate this fact. In the fall of 1905 the schooner S. M. Bird paid $128 for pilotage fees at Gulfport, Miss. She cleared from Gulfport for Habana on that same trip, and her pilotage fees in and out of Habana were only $32.

The schooner Harold C. Beecher cleared from Pascagoula in May, 1905, and paid pilotage in and out of Pascagoula amounting to $96. She cleared for Kingston, Jamaica, on the same trip, paying pilotage in and out of Kingston Harbor to the amount of $30. These are typical practical illustrations of the excessive charges made under this pilotage system.

With this showing, and these are the facts, because these facts are received from the Commissioner of Navigation, and the figures are given in his reports and are his statistics—if these are the facts, upon what ground can it be contended that they need the additional support of the sailing coastwise fleet, that does not use their pilots, and have this tribute levied upon them as an excuse to enable them to maintain their system, which is amply able to sustain itself for all legitimate purposes?

Now, let me go a little bit further. In 1904 the amount of coastwise sailing tonnage at the port of New Orleans was only 1,794 tons; foreign, 3,065,909 tons. In Mobile the coastwise tonnage was only 8,774, and the foreign tonnage was 1,182,852 tons. At Key West the coastwise was only 14,450, and the foreign tonnage 542,835 tons. Pensacola, 1,130,385 foreign tons and only 20,202 coastwise sailing tons. In Galveston 1,786.733 foreign tons, and coastwise only 37,890 tons. With this added to the facts to which I have called your attention, what foundation is there to sustain the idea that in any justice they can still call upon the sailing coastwise fleet to pay for pilots, levying a tribute upon them and making them pay for services not rendered and not needed when there is ample foreign tonnage to pay for it? These facts show that this tribute is not necessary to maintain their pilotage system.

IMPROVEMENT OF HARBORS RENDERS COMPULSORY PILOTAGE UNNECESSARY.

There is very much less necessity now than heretofore for any system of pilotage, compulsory or otherwise, by reason of the fact that during the last fifteen or twenty years the money of the Government has been expended in a prodigal degree, aggregating about thirty-nine millions of money, for the express purpose of improving the ten important harbors on the southern coast.

The experience of Commander Winslow on the cruiser Charleston in making and leaving the harbor of Charleston in January, 1906, without the aid of a pilot either going in or out, and navigating entirely from information obtained by the Government charts, is a conclusive demonstration of the fact that that harbor, at least—and we can safely assume that the others are in as good a condition—is perfectly feasible for navigation by any craft under the charge of a competent navigator, as are all the sail coastwise vessels. His letter is as follows:

[From a letter dated Hampton Roads, Virginia, January 21, 1906.]

No difficulty was experienced in entering or leaving the harbor of Charleston. The ship entered the harbor at high water and left at very near low water, the flood tide just commencing to make. It was dark before reaching the Cumming Point range when leaving the harbor; so the passage through part of the channel within the jetties and over the bar was made in darkness and with no moonlight.

The ship was drawing a little more than 24 feet of water on our arrival and a little less on our departure. There was no pilot on board while entering or leaving the port, and the ship was navigated entirely on information obtained from the Government charts. There was no indication while passing through the jetties and over the bar, either by stirring up mud or sluggishness in steering, that the vessel was in shoal water.

A careful examination of the chart convinces me that the harbor of Charleston is ample for the maintenance of a large commerce.

At the present time I can see no reason why vessels should not load to a draft of 30 feet and pass out of the harbor with safety.

Believe me to be, very truly, yours,

C. McR. WINSLOW,
Commander, U. S. Navy, Commanding Cruiser Charleston.

If the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEGARE], who intimated that he was very familiar with the practical operations, so far as pilots were concerned, in the harbor of Charleston and its approaches, is familiar with that channel and the facts connected therewith during the last few years, he would know that there never has been any shifting of the channel since the making of the Government chart that was used by Captain Winslow when he navigated a United States vessel into and out of that harbor without the aid of a pilot; and if the chart was safe and reliable for Captain Winslow's use, with a ship drawing 24 feet, it does not require a very vigorous argument to establish the fact that it is equally safe and reliable for the master of a sail coastwise vessel drawing from 10 to 20 feet.

I may say further in this connection, in answer to the suggestion before the committee that the reason why the southern harbors were difficult of navigation, and therefore a compulsory pilotage system was necessary, was because they had shifting channels or movable bars, that the charts of the United States of those portions of the coast were presented, and the pilots were challenged to produce a single instance where there had been a single change in either channel or bar, as indicated upon the charts at the time they were made, a challenge which was not accepted. Not the slightest effort was made to show that there had been any change in any particular from the charts in either channel or bar, and that contention was virtually abandoned.

As a further demonstration of the complete safety of the harbor of Charleston and minimizing the probability of the occurrence of very grave dangers imagined by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEGARE] as resulting from the passage of this bill, with reference to the protecting of that port by the pilots under the existing system, the following extract, issued from the Charleston Chamber of Commerce in 1906, is illuminating and instructive:

The many deep-draft vessels that have passed safely over our bar and the presence for the first time of United States battle ships and cruisers within our harbor prove how successful this great jetty system has been, which, from an extreme depth of 18 feet at mean high water has developed a channel 600 feet wide with a depth of at least 31½ feet at mean high water.

FREE PILOTAGE MORE EFFICIENT THAN COMPULSORY.

Now, let me call your attention to another important and determining fact upon the question of the protection of life and property as between these two systems.

In 1903 the amount of foreign tonnage entering and clearing north of Old Point Comfort was—entered, number, 10,002; tonnage, 16,866,448; cleared, number, 9,273; tonnage, 15,469,034. South of Old Point Comfort on the Atlantic coast—entered, number, 1,102; tonnage, 1,229,596; cleared, number, 1,513; tonnage, 1,958,746.

Take it upon the number of vessels, 10,002 vessels north of Old Point Comfort and 1,102 south of Old Point Comfort. In other words, when there are ten vessels entering north of Old Point Comfort there is one vessel entering south of Old Point Comfort on the Atlantic coast. It is clear that the casualties ought to be in proportion to the business done. An analysis of the casualties in these localities ought to show no more than one casualty south of Old Point Comfort on the Atlantic coast to ten north of Old Point Comfort, if the protection to life and property were equally adequate in each case.

Let me read to you from a letter of the Secretary of the Treasury in response to one from me seeking information upon this precise point, the Secretary's letter being dated February 28, 1906:

Hon. CHARLES E. LITTLEFIELD,
House of Representatives.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 23d instant asking for information relative to casualties to vessels that occurred on the Atlantic coast during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903.

For convenience in making reply, the points you specify as those upon which you desire to be informed are stated in numerical order, the answer to each inquiry being given immediately below it.

The information herein furnished is derived from casualty reports rendered to this Department in compliance with sections 10, 11, and 12 of the act of June 20, 1874.

It will be noticed that the statistics which are about to be given in this letter are compiled under the express provisions of the statute, and therefore have behind them the sanction of the law.

First. The number of casualties that occurred upon the Atlantic coast for the fiscal year 1903.

Answer. One hundred and fifty-four (154).

Second. The number of casualties that occurred north of Old Point Comfort and south of Old Point Comfort for that year.

Answer. North of Old Point Comfort, one hundred and eighteen (118); south of Old Point Comfort, thirty-six (36).

That is to say, when one casualty occurred south of Old Point Comfort three only occurred north of that point. Taking into account, however, the tonnage in both sections, where one casualty occurred south, if the same degree of care was exercised in each section under compulsory pilotage as is exercised under free pilotage, there should have been ten north of that point. In other words, upon this analysis the facts show, and from them there is no escape, that there were three times as many casualties in 1903 under the compulsory pilotage system as there were in proportion under the free pilotage system obtaining north of Old Point Comfort; and if the actual facts based upon the casualties occurring in proportion to the trade in each section determine, as it seems to me they should determine, the efficiency of the two system, it demonstrates beyond controversy that the free pilotage system is three times as efficient in protecting life, person, and property as is that obtaining under the compulsory pilotage system south of Old Point Comfort. How puerile, then, on the facts is the objection to this bill on the ground that it will impair the safety of persons and property. But we have further information from this letter from the Secretary of the Treasury. The next inquiry is:

Third. The number of casualties north of Old Point Comfort and south of Old Point Comfort that were due to the lack of pilots on the vessels, giving the name of the vessel and the date of the casualty, if any.

Answer. The casualty reports do not in terms state whether pilots are or are not on board the vessels. There are inclosed, however, a copy of one casualty report which shows, in answer to question 24 in said report, that "pilots" were on board in that instance, and copies of five other reports, which show that the casualties were due to the errors of officers, indicating, perhaps, that the vessels were not in charge of pilots. These six reports are all that are on file for the year mentioned that appear to have a bearing upon the matter to which your inquiries seem to relate.

Fourth. The number of casualties, if any, north of Old Point Comfort that occurred while vessels were making harbor without a pilot, giving the name of the vessel and the date of the casualty.

Answer. Five casualties above referred to, as follows: Schooner Winifred, July 3, 1902; schooner William H. Schubert, October 21, 1902; schooner Myronus, November 17, 1902; schooner Conway, April 30, 1903, and schooner Republic, May 28, 1903.

Only one of these can with any propriety be said to come within the scope of the question asked, as is shown by an examination of the wreck reports in detail, which I have taken occasion to examine and have here present for inspection, if desired, and that is the schooner Winifred, and she was a small fishing vessel of only 60 tons burden, and the damage sustained was only $500.

The Schubert was not making a harbor, but grounded on the southern end of Prudence Island, in Narragansett Bay. The Myronus was not making a harbor, but was navigating Penobscot Bay and ran ashore on an unbuoyed ledge, known as Sprague Ledge, near Islesboro.

The Conway was an oyster boat of only 44 tons, and ran on Brandywine Shoal, in Delaware Bay.

The Republic grounded on Trundys reef at Cape Elizabeth, Maine.

So when an examination of the wreck reports is made it is seen that there was only one vessel north of Old Point Comfort that could be said, during the year 1903, to have met with any casualty when she was making a harbor without a pilot, with ten times the amount of tonnage and hazard that exists below Old Point Comfort.

The Secretary's letter continues:

Fifth. The number of casualties, if any, that occurred while the vessel was making harbor north of Old Point Comfort with a pilot, giving name of vessel and date of casualty.

Answer. None.

Sixth. The number of such casualties, if any, that occurred south of Old Point Comfort while vessels were making harbor without a pilot, giving name of vessel and date of casualty.

Answer. None.

Seventh. The number of such casualties, if any, that occurred south of Old Point Comfort while vessels were making harbor with a pilot, giving the name of the vessel and the date of the casualty in each instance.

Answer. One casualty, schooner Harold C. Beecher, May 9, 1903.

The damages in the case of the Harold C. Beecher were $10,000. These are certainly significant facts. Here is compulsory pilotage, with its much-vaunted protection to life, person, and property, with tonnage under its care, in the proportion of 1 to 10 to that under the free-pilotage system north of Old Point Comfort. There was ten times the opportunity for casualty and injury under the free-pilotage system that there was under the compulsory pilotage system, and yet but one accident, and that insignificant in character, occurred to a vessel in 1903 where free pilotage obtains. But the Harold C. Beecher, with damages of $10,000, meets with her disaster while under the protection of one of these much-vaunted pilots maintained by this compulsory system. Where is the casualty under the charge of a pilot in the free-pilotage zone? There ought to be 10 to be in proportion to the Beecher. Not one occurred.

And it is further to be noted, as bearing upon the care and efficiency of the pilots under that system, that the Harold C. Beecher was going out, instead of making a harbor, and that the dangers incident to going out are very much less than those going in. How does it happen, if this compulsory pilotage system is so much more conducive to protection and safety, that the only loss that occurred under a pilot during the year 1903 occurred under that system, when there was ten times the hazard and ten times the opportunity for dangers under the free pilotage system, but there was no loss of that character?

PILOTS' ASSOCIATION NOT LIABLE FOR NEGLIGENCE.

It may be well to mark here that while the sail coastwise fleet is compelled to receive the services of these pilots or pay for them if they are not received, if they are offered, the remedy that the owners have in case of the negligence of a pilot is at least of a very doubtful character. The newspaper clipping which follows shows that in Virginia, at least, the vessel owner who is injured by the negligence of a pilot has no remedy whatever against the pilots' association, although they levy these enormous sums as tribute on the sail coastwise fleet for the maintenance of that association. Just how far this applies to the pilots' associations throughout the whole South I am not at this moment able to state, but we do know that it applies to Virginia, which is the most vicious illustration of this graft levied under the forms of law upon the sail fleet.

PILOTS SCORE STRONG POINT—UNITED STATES SUPREME COURT SAYS THEY ARE NOT RESPONSIBLE FOR THEIR ASSOCIATES.

WASHINGTON, December 3, 1906.

The Supreme Court of the United States held to-day that the Virginia Pilots' Association is not responsible for damages caused by accidents when due to the negligence of its members. A decision was rendered in the case of Guy v. Donald on question certified from the circuit court of appeals for the fourth circuit. Guy is a member of the association, and he was the pilot in charge of the navigation of the steamer Santuit, which is owned by Donald, when, in 1901, that vessel collided with the schooner Churchman off the Virginia capes, doing such damage that Donald was compelled to pay $3,175.

Suit being instituted by him to recover from Guy and the pilots' association, the Federal district court for the eastern district of Virginia granted his prayer, holding that the accident was due to Guy's negligence, and that he and the association of which he is a member were responsible for the damage done. Guy appealed the case to the court of appeals, and that body sent it to the Supreme Court with the request for answers to the question whether the association, being unincorporated, constituted a partnership; whether, if the association is a partnership, its members, who are regularly licensed pilots, are liable for damage to vessels caused by the negligence of one another, and whether, if not a partnership, they are liable for such damages. The questions were answered in the negative.

This simply adds to the hardships involved in the situation. The service that the owners of these vessels are compelled to receive, or to pay for if offered and not received, it would seem ought to carry with it a corresponding obligation to guarantee the safety of their property and the payment of damages therefor in the case of negligent service subjecting their property to hazards and dangers, especially in view of the fact that tremendous stress is laid upon the idea that this compulsory system must be maintained, with all of these evils and injustices, in order that life, persons, and property should be protected. The protection of life, person, and property without the owners having the opportunity to enforce that right as a matter of law in the courts is simply a delusion and a snare.

FREE PILOTAGE IN WILMINGTON.

Now, I want to call your attention to a very important consideration involved in a little practical experience in connection with this question. The minority views call attention to the fact that in the city of Wilmington, N. C., they have had free pilotage since 1905, and then state that there was a loss in the business in the port of Wilmington, N. C., of about 4,000,000 feet of lumber, establishing, as they say, "beyond question the profound injury done the port of Wilmington by the removal of pilotage." The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL] read, but I will read again, so that it may be freshly before the House, a letter which I received from the president of the Wilmington Chamber of Commerce, to whom I wrote making inquiries in relation to this statement in the minority views. My notion was that the minority views were erroneous.

The president of the Chamber of Commerce of Wilmington, N. C., writes me as follows:

THE WILMINGTON CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,
March 21, 1906.

Hon. CHARLES E. LITTLEFIELD,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Referring to the minority report on the Littlefield bill, beg to call your attention to figures on page 78, purporting to represent the relative shipments from Charleston, S. C., Georgetown, S. C., and Wilmington, N. C., for the years 1904 and 1905, in which the Wilmington shipments of lumber to New York are represented as having fallen off more than 4,000,000 feet. This statement is intended to convey the impression that shipments received at New York are practically the total output of this commodity from Wilmington, and a lamer argument we can not well conceive. For your information, beg to say that the shipments of lumber from Wilmington for 1904 were 40,000,000 feet, and for 1905, 46,000,000 feet, and this notwithstanding that one of the principal mills was shut down for five months, due to a boiler explosion. It is estimated that lumber shipments from Wilmington for 1906 will exceed 60,000,000 feet, or an increase over 1904 of 50 per cent. New York no longer receives the proportion of shipments that it formerly enjoyed, and if the signers of the minority report had been as zealous in ascertaining facts as they were in putting forth a misleading argument, they would never have appended their signatures to a report so easily refuted.

On this same page appears this clause: "Cause—reduced freight, as the freight always pays the pilotage." This is the conclusion of the argument, and is the capstone to the contention that a free port suffers a loss of commerce. In the same paragraph the action of Wilmington in abolishing compulsory pilotage is represented as a short-sighted step on the part of a few grasping shippers. As a matter of fact, the Wilmington Chamber of Commerce, by unanimous vote, condemned compulsory pilotage, and the members of the chamber raised a large fund to prosecute repeal before the State legislature. The subscribers to this fund embraced, with three exceptions, every manufacturer and wholesale dealer in Wilmington.

For your further information, will state that ten pilots are now engaged in the business at this port, and the service is more satisfactory and efficient than it has been for more than ten years. There has not been a single disaster to shipping chargeable to the abolition of compulsory pilotage or to inefficient pilotage service, and the commercial interests of Wilmington are highly pleased with the results of the free port.

I hope that you will feel at liberty to use this letter in meeting the erroneous assumptions in the minority report.

Yours, respectfully,

J. A. TAYLOR. President.

The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. PATTERSON] made some suggestion in relation to figures that he was likely to present in connection with this phase of the question, but I do not understand that he has presented any figures. So that, so far as this debate is concerned, the matter stands upon this letter of the president of the chamber of commerce.

Mr. PATTERSON of North Carolina. Since the gentleman has mentioned me by name, I would like to interrupt him.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Yes.

Mr. PATTERSON of North Carolina. I will state that I wrote to the Secretary of Commerce and Labor for the facts, and asked him to give me the statistics, and he gave them to me as they are contained in the report. Now, I have no knowledge of the source of the information contained in the letter of the president of the chamber of commerce. I notice his letter does not state that that amount of lumber was shipped from Wilmington by boat. His statement was that it was shipped. My information was that there had been a falling off in the lumber shipped from Wilmington by boat. If the gentleman from Maine will refer to that letter, he will see that the president of the Wilmington Chamber of Commerce does not say that that lumber was shipped from Wilmington by boat. The facts which I gave came from the Department of Commerce and Labor.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Does the gentleman impeach the correctness of these statistics given by the president of the Wilmington Chamber of Commerce?

Mr. PATTERSON of North Carolina. No; I do not. I know nothing about what the president of the chamber of commerce says. I wrote to him to furnish me with the facts, but he seems to prefer that they be intrusted to the gentleman from Maine. I think, however, the statement from the Secretary of Commerce and Labor ought to be pretty good authority.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. The minority views do not say that the shipments were by water. The minority views simply say that the southern pine receipts in New York for nine months from September 24, 1904, to June 30, 1905, were so much. If the minority saw fit to put into their views a statement in relation to New York alone when they knew there were other sections to which the lumber was going and therefore the business of the port was being increased instead of decreased, they succeeded in deceiving the House. I do not think they intended to do that. The question is whether the business of that port has increased or decreased.

Mr. PATTERSON of North Carolina. I would like to interrupt the gentleman to state that I was not present when the report was made and I did not sign it myself. My name was signed by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SPIGHT] during my absence and without my knowledge or consent.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I know the gentleman did not.

Mr. PATTERSON of North Carolina. Had I been present, I would have made some corrections in that part of it. My opinion is that there has been a falling off in the shipments of lumber by water since that time. Whether it was because of the abolition of the pilotage or the depletion of forests or shipping of lumber by rail I do not know.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Maine yield to the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I would like to ask the gentleman this question: If there was anything wrong about the pilotage laws of the State of Maine, would not the gentleman rather trust the legislature of the State of Maine to correct the wrong or evil than to appeal to the Congress of the United States to do it?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I will say that when we have suffered thirty-five years under this discrimination in favor of the steam coastwise fleet, and have been appealing again and again for the enactment of legislation to relieve us, I should reach the conclusion that it was not worth while to wait for relief from the States. It has been said time and time again that a little later on, when they got good and ready, when they were entirely satisfied, we might get the legislation. Now, it is suggested in this debate, in substance, that inasmuch as we have stood by under this discrimination for thirty-five years, they now have really acquired a prescriptive right, so that Congress ought not to pass any such legislation; that because we have been here a half a dozen times appealing to Congress, and because they have deferred action, therefore we ought not to have favorable action now; that the statute of limitations, perhaps, barred us.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The gentleman from Maine does not understand that I take that position?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I do not understand that the gentleman from Mississippi takes that position.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am glad the gentleman does not understand that. I should hate to have the gentleman from Maine put me in that ridiculous attitude before the House. The point I wanted to get at is simply this: I know in my own case I am perfectly willing to trust the State of Mississippi, and I wanted to know whether the gentleman was willing to trust the State of Maine.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I would trust the State of Maine to give us relief if it would give us any relief at all. But a system has grown up in Mississippi that is more odious and more oppressive and more in violation of the good, sound sense of a man of intelligence than anywhere else. In Gulfport there is a continuous and regular practice, not in accordance with the law, but in violation of it—there is a continuous practice in Gulfport and some other Mississippi ports of discriminating against our sailing coastwise fleets and in favor of other sailing vessels.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That charge I absolutely deny, and if the charge is true, even, it is a charge of the violation of the laws of the State of Mississippi, and not a charge against the laws of Mississippi.

DISCRIMINATIONS AGAINST SAIL FLEET IN COMPULSORY PORTS.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I understand that the gentleman from Mississippi denies the charge, so far as it relates to Mississippi, but I desire to say to the House that the men implicated in violating the laws and in making these discriminations never have as yet had the hardihood to deny any of the charges in relation thereto, and that, moreover, when the charges were first made before the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, Mr. O'Brien, representing the pilots, desired time to get a refutation from Gulfport, and it appeared before the committee that, although he telegraphed to Gulfport that the charge had been made, the only answer he received was that the laws of Mississippi prohibited discrimination and provided for compulsory pilotage and fixed fees, all of which everybody knew before the response was received. But no one in Gulfport then or since has ever denied that gross discriminations were repeatedly and continually practiced in that port.

In order that there may be no question about this point, I will state that the pilotage paid in Gulfport in 1905 by the S. M. Bird was $128. This was the usual pilotage on vessels of her size for one trip.

I quote three bills, all to the G. A. Bartlet, but during different periods of time, for the same service. They read:

GULFPORT, SHIP ISLAND HARBOR, MISS., February 8, 1904.

Captain and owners, schooner G. A. Bartlet, to the Ship Island Pilots' Association, Dr.

As per agreement $40

Total 40

JOSEPH LEWIS, Treasurer.

GULFPORT, MISS., February 4, 1905

Captain and owners, G. A. Bartlet, to Ship Island Pilots' Association, Dr.:

Pilotage $40

Total 40

F. G. MORAN, Pilot.

GULFPORT, MISS., April 7, 1905.

Captain and owners, G. A. Bartlet, to Ship Island Pilots' Association, Dr.:

To ——— feet inward draft, at $4 ..... $40
To harbor fees 5

Total 45

JOHN E. LEWIS, Pilot.

For the purpose of intensifying this discrimination, it may be stated that the schooner G. A. Bartlet is a considerably larger vessel than the S. M. Bird and carries about 40,000 feet more of lumber.

An explanation of the reason why this gross discrimination was made in her favor as against a vessel hailing from and managed in New York may be found in the fact that her manager resides in a Gulf port.

In 1905 the schooner Mary E. Morse paid $150 pilotage fees at Gulfport, and the British schooner Lillie, of about the same size, managed by an agent living in a Gulf port, paid $46.60 for the same service.

The schooner Frances, in 1905, paid $142 pilotage at Gulfport, and the British schooner Blomidon paid during the same year for the same service $44. These vessels are of about the same size.

The Fred A. Davenport, in 1905, paid $156 pilotage at Gulfport, and the schooner Fred W. Ayers paid $40 for substantially the same service. The only distinction known between these two vessels is that the Davenport is managed in Bath, Me., and the Fred W. Ayers is managed by an owner living in a Gulf port.

These instances, undenied by the men who made the discrimination, amply establish my contention. I suppose that I would hardly be expected to go over every single voyage that has been made out of Gulfport, Miss., during the last three or four years, but, if necessary, I could no doubt file a bill of particulars covering the whole period. I assume that these facts were not known to the gentleman from Mississippi when he assumed the responsibility of denying that there was any such discrimination. A system prostituted to such abuses ought not to be tolerated when Congressional action can furnish the only practicable relief.

In Mobile, Ala., April 27, 1904, the schooner Gertrude Bartlet was charged $52 for pilotage; on July 13, 1904, $49 for pilotage; on September 15, 1905, she was charged $52 for pilotage, and on December 7, 1905, $52 for pilotage, when a vessel of substantially her size and carrying capacity would have been charged, under the same circumstances, if she was managed outside of the compulsory-pilotage zone, about $173.

It is hardly necessary to multiply instances, particularly in view of the fact that no one at the hearing undertook to deny that the practice of discrimination was very general.

It appeared in the case of the Plant Line, which plies between Tampa, Key West, and Habana, in the foreign trade, that they had succeeded in making an arrangement so that their expense for pilotage was only about $4 a trip, when the sail coastwise vessel making the same ports on a similar voyage would be compelled to pay about $240. And this is further emphasized by the fact that the Plant Line of steamers is engaged in the foreign trade, while the sail vessel would be engaged entirely in the domestic trade, plying between two ports in the same State. Mr. O'Brien, who has for years been representing the pilots in opposition to this legislation, not only was not able to successfully deny that these discriminations existed, but he himself admitted, as a witness before the committee, that he had made a contract of that character. His testimony is as follows:

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Is there any special arrangement at Key West with the Plant System, a foreign line?
Captain O'BRIEN. I think there is.
Mr. LITTLEFIELD. What reduction does that foreign line get?
Captain O'BRIEN. I do not know.
Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Did you not make the contract?
Captain O'BRIEN. I made one contract, but they broke it.
Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Under the arrangement that you made, how much reduction was the foreign line getting?
Captain O'BRIEN. That is not a foreign line. It is owned by Mr. H. M. Flagler and other gentlemen who are not any more foreigners than the State of Maine people are.
Mr. LITTLEFIELD. She sails foreign. What arrangement did you make with them?
Captain O'BRIEN. I think we made it a fractional part of the pilotage.
Mr. LITTLEFIELD. What fractional part?
Captain O'BRIEN. I think it was one-half or three-fourths pilotage, but it did not last over a month. They broke that arrangement. I am not positive what the details were.
Mr. LITTLEFIELD. You made it?
Captain O'BRIEN. Yes, sir.
Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Did they refuse to pay it?
Captain O'BRIEN. I was not president of the National Pilots' Association at that time. They probably found that it was not within the law and that the law would not permit it.

The details in connection with this and other questions of fact which I discuss may be found in the report of the committee, which I will annex as an appendix.

To return to Wilmington, N. C.: The fact is that Wilmington ships lumber in large quantities to Baltimore, Philadelphia, New Haven, Providence, Boston, and Portland, all of which goes by vessel. Under these circumstances the fact that the gentleman from North Carolina only succeeded in inquiring about shipments to New York would look as though he did not have any very great desire to be placed in possession of all the information relating to this subject.

Prior to March, 1905, when compulsory pilotage was in force, this port maintained forty pilots. Since it has been a free port, according to the statement of the president of the chamber of commerce, whose reliability and credibility are guaranteed by the Representative from his district, Mr. PATTERSON—

> Ten pilots are now engaged in the business at this port, and the service is more satisfactory and efficient than it has been for more than ten years. There has not been a single disaster to shipping chargeable to the abolition of compulsory pilotage or to inefficient pilotage service, and the commercial interests of Wilmington are highly pleased with the result of the free port.

In his report as president of the chamber of commerce, made in May, 1906, he made this further statement with reference to the change in the pilotage system:

> We have just completed the first year of our experience as a free port, and all the prophecies of dire calamity—
>
> "That lowered upon our house
> In the deep bosom of the ocean buried"— > for the record is without a single disaster chargeable to the abolition of compulsory pilotage laws. Two pilot crews are maintained at Southport, and commerce is receiving better service now than perhaps for fifteen years. With the abolition of compulsory laws the pilot-tugboat combination fell to pieces, and we now have competitive towing, and shipping is most effectually served.
> Conditions could not be more satisfactory, nor could the wisdom of those who advocated a free port be more perfectly vindicated.

Please note the force of this disinterested and emphatic statement.

The experience of the port of Wilmington, N. C., as taken from the highest and most reliable source of information, conclusively demonstrates that that port is more efficiently and effectively served under a free system of pilotage with ten pilots than it was with forty pilots under the old compulsory system. It conclusively demonstrates that life and property are better protected than under the old system. It shows, further, inasmuch as the ten pilots are now amply sufficient for all the needs of that thriving, enterprising, and busy port, that during the compulsory pilotage period thirty pilots were being supported and maintained by the sail fleet without rendering any efficient service of any kind for the tribute levied upon the sail coastwise fleet. If we assume, in the absence of having received any information upon that point from the pilots themselves—and the pilots have been very careful to conceal the extent of compensation which they have succeeded in receiving under compulsory pilotage—that they have been receiving $2,000 per annum each—and this, I think, would be a conservative estimate—this means that the sail coastwise fleet has been paying to the pilots in Wilmington, N. C., prior to March, 1905, an annual and unnecessary tribute of $60,000. It will be difficult to imagine a more obvious and vicious illustration of unjustifiable legalized graft perpetrated under the forms of State legislation. This same condition, although perhaps not quite to the extent indicated in Wilmington, beyond all question prevails in every southern port, as upon any decent business basis the compulsory pilotage system is supporting and maintaining a relatively large number of unnecessary pilots in each port.

COMPENSATION OF NORFOLK PILOTS.

It is true that the port of Norfolk, Va., is a most conspicuous and vicious illustration of this palpable and unjustifiable graft. There is considerable controversy as to what sum per year the pilots are receiving in that port. It has been asserted that they are receiving in the neighborhood of eight or nine thousand dollars a year each.

It is extremely significant, although this question has been pending for the last four or five years, and the compensation of the Norfolk pilots has always been an important factor and a subject of acute discussion, that no one representing that pilot association has ever undertaken to give to the committee or to the House any statement as to the sums actually received annually by these pilots. The only suggestion that has ever been made in the way of criticism of the assertion that they are receiving eight or nine thousand dollars a year is the statement made by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MAYNARD], in whose district these pilots are located, that he does not "believe" they are receiving that sum. The fact that he has to rest his statement solely upon his belief, and entirely disclaims any knowledge, is extremely significant upon this proposition. I suppose no one will believe but that if he desired to do so, and the facts were of such a character as to make it desirable to have them stated, he could ascertain from his constituents in forty-eight hours just exactly what the facts are in this regard. But he has been a member of the committee for at least two years, and has been involved in this agitation for a number of years, and while this is an important fact involved in the controversy, he has not succeeded during all this time in accumulating any definite information upon this point. I think we may safely infer that if the information would be favorable to the pilots, definite and specific information would be very promptly forthcoming through him or through their representatives, so that it could reach the knowledge of the House, and we have a right, certainly, under the circumstances, to assume that they are receiving compensation so large that they do not dare even disclose the amount.

I have in my district 2,000 or 3,000 mechanics whose employment is dependent upon the continuation of the shipbuilding industry. They are ship carpenters, ship joiners, blacksmiths, calkers, ironers, riggers, sailmakers, and so forth, and to-day, on account of the decadence of building wooden sailing vessels, they are practically without employment in their respective trades, and this, remember, is the labor in only one district, other sections being also largely interested. The imposition of this unjust burden of compulsory pilotage is one of the principal causes contributing to this decline. The facts as to this decline I shall state more in detail hereafter. These men are good citizens, intelligent, industrious, thrifty, and law-abiding. They do not see any good reason why the industry in which they are interested should be subjected to an unnecessary burden contributing to their being deprived of an opportunity to render an honest day's work for an honest day's wage in order that the pilots in Norfolk, Va., for instance, may receive $9,000 per annum or less or a sum that they do not dare disclose, as the result of this monopolistic burden. And, as the case shows, no one of these pilots in eighteen years has rendered any practical service to a sail vessel. It is admitted that in this port the system is maintained for tribute pure and simple, as licenses are issued to vessels to use that port without a pilot—that is, the owners pay for the privilege of navigating their own vessels. They toil not, neither do they spin, yet with diligent persistence and insistence they gather into barns in order that they may live lives of opulence, luxury, and leisure, while hundreds of laboring men in my district, in order that this interesting proceeding may continue undisturbed, are not able to get an opportunity to work and get a fair return for service actually rendered.

It is true that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PRINCE], supposedly desirous of information in connection with the merits of this controversy, inquired of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MINOR] whether any labor organizations were supporting this bill, conveying the inference that the labor organizations were arrayed against this bill and therefore it ought not to pass. I have just called attention to the fact that from two to three thousand of the finest laboring men in this country, living in my district, are vitally interested in its passage, and that their opportunity for employment to a large degree depends thereon. I do not know whether they are or are not fully or thoroughly organized. I do know that in every proper legitimate method they have expressed themselves as anxious to have this legislation passed. I do not understand that they are affiliated with the American Federation of Labor. I hope, however, that the interests and desires of two to three thousand men in my district who labor will receive at least the same consideration from the sentimental standpoint as those of 130 pilots, many of whom never labor, who happen to be organized and affiliated with the American Federation of Labor; unless, to be sure, it may appear that the Members of the House are to proceed upon the closed-shop idea, and entirely ignore the interests of laboring men who do not happen to be members of the American Federation of Labor and hold that unless they belong to the Federation they have no rights that this generation of statesmen are bound to respect.

I have said that there were 130 pilots interested in this bill, and this leads me to call attention to the fact that Mr. O'Brien has circulated considerable literature in relation to this question, among which is a letter dated January 17, 1906, in which he says:

> It was stated in the committee that this bill affected 130 pilots, while in fact it affects directly or indirectly 1,000 pilots.

It is true that it was stated in the committee that it affected 130 pilots, and it is also true that this statement was made by Mr. O'Brien, who testified before the committee, as will be seen on page 17 of the hearings, as follows:

> Mr. LITTLEFIELD. How many pilots would be affected by this bill?
> Mr. O'BRIEN. One hundred and thirty.

It is hardly necessary to comment upon the two statements made by this representative of the pilots' association.

THE BURDEN ON THE SAIL FLEET.

The effect of this burden upon the sail coastwise fleet is, I think, made too obvious for discussion by simply citing, as I will, the results in connection with a few vessels.

The schooner Belle O'Neil, which was purchased in June, 1904, produced, from 1904 to 1906, in two years and four months of time, total net earnings of $3,180. She cost $15,000. The earnings, without the payment of insurance, amounted to only 9.1 per cent per year. Upon this vessel, on account of her age, the insurance was 11 per cent per annum. Some of her owners insured and some did not insure. Those that did not insure, of course, in effect insured themselves. The net result of the operation of the vessel is, of course, to be reckoned upon the basis of the payment of insurance. If insurance had been paid on this vessel, instead of there being any net return from her she would have shown a loss of 1.9 per cent.

The schooner Catherine Monahan was a new vessel, launched in 1904, and up to October, 1906, she had made net earnings of $9,400. She cost $45,000. The insurance upon her was 8 per cent per annum. Her net earnings, without paying insurance, were 10.5 per cent, and after the payment of insurance it left only 2½ per cent for interest on the investment and depreciation. The estimate for depreciation is about 5 per cent per annum. No depreciation was estimated in the case of the Belle O'Neil, above referred to.

PILOTAGE FREQUENTLY EXCEEDS NET EARNINGS.

The schooner Winfred A. Foran, from May, 1905, to January, 1906, paid $1,200. She cost $17,000. Her net earnings would equal 10.5 per cent per year. She insured at 8 per cent, which would leave only 2.5 per cent for depreciation and interest. During the period in which she paid $1,200, without reckoning insurance to her owners, she paid out in pilotage something like $1,300.

A sample trip of the Winfred A. Foran is illuminating on the point of the proportion that the pilotage fees bear to the dividends paid to the owners. On her trip from June 7 to August 9, 1905, she paid in pilotage fees $326.80, and on that same trip was able to pay to her owners only $200.

In the case of the schooner Laura C. Henderson, the owners were compelled to pay $562.50 after a charge had been made of $662.50 in one trip, a large portion of which was caused by reason of the fact that they were obliged to make a harbor with a sick sailor and were required to pay pilotage in and out, even under those circumstances; and in this instance the vessel had the services of a tug, which rendered the services of the pilot in every sense unnecessary.

Between September, 1905, and October, 1906, the schooner S. M. Bird paid out in pilotage a little over $1,400, and during that same time divided to her owners less than $800.

The barkentine Frances, on a voyage from Norfolk to Charleston and return, paid out in pilotage $270, and on the same trip the owners had left for her dividends $97.06. The schooner John R. Bergen paid in four months in 1904 $752 for pilotage, and during the same time paid to her owners only $1,000 in dividends.

The schooner Laura, on a voyage from New York to Charleston and return, paid out in pilotage $173.22, and paid to her owners $312.55.

On the very next trip, to the same place and return, she paid in pilotage $179, and to her owners $116.32. These are simply sample illustrations, which could be duplicated indefinitely if I desired to go over the history of the sail coastwise fleet during the last eight or ten years.

DECLINE IN BUILDING SAIL VESSELS.

As a result of this condition, it is not surprising that the construction of vessels subject to this southern pilot tax has been steadily decreasing and has now nearly ceased. For years prior to 1904 there were more wooden vessels built in the district that I have the honor to represent than in all the rest of the United States put together. This includes the Atlantic and Pacific coasts and the Great Lakes. Bath is by all odds the most important shipbuilding point in the district and for wooden vessels in the United States. The following extract from the principal newspaper printed in Bath is eloquent upon this point:

[Bath Daily Times.]

THE YEAR'S RECORD—NOT ONE TO WHICH BATH CAN POINT WITH PRIDE.

The year 1905 was a most unfortunate one for Bath shipyards so far as the amount of tonnage built and launched is concerned, thereby making the year appear small in comparison with many previous years. There were but eight vessels built, all schooners, and their aggregate tonnage was 8,454, divided among the following vessels:

	Tonnage.
Alice May Davenport	1,144
Evelyn W. Hinkley	698
Orleans	758
Camilla May Page	688
Frances Hyde	739
Herbert D. Maxwell	772
Davis Palmer	2,965
Robert P. Murphy	697

The comparison in the amount of tonnage with previous years is as follows:

	Tons.
1905, 8 vessels	8,454
1904, 26 vessels	26,683
1903, 23 vessels	25,149
1902, 26 vessels	31,663
1901, 28 vessels	33,563
1900, 35 vessels	41,532

This discrimination against the sail and in favor of the steam coastwise fleet, largely producing these results, is a direct subsidy to the steam fleet, a subsidy to corporate as against individual interests. Opposition to this bill means special privileges to steam vessels as against equal privileges to all vessels.

To-day there is but one wooden vessel on the stocks in Bath and but one other in the balance of my district. These facts show why it is that throughout my district such a large number of intelligent and capable mechanics are to-day deprived of their regular employment.

The people in my district are by no means those who are alone interested, as the vessels are owned to a very large extent outside the district, some having from 50 to 100 owners scattered all along the coast and over the country.

All the commerce up and down the coast is interested to wipe out this burden, and with practical unanimity is urging the passage of this bill.

It is true that in the course of this debate in opposition to this bill various suggestions and insinuations have been made in relation to other matters that have no connection of any kind with the bill pending before the House, made, no doubt, for the purpose of diverting discussion from the pending bill. As to all suggestions or insinuations of that character, it is only necessary to say that they are entirely immaterial, their introduction was unjustifiable, their purpose was easily apprehended, and I have no occasion at this time to either directly or indirectly make any further reference thereto.

Finally, I submit, Mr. Speaker, that if the question of labor is entitled to consideration in connection with this controversy, from 2,000 to 3,000 men in one district desiring work are entitled to more consideration than 130 men, the great majority of whom render no service and receive compensation for service never rendered; that as to the fact whether they are or are not in either instance federated with any labor organization should not affect their rights and interests in a matter of this kind; that the facts in this case clearly show that there is to-day ample tonnage engaged in the foreign trade to maintain and support all the pilots necessary for its use or its legitimate service in this territory; that the expenditure of millions and millions of dollars upon the improvement of harbors in the southern territories for the sole, express, and only purpose of maintaining them safe and approachable for all commerce has now placed them in a position where they are not entitled to insist upon levying tribute upon this sail coastwise fleet in order that they may be in a position to render service to another and independent branch of the merchant marine principally owned and conducted by foreigners; that comparing the compulsory pilotage territory with that where pilotage is free, the record, which can not be controverted, demonstrates beyond all controversy that the protection of life, person, and property is vastly better conserved in the territory where the pilotage is open to free competition and dependent upon actual services rendered than in the territory where the other system prevails; that there is nothing in any of the facts that will justify the House in further continuing the oppressive monopoly and handicap that now exists in favor of the steam coastwise tonnage, largely owned by great corporate interests, against the sail coastwise fleet, which is the property of individual owners and is independently competing for its existence.

APPENDIX.

[House Report No. 1482, Fifty-ninth Congress, first session.]

DISCRIMINATION AGAINST SAILING VESSELS IN COASTING TRADE.

February 19, 1906.—Referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD, from the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, submitted the following report:

[To accompany H. R. 5281.]

The Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5281) entitled "A bill to remove discrimination against American sailing vessels in the coasting trade," having given the same careful consideration recommend that it do pass.

This bill extends to coastwise sailing vessels in the southern waters from Norfolk to Galveston the same rights which Congress has already granted to their competitors, the coastwise steamers, in those same waters, and which both sail and steam vessels enjoy on all the rest of the Atlantic coast, the Pacific coast, and on the Great Lakes and all rivers, i. e., the right to enter and leave those ports without paying for pilots when they do not use them and do not need them.

It affects the profits, according to the official representative of the pilots, of about 130 men, who now have a monopoly of the piloting business in those ports, neither the State nor the municipality being a sharer in the money thus collected.

It removes discriminating laws which are a relic of days when harbors were practically unmarked by light-ships, light-houses, and buoys, channels dredged and uncharted, and towboats, commanded by their own expert local pilots, taking vessels into and out of harbors unknown.

It enables American sailing vessels seeking shelter from the storm to enter those harbors, upon which the Government has spent so many millions to make them safely navigable, without being taxed for the privilege by private individuals whom they neither need nor use, just as such vessels freely enter all other ports and the southern port of Wilmington, N. C., since March, 1905, when that port was made free in both foreign and coastwise trade.

It has no reference to nor effect upon the general pilot system of the country, and therefore the great bulk of the objections and protests urged against the bill before the committee have no bearing upon it. It does not, as has been often erroneously asserted, prevent or attempt to prevent sail vessels from employing a local pilot, but leaves them entirely free to employ one if they need him, in which case they of course pay for the service, as for any other service actually rendered to them.

In addition to the report of this committee made last year and annexed hereto and made a part of this report, it may be said that the mass of resolutions, petitions, letters, and telegrams from the great producers and shippers in the Southern States to this committee and the members thereof, herein quoted and summarized, is such as to command the utmost consideration and respect.

DELAWARE.

WILMINGTON, DEL., January 10, 1906.

Hon. CHARLES H. GROSVENOR,
Chairman Merchant Marine Committee, Washington, D. C.:

We wish to advocate vigorously passage of Littlefield bill abolishing compulsory pilotage.

BUSH & RAYNER.

FLORIDA.

LIVE OAK, FLA., January 9, 1906.

Hon. CHAS. H. GROSVENOR,
Chairman Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee, Washington, D. C.:

We own and operate two large sawmills, producing 100,000 feet of lumber daily; are large producers of naval stores; owners of timber land and managers of the Live Oak Ferry and Gulf Railway Company. We believe that the interests of manufacturers, shippers, and property owners in this State will benefit by the passage of the anti-compulsory pilotage bill and we urge its passage.

THE DAWLING LBR. AND N. S. CO.

JACKSONVILLE, FLA., January 11, 1906.

Hon. C. H. GROSVENOR,
Chairman House Committee, Washington, D. C.:

We are large shippers of yellow-pine lumber from this port, Fernandina, and Gulf ports, and most urgently wish the passage of the anticompulsory pilotage bill.

ROBT. SIZER & CO.

WATERTOWN, FLA., January 9, 1906.

Hon. C. H. GROSVENOR,
Chairman House Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, Washington, D. C.:

We think the Littlefield anticompulsory pilotage bill now before Congress should be passed and strongly urge same. We being large sawmill owners, shippers from Fernandina and Jacksonville, timbered-land proprietors, and extensive operators in naval stores, believe it will promote our interests as well as other producers in the South.

EAST COAST LUMBER COMPANY.

JACKSONVILLE, FLA., January 10, 1906.

Hon. C. H. GROSVENOR,
Chairman Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

I respectfully urge passage of Littlefield anticompulsory pilotage bill. I am one of the largest shippers of railroad ties and lumber from Jacksonville, Fernandina, and Brunswick; heavily interested in timber and other property in this State, and believe this bill should pass in the interest of all producers and shippers and that it will be a benefit to the South.

DEXTER HUNTER.

JACKSONVILLE, FLA., January 10, 1906.

Hon. C. H. GROSVENOR,
Washington, D. C.:

We, as lumber and cross-tie manufacturers and naval stores' operators in this State, advocate the passage of the Littlefield anticompulsory pilotage bill.

EMPIRE LUMBER COMPANY.

WHITE SPRINGS, FLA., January 8, 1906.

Hon. C. H. GROSVENOR,
Chairman Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee,
Washington, D. C.:

We own 200,000 acres of timber land, three large sawmills, and operate a railroad, and we strongly urge the passage of the anticompulsory pilotage bill.

R. J. & B. F. CAMP LBR. CO.

LAKE CITY, FLA., January 10, 1906.

Hon. CHAS. H. GROSVENOR,
Washington, D. C.:

We own 150,000 acres of timber and operate two large sawmills at Dunnellon and Crystal River, Fla. We believe the interests of shippers, manufacturers, and property owners in this State will be benefited by the passage of the anticompulsory pilotage bill, and we strongly urge its passage.

CRYSTAL RIVER LUMBER CO.

JACKSONVILLE, FLA., January 10, 1906.

Hon. C. H. GROSVENOR,
Chairman Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee,
Washington, D. C.:

We are sawmill owners and shippers from this port. Urgently request the passage of the Littlefield anticompulsory pilotage bill.

EAGLE MILLS LUMBER COMPANY.

GAINESVILLE, FLA., January 10, 1906.

Hon. CHAS. H. GROSVENOR,
Washington, D. C.:

While we are large shippers of phosphate rock to foreign ports and the Littlefield anticompulsory pilotage bill has very little effect either way on our business, still we are especially interested that all laws affecting the shipping business through our southern ports shall be of such a nature as to render every possible advantage and be just and right, and feeling the injustice of the existing law of compulsory pilotage, we most heartily indorse the pending Littlefield bill.

DUTTON PHOSPHATE COMPANY.

JACKSONVILLE, FLA., January 11, 1906.

Hon. C. H. GROSVENOR,
Chairman Merchant Marine and Fisheries,
Washington, D. C.:

We most urgently advocate passage of anticompulsory bill. We are sawmill owners and have large timber interests in this State.

STANDARD CYPRESS CO.

JACKSONVILLE, FLA., January 11, 1906.

Hon. CHAS. H. GROSVENOR,
Washington, D. C.:

We are owners of over 300,000 acres timber land in this State, manufacturers of railroad ties and timber, and strongly urge passage of Littlefield anticompulsory bill, believing it will benefit this State and all the South.

THE ATLANTIC LUMBER CO.

JACKSONVILLE, FLA., January 11, 1906.

Hon. C. H. GROSVENOR,
Chairman Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee,
Washington, D. C.:

We are greatly in favor of passage of Littlefield anticompulsory pilotage bill. We are large sawmill and landowners at Otto Creek, Fla., and shippers from Jacksonville and Fernandina.

BLISS & VANUKER.

NEW YORK, January 16, 1906.

W. D. CASH, Key West, Fla.:

Please wire, collect, if Plant Line steamers coming from Habana and going to Habana, in and out Key West, take pilots, and the amount of pilotage they pay. Do you know of any special arrangements they have? Wire fully.

Hon. C. E. LITTLEFIELD,
House of Representatives, Washington D. C.

DEAR SIR: We take the liberty of suggesting that we think your efforts to suppress the compulsory pilot charges should have the recognition and support of all those who have been imposed on for years.

We have a line of barges, entirely dependent on tugboats for movement, trading from James River points to New York, and, notwithstanding the tugs have Government pilots aboard, we are compelled to pay the Virginia Pilots' Association, a body which we understand is not even incorporated, a yearly fee of 10 cents per ton for the privilege of going and coming through the Capes.

We are writing our Representatives, Messrs. TALBOTT, WACHTER, and MUDD, urging them to stand by you, and hope before long to see the end of this odious custom, which in our case particularly is nothing more than a "hold up." The pilots render us no service whatever.

Respectfully, yours,

THE P. DOUGHERTY CO.
THOS. F. MCHUGH.

BALTIMORE, January 18, 1906.

The Hon. Mr. LITTLEFIELD,
Member of House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

SIR: We note in to-day's press an item relating to a "Protest from pilots," against your bill now before the House of Representatives. In this connection we beg to enter our protest against the tribute exacted of us and others so engaged in the coastwise trade under the compulsory pilotage laws now in force in Virginia and other southern ports.

Our tugs and barges are principally engaged in the coastwise trade towing barges coal laden between Virginia and New England ports, and the respective masters of our tugs hold Federal license, issued by the local steamboat inspectors, covering the Atlantic coast and tributaries. Yet, notwithstanding this fact, when our barges in tow of our tugs arrive at Virginia or other southern ports for cargo, we are compelled to either pay pilotage fees or purchase a yearly license on all of our barges, simply for the privilege of entering and leaving port.

In view of the fact that the pilots of said ports do not render any service whatsoever, but only speak the barges when they arrive and have been moored by our tugs, it would appear to our mind as nothing more or less than tribute. These barges can not move or shift without the power of the tug and are under the care and direction of the masters of said tugs, who, as stated above, hold Federal license governing such waters.

We therefore urge and request the repeal of the present compulsory pilotage laws.

Very respectfully, yours,

R. J. BRADFORD,
Secretary and Treasurer.

DEAR SIR: We are pleased to express our approval of House bill No. 5281, introduced in the House of Representatives by Representative LITTLEFIELD, of Maine, "A bill to remove discrimination against American sailing vessels in the coasting trade." We understand that pilotage on our coastwise sailing fleet is not now compulsory in many of the States, and can be and is evaded in others by vessels taking out yearly licenses. We are inclined to think that a vessel making or leaving port in tow to be as safe if not safer without a local pilot, and in fact believe that the abolishment of compulsory pilotage on vessels covered by this bill will be a good thing for the safety of life and property.

I can assure you your support of this measure will receive the hearty approval of all the commercial bodies in Boston and redound to your credit among all thinking men whose interests lie in the line of a better merchant marine. I can not understand the action of the Boston pilots in opposing this measure; in no way does it affect their interests in Boston or in Massachusetts, and only extends to us the privileges of licensed masters piloting their own vessels in southern ports—a privilege they have exercised here for over thirty years with no ill results to the vessels themselves and great advantage to the commercial interests of Massachusetts.

CHARLES H. GROSVENOR, Esq.,
Chairman Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: In the discussion on the pilot's bill we notice the signature of Captain Rawding, of the bark Rose Innes, against the proposed legislation. We beg to advise you that we are managing owners of this bark, the captain having but a very small interest. We believe through misrepresentation that he has signed the petition against the proposed legislation, and we hereby wish to be on record as geing in favor of the proposed change in law removing the discrimination against American vessels. Compulsory pilotage imposes a very heavy tax on American vessels and it should be removed at once. The bark Rose Innes on her last trip to Fernandina, under date of December 30, paid for inward pilotage $80, for outward pilotage $120, making a total of $200, although she had been towed into that port by a tugboat at an expense of $103.45, and the services of a pilot were entirely unnecessary.

We trust that this letter will receive due attention, and remain,

Yours, truly,

JAS. W. ELWELL & CO.,

Hon. WILLIAM S. GREENE,

DEAR SIR: I understand that there is a bill before the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries which proposes to abolish the extensive charges for pilotage on the southern Atlantic coast, and I wish to enter my protest against the present law, through which sailing vessels have to bear a charge which is most onerous and unnecessary to a trade which at best is scarcely able to live under the restrictions by which it is handicapped. I have no special interest in sailing vessels beyond that of one who wishes to see every class of the merchant marine developed and bettered.

Respectfully,

T. W. MILLER.

The CHAIRMAN OF THE COMMITTEE

DEAR SIR: My attention has been called to a letter signed by Capt. Chas. Thompson, master of schooner Florence Randall, which Mr. J. M. McDonald, manager pilots' office, Charleston, S. C., is using to bolster up the claim of compulsory pilotage. I beg to state that Capt. Chas. Thompson had no interest in schooner Florence Randall; was simply sailing master of said vessel, and has been dead for six years or more. I wish to state further, as master and owner of schooner Florence Randall and other vessels for many years, have an equal or greater knowledge of the situation than Captain Thompson had, and since the improvements made by the Government at the southern harbors and bars, the increased number of tugs, and the almost absolute necessity of towing in and out of harbors between the lines of jetties, make compulsory pilotage a burden on shipping, wholly unnecessary and unwarranted, and for that reason should be abolished.

Very truly, yours,

CAPT. H. M. RANDALL,
Formerly captain and owner of the following vessels trading in southern waters: Schooner Mable Thomas, schooner, Hattie V. Kelsey, schooner Florence Randall, schooner Lucy H. Russell.

ALBANY, N. Y., February 8, 1906.

Introduced by Mr. Henry W. Hill:

A concurrent resolution of the legislature of the State of New York, addressed to the United States Senators and Representatives in Congress of the United States from the State of New York, in relation to pilots and coastwise sailing vessels engaged in domestic commerce.

Whereas the State of New York is deeply concerned in all matters affecting its commerce and in the welfare and prosperity of its citizens engaged in transportation, as is shown in its maintenance of a magnificent system of canals, now under enlargement, and in the appointment of commissions to inquire into the cause of the decline and the means for the revival of its commerce; and

Whereas sailing vessels in our coast trade (many of which are owned in this State) are at present subject to an unjust and onerous burden in being compelled to employ State pilots in the ports of the States south of the capes of Virginia, whether the services of such pilots be required or not, a compulsion from which steam vessels have been exempt by an act of Congress approved on February 28, 1871, nearly thirty-five years ago; and

Whereas bills are now pending in each branch of Congress, to wit: Senate bill No. 30 and House bill No. 5281, providing for the exemption of sailing vessels in the coasting trade from the compulsory employment of State pilots, when such vessels are commanded by licensed United States pilots or when they are in tow of tugboats that are commanded by licensed United States pilots: Therefore, be it

Resolved (if the assembly concur), That it is the sense of the legislature of the State of New York that American sailing vessels in the coasting trade should be exempt from the compulsory employment of State pilots as American steam vessels long have been; and therefore, be it further

Resolved (if the assembly concur), That the Senators and Representatives from the State of New York be, and they hereby are, respectfully requested to support and advocate the enactment of such measures in Congress providing for such exemption, as being conducive to the increase of our commerce and the greater prosperity of our citizens.

By order of—

THE SENATE,
LAFAYETTE B. GLEASON, Clerk.

Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Being lumber manufacturers at this port and building another large mill on the Cape Fear River, together with owning about 200,000 acres of timber and other lands in this vicinity, we are much interested and have been closely watching the reports of hearings on H. R. 5281, introduced by Mr. Littlefield, of Maine, entitled "A bill to remove discriminations against American sailing vessels in the coasting trade," and owing to our hard fight that we had with the pilots at this port, we sympathize with our southern merchants who desire this bill to pass, but who are not strong enough to make a winning fight against the powerful organization of the pilots who retain representatives at the capitals wherever the bill is introduced.

The main argument put forth by the pilots here last year was that they could not keep up the "system" if the coastwise pilotage was removed. This port, through the legislature of our State, not only secured the abolition of compulsory pilotage in the coastwise trade, but went further and abolished it in the foreign trade, thereby relieving us of a heavy tax on our imports and exports. We believe compulsory pilotage is a tax on commerce that long ago should have been abolished, and it is the earnest hope of all merchants in this locality that the Littlefield bill will become a law and permit the merchants of Wilmington to send vessels to and receive them from southern ports without compelling them to pay tribute to a "system" no longer necessary by reason of the large expenditure of money made by our Government to deepen and widen our channels and harbors. Compulsory pilotage has been abolished at this port for nearly a year, and during that time not one accident to shipping has occurred that could be charged up against the benefits derived from making this a free port. This should be sufficient reason why the Littlefield bill should be enacted and become a law.

The feeling of our people was expressed at a banquet given here on the 31st ultimo by the chamber of commerce. The president, who acted as toastmaster, asked our Congressman and Senator, who were present, to support the bill, and requested that all rise to the toast "The only free port south of Maine."

A year ago we had about forty pilots employed, who did service at their pleasure, now we have six or eight that make a business of it.

Hoping that the bill will receive favorable consideration from your committee and be enacted and become a law, we beg to remain,

Yours, truly,

WACCAMAW LAND & LUMBER CO.
C. E. CLARK, Treasurer.

NATIONAL PILOTAGE LAW—BILL NOW PENDING IN CONGRESS RECEIVES LOCAL INDORSEMENT.

The chamber of commerce, at its special meeting yesterday afternoon, made the following indorsement of the bill now pending in Congress to abolish compulsory pilotage on all American sailing vessels engaged in the coasting trade, viz:

"Whereas there is now before Congress H. R. 5281, entitled 'A bill to remove discrimination against American sailing vessels in the coasting trade,' and

"Whereas the State of North Caroline abolished compulsory pilotage at this port March, 1905, and by so doing relieved us of a heavy burden upon our imports and exports and without increasing the dangers to shipping; and

"Whereas we believe compulsory pilotage is a tax on commerce between the States that ought not to exist, and the abolition of compulsory pilotage at this port has proven greatly beneficial to our interests and has in no way interfered with the safety of vessels entering and leaving this port: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That the Chamber of Commerce of Wilmington, N. C., recognizing the importance of cheap transportation and unhampered intercourse between the different sections of the United States, warmly commend the bill, and express the earnest hope that the measure will receive the support of our Representatives in Congress; and be it further

"Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to Hon. GILBERT B. PATTERSON and the other Representatives from this State, and also to Hon. CHAS. H. GROSVENOR, chairman of Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee."

DEAR SIR: As an insurer of American hulls and cargoes between coast ports, we desire to express our opinion that the abolition of the compulsory pilotage law, in its application to this class of business, is a wise measure, and we hope that it will be done. We believe that it will not increase the loss of life or property.

Hon. CHARLES H. GROSVENOR,

DEAR SIR: We wired you to-day as follows:

"As manufacturers, shippers, and owners of vessels and steamers we desire to state that we favor the passage of the Littlefield bill abolishing the compulsory pilotage system, as same works a hardship, injures business, and is unnecessary," and now beg to confirm same.

We not only manufacture and ship from 120,000,000 to 130,000,000 feet of lumber annually, but also operate steamers, vessels, barges, and tugboats on a large scale. To our minds the compulsory pilotage system entails an unnecessary expense each year which we have to pay on account of the toll levied upon the vessels, barges, and steamers, whether they use the pilotage or not. This system is a relic of the old days and has lost its usefulness, having originated when we had no improved harbors or coast surveys or modern light-houses. Its necessity for existence having now ceased, its usefulness also, it has decidedly become a menace rather than a benefit. In canvassing our local shippers we find that they, with the marine insurance companies, favor the Littlefield bill enthusiastically. We sincerely trust that this bill may be favorably reported by your committee and passed by the Congress.

Messrs. WINYAH LUMBER COMPANY,
Georgetown, S. C.

DEAR SIRS: As compulsory pilotage on coasting vessels trading to southern points is now being fought in Congress, I would like to give my experience of thirteen years out and in of Georgetown, S. C. It is not once out of six months that I get a bar pilot outside of the bar buoy. They have no boat suitable to cruise outside, and it is only in very moderate weather or when they go out in a tug that they are seen outside of the jetties. The work is done mostly by the towboats, that have experienced captains, and the pilot takes a free ride to town, and any sailor that can steer a course can steer to follow a tug. The pilots claim that on schooners going to sea loaded they are needed on board the vessels to see that they are kept in the proper channel, and yet I have seen vessels grounded when they would put the blame all on the captain of the tug and not know themselves when the vessel was in deepest water. To prove the presence of a pilot is not necessary on a vessel—hundreds of vessels are towed up and down the Black, Pee Dee, and Waccamaw rivers, both light and loaded, both day and night, in shallow water and narrower channels than in the bay, with only their vessel crews on board, and not one vessel in fifty ever had any trouble in any way. The service of a pilot is not necessary to any vessel making this port with a good chart, and as there is a telephone system from the light-house to the city a tug can always be had, if not at the bar, in a very short time.

The expenses of towing are quite heavy, and with the additional expense of pilots makes port charges very high. The present rate of pilotage is the same as it has been for many years, and lumber freights were nearly double what they are to-day when the rates were made. And to-day we pay from $10 to $12 per man more for sailors, the same for mates and stewards, 25 to 30 per cent more for provisions, and the rates for stevedoring increasing almost every year. Vessel expenses are also higher, and yet we have less freights to meet their expenses. With the present business of about 12,000,000 feet of lumber per month shipped from here, anyone can readily see that it takes many vessels to cary it, and the plain facts are that we are supporting a class of pilots in comparative luxury for no services at all. Again, some ports have pilot licenses for one year. Why should we walk up to their offices and pay them from $25 to $200 for the privilege of handling our own vessels, when there are no better pilots than the captains who are going in and out every month for years? I think the pilotage system in this port the worst system in the South, and we are surely paying a bill for little or no services rendered. This seems to be the experience of about all the vessels coming in here, and I hope they will express their opinion on it.

The present compulsory pilotage system seems to be doing neither manufacturer, shipper, shipowner, nor the consumer any good, but all of whom seem to be paying their pro rata share of this unnecessary expense in the high freight rates, which could be reduced if this toll were removed.

Under the present improved conditions of our harbor it would seem that there is no longer any necessity for this expense, and we sincerely hope that it will be abolished.

THE NORTH CAROLINA PINE ASSOCIATION (INCORPORATED),
Norfolk, Va., February 17, 1905.

Hon. C. H. GROSVENOR,
Chairman Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I am handing you herewith a copy of a resolution unanimously adopted by this association at its meeting on February 9, expressing, on behalf of the great lumber industry of Virginia and North and South Carolina, unequivocal disapproval of the pernicious practice of exacting compulsory pilotage from all sailing vessels engaged in the coastwise trade at ports on the South Atlantic coast. We regard this practice as unnecessary for the support of an effective pilotage system and as a menace rather than a security to the safety of life and property upon the high seas.

We believe that if at any time there existed a reason for the establishment of these charges this condition has not only long since ceased to exist, but that this system has signally failed to accomplish the results which were and are argued as a justification for its existence. We believe that this practice is an unjust discrimination against sailing vessels and is a burdensome tax upon the shippers and shipowners, which therefore works a hardship upon the shipping industry and the lumber industry, which is one of the largest in this section, and also upon every industry in any manner dependent upon the shipping trade.

We are very desirous indeed that this bill shall receive favorable action at this session of Congress, and if you can consistently facilitate the consideration of this measure your action will be known to and heartily approved not only by every lumberman in this district, but by the general public as well.

Respectfully,

JOHN R. WALKER,
Secretary.

RESOLUTION.

At a meeting of the North Carolina Pine Association (Incorporated), held in Norfolk, Va., February 9, 1905, the following preamble and resolution was unanimously adopted:

"Whereas there is now pending in Congress a bill known as the "Littlefield bill," removing the discrimination against coastwise sailing vessels practiced at ports south of the Virginia capes in the form of compulsory pilotage charges; and

"Whereas the manufacturers of pine lumber in the States of Virginia, North Carolina, and South Carolina, represented by this association, ship annually by water approximately 500,000,000 feet of lumber almost exclusively in sailing vessels, which, without exception, must pay this pilotage—although very few of them use the pilots—entailing, therefore, a very great unnecessary expense, both upon the shipper and the consumer of our lumber; and

"Whereas we believe that the passage of this bill will very materially advance not only the interests of the great industry which we represent, but that of every other industry in this section and of our coastwise shipping trade particularly: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That this association heartily approves and recommends the passage of the said bill; and be it

"Further resolved, That the secretary of this association be instructed to present a copy of this resolution to the several Representatives in Congress from Virginia and the Carolinas, respectfully urging a careful consideration of the injustice of the existing system and the benefits to be derived from its abolishment by this measure, and urging, if consistent, their earnest support of the aforementioned bill.

"THE NORTH CAROLINA PINE ASSOCIATION (INCORPORATED)."

Removal of compulsory pilotage helps and does not hinder commerce.

The following letter of the Waccamaw Land and Lumber Company and the resolutions of the Wilmington Chamber of Commerce, unanimously adopted February 5, 1906, are the most conclusive answers possible to the only argument having any force against this bill, i. e., that the navigation of a port would suffer if compulsory pilotage on coastwise sail vessels were removed:

WILMINGTON, N. C., February 2, 1906.

Hon. CHARLES H. GROSVENOR,
Chairman Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Being lumber manufacturers at this port and building another large mill on the Cape Fear River, together with owning about 200,000 acres of timber and other lands in this vicinity, we are much interested and have been closely watching the reports of hearings on H. R. 5281, introduced by Mr. LITTLEFIELD, of Maine, entitled "A bill to remove discrimination against American sailing vessels in the coasting trade," and owing to our hard fight that we had with the pilots at this port we sympathize with out southern merchants who desire this bill to pass but who are not strong enough to make a winning fight against the powerful organization of the pilots, who retain representatives at the capitols wherever the bill is introduced.

The main argument put forth by the pilots here last year was that they could not keep up the "system" if the coastwise pilotage was removed. This port, through the legislature of our State, not only secured the abolition of compulsory pilotage in the coastwise trade but went further and abolished it in the foreign trade, thereby relieving us of a heavy tax on our imports and exports. We believe compulsory pilotage is a tax on commerce that long ago should have been abolished, and it is the earnest hope of all merchants in this locality that the Littlefield bill will become a law and permit the merchants of Wilmington to send vessels to and receive them from southern ports without compelling them to pay tribute to a "system" no longer necessary by reason of the large expenditure of money made by our Government to deepen and widen our channels and harbors.

Compulsory pilotage has been abolished at this port for nearly a year, and during that time not one accident to shipping has occurred that could be charged up against the benefits derived from making this a free port. This should be sufficient reason why the Littlefield bill should be enacted and become a law.

The feeling of our people was expressed at a banquet given here on the 31st ultimo by the chamber of commerce. The president, who acted as toastmaster, asked our Congressman and Senator, who were present, to support the bill, and requested that all rise to the toast, "The only free port south of Maine."

A year ago we had about forty pilots employed, who did service at their pleasure; now we have six or eight who make a business of it.

Hoping that the bill will receive favorable consideration and be enacted and become a law, we remain,

Yours, truly,

WACCAMAW LAND AND LUMBER COMPANY,
C. E. CLARK, Treasurer.

RESOLUTIONS OF THE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE OF WILMINGTON, N. C.

"Whereas there is now before Congress H. R. 5281, entitled 'A bill to remove discrimination against American sailing vessels in the coasting trade;' and

"Whereas the State of North Carolina abolished compulsory pilotage at this port March, 1905, and by so doing relieved us of a heavy burden upon our imports and exports, and without increasing the danger to shipping; and

"Whereas we believe compulsory pilotage is a tax on commerce between the States that ought not to exist and the abolition of compulsory pilotage at this port has proven greatly beneficial to our interests and has in no way interfered with the safety of vessels entering and leaving this port: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That the Chamber of Commerce of Wilmington, N. C., recognizing the importance of cheap transportation and unhampered intercourse between the different sections of the United States, warmly commend the bill and express the earnest hope that the measure will receive the support of our Representatives in Congress.

"And be it further resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to Hon. GILBERT B. PATTERSON and the other Representatives from this State, and also to Hon. CHARLES H. GROSVENOR, chairman of Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee."

What this "tax on commerce" between the States amounts to in fees was stated by Mr. Plummer, in his circular letter to the committee (p. 49), as one-quarter of a million dollars per year, and by Mr. Pendleton, at the hearing on the bill, as having amounted in the last thirty-five years to more than the entire value of the present fleet of coastwise sailing vessels, neither of which statements has been refuted or questioned by the pilots before the committee, and this money is all in addition to the large amounts in fees which they collect under the general system of compulsory pilotage from vessels engaged in the foreign trade, which amounts swell the income of these pilots in the Southern States to sums ranging, as has been estimated, from $2,000 to $10,000 each per year. And in connection with the fact of such high compensation it is important to note that the "system" there has been so peculiarly developed that the pilots work but at intervals, many of them seeing actual service but one-third or one-fourth of the time.

The crushing character of these pilot charges was illustrated by many cases, and that of the schooner S. M. Bird is here presented as one illustration.

NEW YORK, January 17, 1906.

Hon. CHAS. E. LITTLEFIELD,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: On Friday last I stated before the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee that the Plant system paid about $100 per month for pilotage going in and coming out of Key West on their steamship line running in the foreign trade, approximately $3.50 per day, equivalent to $1.75 for inward pilotage and $1.75 for outward. As this statement was somewhat challenged by Captain O'Brien, although he admitted they had a reduction from the regular rates, but said he did not know to what extent, I decided to seek further information to corroborate my statement, and had Messrs. N. A. Benner & Co., a large concern of this city, wire their different agents at Key West as follows:

W. J. H. TAYLOR, Key West, Fla.:

Please wire, collect, if Plant's Line steamers coming from Habana and going to Habana, in and out Key West, takes pilots, and the amount of pilotage they pay. Do you know of any special arrangements they have? Wire fully.

N. A. BENNER & Co.

From whom the following reply came:

"Plant Line steamers do not take pilots either coming or going to Habana from Key West. Pilots have a special agreement with manager of P. & O. Steamship Company for thirteen hundred dollars per year, covering all their ships for pilotage.

"W. J. H. TAYLOR."

The following telegram was sent to W. D. Cash:

W. D. CASH, Key West, Fla.:

Please wire, collect, if Plant's Line steamers coming from Habana and going to Habana, in and out Key West, takes pilots, and the amount of pilotage they pay. Do you know of any special arrangements they have? Wire fully.

N. A. BENNER & Co.

From whom the following replies were received:

"Plant Line steamers from Key West to Habana, Habana to Key West, pay special rate pilotage thirteen hundred dollars year.

"W. D. CASH."

"Plant Line do not take pilots, but pay special rate mentioned.

"W. D. CASH."

I herewith inclose copies of the original telegrams sent and the replies received, which I desire that you file with the committee.

I inclose herewith the bill for pilotage of our schooner S. M. Bird, that was at Key West last October. Her pilotage in and out was $130. The value of the Bird and cargo was approximately $10,000 to $11,000. The value of the Plant steamer is approximately $500,000. My sailing vessel, going from an American port to an American port, was compelled to pay $130 for one trip, and the steamer valued at $500,000, engaged in the foreign trade, was compelled to pay for one trip less than $4.

I desire to further illustrate the excessive charges for pilotage by the following statement, showing the amount the American schooner S. M. Bird paid for pilotage from September, 1905, to November, 1905, viz:

September 21, 1905, at Savannah, Ga	$114.23
October, at Key West, Fla	130.00
October 28, at Port Tampa, Fla	87.75
November, at Gulfport, Miss	128.00

Making a total of $459.98. The Bird's pilotage charges in the foreign port of Habana were $32, as against $114.23 at Savannah, $130 at Key West, $87.75 at Port Tampa, and $128 at GGulfport.

During the time she was paying these pilots $459.98 the total amount of her earnings left for her owners was less than $350.

I also hand you bills on the schooner Harold C. Beecher, on a voyage from Pascagoula to Kingston, Jamaica, showing that the pilotage at Pascagoula was $96, and at Kingston, Jamaica, was £6 9s., equivalent to about $30. This vessel delivered 282,145 feet of lumber.

Gulfport.—Captain O'Brien has filed a telegram with the committee relating to the Gulfport pilotage, and so I herewith inclose you three pilotage bills on the Gertrude A. Bartlett, the first one receipted by John Lewis, treasurer, the bill reading: "Pilotage, as per agreement, $40."

If more data is required, I shall be pleased to furnish.

Very respectfully, yours,

FIELDS S. PENDLETON.

The evidence before the committee showed the abuses incident to the existing system and the gross discriminations against the coastwise sailing fleet practiced thereunder.

"Mr. PENDLETON. Now, I want to give you some facts which will show you that we have been up against this proposition for the last thirty-five years. Take a Clyde steamer that leaves New York and goes down to Charleston, then goes to Fernandina and Jacksonville and comes back to Fernandina and loads in Charleston and goes to New York. If my vessel does that, when she gets back she has paid between $500 and $600 pilotage. That is the discrimination. How can we go up against that?

"Mr. WATSON. Five hundred dollars or $600 for pilotage?

"Mr. PENDLETON. Yes, sir; and that when we did not require a pilot and did not desire one. * * * Let us take the Mallory Steamship Line that runs from New York to Brunswick and to Key West and Mobile and goes back to Key West and comes to Brunswick and then to New York. If my vessel was to go there and take a cargo in competition with them over that same line, it would cost me for pilotage over $800, carrying the same amount of cargo. * * *

"Mr. WILSON. Do you know of any case where a man has had the advantage of going into these ports without paying pilotage?

"Mr. PENDLETON. Without paying pilotage at all?

"Mr. WILSON. Yes; or a much smaller amount.

"Mr. PENDLETON. I showed you a case yesterday. I could give you twenty-five cases now from memory. I can give you six or seven cases which were furnished me by the pilots themselves at this one port. * * *

"Take the Ocean Steamship Company of Savannah, that runs in and out of Savannah from New York and goes from Savannah to Boston and New York. If my vessels ran on that route, it would cost me $150 a day, $50,000 a year, and the steamers carried 95,000,000 feet of lumber from Savannah last year. It is practically the same amount as the sailing vessels carried, and to New York they carry a great deal more, because to New York they have regular steamship lines. * * *

"Mr. HINSHAW. If this bill should pass, would a pilot still be required on the tug?

"Mr. PENDLETON. No, sir; the Government licenses them. The tugboat owner, of course, selects competent men, first-class men, because if they tow a vessel and get her aground they are liable for the damage they do.

"Now, gentlemen of this committee, if this is not discrimination against us, what is it? Congress took the pilotage off the steamers thirty-five years ago, and the sailing vessel has been compulsorily employing them ever since, to the extent that we have paid more in pilotage in that time than the entire fleet is worth to-day.

"Mr. HINSHAW. The steamers have no tugs?

"Mr. PENDLETON. No, sir; but the sailing vessels do, and consequently in going in and out of the southern ports it makes a double burden on us. We not only have to leave that money in the South, but we have to leave the pilotage there, although the services are not desired and are not required. * * *

"Here is another case at Gulfport. I went down there. I had paid them $128 pilotage, and I found another vessel there that was owned down South that was coming in and going out and was paying $40. Then there was the Mary E. Morse that came to Gulfport. She paid $140 or $150, and I found a British schooner, the schooner Lillie, going in and out of there, paying only $46.

"Mr. HINSHAW. Approximately the same tonnage?

"Mr. PENDLETON. The Morse is a little larger, but the draft is approximately the same.

"Mr. FORDNEY. What is the difference in the capacity of the two?

"Mr. PENDLETON. The Morse will carry 440,000 feet of lumber, and the other one was about 350,000. * * *

"Mr. FORDNEY. As between the vessel which paid $150 pilotage and the one that paid $40?

"Mr. PENDLETON. That was two other vessels. Theirs was the Gertrude Bartlett and mine was the S. M. Bird. Mine paid $128 as against their $40. The Bartlett carried 28,000 feet of lumber more than mine. The Morse paid $140, and the other vessel paid $46. Mine was an American vessel going from an American port to an American port and the other was a British vessel coming from a British port.

"Captain O'BRIEN. How do you know that was a British vessel?

"Mr. PENDLETON. She hailed from Nova Scotia. They can not be owned in the United States, except against the law.

"Mr. HINSHAW. Was that an arbitrary discrimination?

"Mr. PENDLETON. It is a discrimination they are making down there. We are not only obliged in this section to meet the competition of the steamers, but we have to meet the competition of both British and other foreign sailing vessels getting in and out southern ports at about one-fourth of what we pay.

"Mr. WACHTER. Did you make any investigation as to the reason why they charged you so much more than the British vessel?

"Mr. PENDLETON. I am not giving you this secondhand; I got it right from the pilots themselves.

"Mr. LITTLEFIELD. What reason did they give?

"Mr. PENDLETON. They did not give any. I offered to pay them $75 if they would take the vessel out, but they would not, and they libeled the vessel and the case is in the courts down there. The tugboat people said it was against the law to interfere with the pilotage business, and so I was compelled to put up $250 in cash, and they have my money.

"Mr. PATTERSON. Who was that pilot?

"Mr. PENDLETON. M. H. Scarborough, and ten others told me the same thing.

"Mr. LITTLEFIELD. That is the usual thing?

"Mr. PENDLETON. Yes, sir; L. N. Dantzler & Co. have seven or eight vessels, and they all do the same thing.

"Mr. PATTERSON. How many pilots are there at that port?

"Mr. PENDLETON. Twelve. Is there a pilot here from Gulfport? I was told by Capt. J. W. Shute, of the British schooner Blomidon, that he paid $44 in and out.

"Mr. HUMPHREYS. Do the pilots regulate this themselves?

"Mr. PENDLETON. No, sir.

"Captain O'BRIEN. They have nothing to do with it.

"Mr. HUMPHREY. Who does?

"Captain O'BRIEN. The pilot commissioner.

"Mr. PENDLETON. The pilot commissioner at this place, Mr. Hewes, told me it was an outrage and that he had never known anything about it until I came there a few days ago.

"I noticed in the statement of the Fred W. Ayer pilotage, $40, coming from Cuba or the West Indies or Colon, and so I sent for the vouchers and I found that we were paying $125 and $150 where the Ayer was paying $40. You say they are regular traders. There is not a man in the South nor the whole combine there who has had so many vessels south, taking them all together, as I have during the last ten years.

"Mr. HINSHAW. You must be a Yankee.

"Mr. PENDLETON. Yes, sir.

"Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Do you have any regular trade?

"Mr. PENDLETON. Yes, sir.

"I say that when your money or property is taken away from you without your consent and without rendering any service, it is robbery; yes, worse than robbery, because we are compelled to pay for a service that is never desired and not required.

"Mr. WATSON. Do any of your vessels ever require pilots in or out?

"Mr. PENDLETON. No, sir. I was going to come to that. I want to discuss this proposition further and have a little more time.

"Captain O'BRIEN. We all want more time.

"Mr. FORDNEY. I want to say, for the benefit of the gentlemen present, that some time ago I had made up my mind to vote for this measure. I then changed my mind and decided that I would vote against the measure, and I made the statement to some gentlemen here that I would vote against this measure, but after hearing Mr. Pendleton's statement about this discrimination, unless they can satisfy me that the statement is incorrect, can give me some substantial evidence that the statement is incorrect, I must support this bill."

* * * * * * *

"Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Is there any special arrangement at Key West with the Plant System, a foreign line?

"Captain O'BRIEN. I think there is.

"Mr. LITTLEFIELD. What reduction does that foreign line get?

"Captain O'BRIEN. I do not know.

"Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Did you not make the contract?

"Captain O'BRIEN. I made one contract, but they broke it.

"Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Under the arrangement that you made, how much reduction was the foreign line getting?

"Captain O'BRIEN. That is not a foreign line. It is owned by Mr. H. M. Flagler and other gentlemen who are not any more foreigners than the State of Maine people are.

"Mr. LITTLEFIELD. She sails foreign. What arrangement did you make with them?

"Captain O'BRIEN. I think we made it a fractional part of the pilotage.

"Mr. LITTLEFIELD. What fractional part?

"Captain O'BRIEN. I think it was one-half or three-fourths pilotage, but it did not last over a month. They broke that arrangement. I am not positive what the details were.

"Mr. LITTLEFIELD. You made it?

"Captain O'BRIEN. Yes, sir.

"Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Did they refuse to pay it?

"Captain O'BRIEN. I was not president of the National Pilots' Association at that time. They probably found that it was not within the law and that the law would not permit it.

"Mr. WILSON. Then what occurred?

"Captain O'BRIEN. They made another arrangement by which the Plant ships would carry the pilots up and down and to give them service, and that permitted the pilots to have only one pilot boat, when probably two would be required.

"Mr. LITTLEFIELD. It was a great deal cheaper system for the Plant System than for the coastwise line; in other words, it was a discrimination in their favor?

"Captain O'BRIEN. I do not know, when you take into consideration the service they give the pilots, because it would have cost the pilots so much more to keep up a pilot boat."

These bills show the discriminations.

Not only is this discrimination almost continually practiced under this system of the pilots, but in South Carolina at least the law itself discriminates against the coastwise fleets sailing between their ports and ports outside of the State; only expressly excepting in the following language all domestic commerce from the exaction of pilotage: "All coasters and other vessels trading between any ports within this State excepted." (Code of Laws of South Carolina, 1902, sec. 1633.)

We have been handed a letter from Captain Wells to Mr. Pendleton, which shows what not infrequently happens under the existing system:

NEW YORK, January 24, 1906.

Mr. FIELDS S. PENDLETON.

DEAR SIR: Knowing that you are deeply interested in reference to a bill now before the committee on "compulsory pilotage" against sailing vessels, I would like to recite to you a personal experience I had in conjunction with a Captain Kelly, of the British steamship Langdale.

My vessel, the American schooner Arthur C. Wade, was chartered to load a cargo of lumber at Chehaw River, South Carolina, for New York. As I have previously loaded several cargoes at Chehaw River, I am naturally well acquainted in entering the port of Chehaw.

Upon my last voyage there I arrived at the St. Helena bar December 24, 1905, 2 p. m., and found the British steamship Langdale anchored at the bar. The captain of the Langdale communicated with me and informed me that he had been there since December 23, 4.30 p. m., and had been flying pilot flags, and during the night burning pilot signals. I also had my pilot flag flying, but no pilot responded to our signals.

The captain of the steamer Langdale asked me if I was familiar with the port, and, as I was, he asked my assistance in getting his steamer into port, as he had been there since December 23, 4.30 p. m. As he had been there so long, and as I had been there several hours and no pilots in sight, the captain of the steamer said he would tow my vessel into the harbor with my assistance, he assuming all responsibility. I gave him my charts of the harbor and he proceeded with my vessel in tow. The pilots never arrived at the bar until Wednesday, December 27, 1905, postmeridian.

When Captain Kelly, of the steamer Langdale, went to clear at the custom-house at Beaufort he was arrested, and I was also placed under arrest, the charge being that we should not have taken our vessels into port without pilots. The captain of the Langdale, as well as myself, have made sworn statements before a magistrate at Charleston, S. C. We were released for the time being under bail.

Under the circumstances which I have stated, is it fair that our arrests were made and that we should be placed under penalties? Surely we waited and gave sufficient time for pilots to board our vessels. Were we to wait there for some indefinite time and place our vessels and lives in danger of a storm coming up? Is it fair that vessels remain outside of the harbor waiting for pilots from four to five days and then not have a pilot come on board?

I will gladly procure for you or the committee a copy of our sworn statement made at Charleston, S. C., before the magistrate, which furnishes a full detail account of the incident.

I remain yours, truly,

E. E. WALLS,
Schooner Arthur C. Wade.

The following is in the same line:

The EDITOR OF THE HERALD:

Will you kindly publish in your valuable paper the facts in regard to pilotage at Port Royal? I arrived off the bar on the 5th instant at half past 7 a. m., wind northeast, strong breeze, heavy sea on, and current running strong to the southwest. Seeing no pilots, I came in and hauled into the wharf.

Two hours afterwards a pilot came and demanded pilotage on the ground that he was on board of the Martins Industry light-ship, 3 miles to leeward of the bar. Other pilots asserted that they were out in their boat and would have reached us in an hour.

I refused to pay and was arrested, haled to court, and fined $100 because I had not complied with the law by waiting ten hours outside with a pilot flag flying before coming in. To stop further proceedings I paid the $31 pilotage claims and the costs of court, and the fine was remitted.

Shipmasters coming to Port Royal should know that they must wait outside, no matter what the weather conditions are, ten hours before they can come in, under penalty of fines or imprisonment.

R. O. PARKER,
Master Schooner Viator, of Boston.

PORT ROYAL, S. C., April 6, 1904.

The foregoing clearly shows that the system is not only "unwise," but that gross abuses are practically inevitable under it.

The Supreme Court of the United States has recently held (195 U. S., 345) that if the present system is "unwise" that "the remedy is in Congress, in whom the ultimate authority on the subject is vested, and can not be judicially afforded by denying the power of the State to exercise its authority over a subject concerning which it has plenary power until Congress has seen fit to act in the premises."

The fact that barges, steam towed, and which neither pilots nor anyone else can navigate without their towboats, are, nevertheless, taxed by these pilots for no possible service rendered is shown by the following letter:

BALTIMORE, January 19, 1906.

Hon. C. E. LITTLEFIELD,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We take the liberty of suggesting that we think your efforts to suppress the compulsory pilot charges should have the recognition and support of all those who have been imposed on for years.

We have a line of barges entirely dependent on tugboats for movement trading from James River points to New York, and notwithstanding the tugs have Government pilots aboard we are compelled to pay the Virginia Pilots' Association, a body which we understand is not even incorporated, a yearly fee of 10 cents per ton for the privilege of going and coming through the Capes.

We are writing our Representatives, Messrs. TALBOTT, WACHTER, and MUDD, urging them to stand by you, and hope before long to see the end of this odious custom, which, in our case particularly, is nothing more than a "hold up." The pilots render us no service whatever.

Respectfully, yours,

THE P. DOUGHERTY COMPANY,
THOMAS F. MCHUGH.

That this instance is but one of many is shown by the letter from the American Towage and Lightering Company, as above printed.

Hon V. H. Metcalf, Secretary of Commerce and Labor, strongly indorses this bill.

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE AND LABOR,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, January 3, 1906.

Hon. WILLIAM P. FRYE,
Chairman Committee on Commerce, United States Senate.

SIR: In reply to your letter of the 8th ultimo, inclosing S. 30, Fifty-ninth Congress, first session, "A bill to remove discriminations against American sailing vessels in the coasting trade," and requesting me to furnish your committee with such suggestions as I may deem proper touching the merits of the bill and the propriety of its passage, I have to state:

The passage of the bill has been recommended in the last eleven reports of the Commissioner of Navigation. (Reports for 1895, pp. 45–47; 1896, pp. 31–32; 1897, pp. 45–46; 1898, p. 62; 1899, p. 89; 1900, p. 60; 1901, p. 65; 1902, p. 64; 1903, p. 46; 1904, p. 45, and 1905, pp. 18–19.)

Without taking up in detail the arguments set forth in these reports, I have the honor to submit briefly the following reasons why I deem the passage of the bill desirable:

By the act of February 28, 1871, Congress provided that steam vessels in the coasting trade, when in charge of a pilot licensed by the Steamboat-Inspection Service, should be exempt from pilotage charges imposed by State or local authority. Sail vessels in the coasting trade, however, remain subject to such charges, which in many instances are very heavy, and, in fact, such charges are imposed in the States of Virginia, North and South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Mississippi, and Texas. Most States, however, have abolished this discrimination against sailing vessels. But the discrimination was created by Congress, and the relief should naturally come through an act of Congress.

The bill provides that to obtain the advantages of exemption from pilotage charges in the coasting trade the master or mate of a sailing vessel acting as pilot must be licensed by Federal authority in the same manner as similar officers on steam vessels are licensed. This requirement is in itself an aid to safe navigation.

While the natural development of marine architecture favors the increase of steam vessels and the decrease of sail vessels, the combined effect of the act of Congress and of the laws of certain States named hastens the decline of sail vessels, which furnish the officers required for steamers. The following table shows the tonnage of seagoing American steamers and seagoing American vessels, rigged with sails, on June 30, 1904, and June 30, 1894:

	1905.	1894.
Steam	1,242,611	647,024
Square rigged	355,237	595,714
Schooners	764,876	771,314
Rigged barges	247,707	62,821
Total sail	1,367,820	1,429,849
Total sail and steam	2,610,431	2,076,873

While seagoing American steam tonnage has practically doubled in ten years, seagoing American tonnage under sails has remained virtually stationary.

Congress has spent in recent years many millions of dollars in harbor improvements, which should have lessened the need of pilots and made navigation easier.

All tonnage entering and clearing the United States, in foreign trade, is subject to pilotage charges. Such tonnage has increased from 40,261,353 tons in 1894 to 59,967,985 tons in 1904. This increase of nearly 50 per cent in ten years should suffice, under all the conditions, to maintain the pilotage system at its full efficiency.

I have the honor to submit that the passage of S. 30 will be the most effective measure of any now before Congress for the maintenance of the American seagoing fleet under sail, and relieve it from a discrimination which each year grows more onerous.

Respectfully,

V. H. METCALF, Secretary.

If it were necessary to maintain this sytem of compulsory pilotage in these southern ports as a public service (and the experience of ports without it certainly indicates that it is not), it is manifestly an unjust and indefensible discriminaton to put the burden of supporting such a public service upon the weaker and individually owned part of our interstate carriers, the sailing vessels, and exempt their powerful competitors, the steamers; and the absolute absurdity of present regulations, especially as bearing upon safety to life and property, is shown by the fact that under present laws a captain, holding both a steamship and sailing vessel's United States license, may to-day take into a southern port a steamer drawing 20 feet of water and carrying passengers, without taking a pilot or being required to pay for one; while to-morrow, if he enters that same port with a sailing vessel drawing but half as much water, carrying no passengers, and being towed by a local steamboat whose master is an expert navigator in those waters, he must take and pay for a pilot whom he can not use, or pay for one, even if he does not bother to stop and take him on board, provided he is spoken by the pilot.

Free trade between the States is a fundamental principle of this Government. Any unnecessary tax upon it is a burden from which the public suffers and should not be allowed to continue, even though the revenue derived therefrom went to a State or municipality instead of to about 130 private individuals, as in this case.

The pilotage affected by this bill is, as a rule, in the control of a few favored men in each port, who, under the laws now existing there, retain the business to the exclusion of those who otherwise might compete and thus reduce the present high charges—charges which the evidence (p. 19) shows to be some five times as high as in ports not so controlled.

INSURANCE COMPANIES FAVOR IT.

How the insurance companies who take so large a part of the risks on cargoes and vessels affected by this bill, and who have no possible interest except to reduce the losses for which they must pay, view this measure is shown below:

CHARLES H. GROSVENOR, Esq.,
Chairman Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: House bill No. 5281, introduced in the House of Representatives by Representative LITTLEFIELD, of Maine, entitled "A bill to remove discrimination against American sailing vessels in the coasting trade," has been called to our attention.

As a considerable portion of our business is the insuring of American sailing vessels and their cargoes in the coastwise trade, we believe that the abolishment of compulsory pilotage on vessels, as covered by this bill, will be of no injury to life or property, and we hope that the bill will pass.

Yours, truly, R. B. FULLER, President.

CHARLES H. GROSVENOR Esq.,
Chairman Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We are pleased to express our approval of House bill No. 5281, introduced in the House of Representatives by Representative LITTLEFIELD of Maine, "A bill to remove discrimination against American sailing vessels in the coasting trade." We understand that pilotage on our coastwise sailing fleet is not now compulsory in many of the States, and can be and is evaded in others by vessels taking out yearly licenses. We are inclined to think that a vessel making or leaving port in tow to be as safe, if not safer, without a local pilot, and, in fact, believe that the abolishment of compulsory pilotage on vessels covered by this bill will be a good thing for the safety of life and property. Remaining,

Yours, very truly, EDMUND A. POOLE,
President.

OFFICE OF FIELD & COWLES,

CHARLES H. GROSVENOR Esq.,
Chairman Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We take pleasure in expressing our approval of House bill No. 5281, introduced in the House of Representatives by Representative LITTLEFIELD, of Maine, entitled, "A bill to remove discrimination against American sailing vessels in the coasting trade."

Pilotage on our coastwise sailing fleet is not now compulsory in many of our States, and can be and is evaded in others by vessels taking out a yearly license. We believe a vessel making or leaving port in tow to be as safe, if not safer, without a local pilot, and, in fact, fully believe that the complete abolishment of compulsory pilotage on vessels covered by this bill will at least work no harm to the safety of life or property.

Yours, very truly, FIELD & COWLES, Agents.

PROVIDENCE WASHINGTON INSURANCE COMPANY,
Providence, R. I., January 10, 1906.

Hon. CHARLES H. GROSVENOR,
Chairman Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: As an insurer of American hulls and cargoes between coast ports, we desire to express our opinion that the abolition of the compulsory pilotage law, in its application to this class of business, is a wise measure, and we hope that it will be done. We believe that it will not increase the loss of life or property.

Yours, truly,

J. B. BRANCH, President.

And it is specially significant that every insurance company which has expressed an opinion on this bill has been unqualifiedly in favor of the measure. Such protests as have been made by underwriters or marine insurance companies appear to relate to legislation of an entirely different character.

Some of the reasons why these people who understand the situation should hold such views and why life will be safer under this proposed law is shown by the following extract from the argument of Mr. Pendleton before the committee (p. 20):

"Now I come to a point of far more importance, the saving of human lives and property. Let me illustrate what I mean. Take a vessel that leaves Jacksonville, Fla. She comes out of Jacksonville and the barometer begins to fall, which means that a gale of wind is coming on. What does the captain do? Go into Fernandina, Brunswick, Savannah, Darien, Charleston, Port Royal, along the coast there, all harbors a few miles apart? No; he reefs down and goes off the shore. If the gale is severe and the vessel springs a leak, the crew become exhausted, and possibly the vessel is abandoned and the crew may be lost. What would he do in northern waters? When the gale comes on he will go into port and wait until the gale is over. I challenge a successful contradiction of the statement that one-half of the losses south of Cape Hatteras are caused by the master not having the right to go into a harbor the same as he does on the North Atlantic coast. Why, gentlemen, suppose we had a compulsory pilotage system in ports north of Cape Henry. What would you think of charging a vessel going into the harbors of Philadelphia, New York, Bridgeport, New Haven, New London, Fall River, Providence, New Bedford, Boston, Cape Ann, and Portland—and the 386 miles of Maine seacoast? If every vessel that went into that trade had to pay every time she anchored on the same basis as the pilotage in the Southern States, it would amount to more than the entire fleet is worth in one year. Mr. Chairman, if there is any part of this hemisphere that needs skillful navigation and where the master must have both courage and caution it is "rounding" Cape Cod in the months of January and February, heading into Boston Bay, facing a northwester blowing from the White Mountains 60 miles an hour."

That an appropriate remedy for this unjust pilotage system lies in Congress is not only stated by the court, but the power has already been exercised by Congress for the relief of one-half of the coastwise fleet. That one man should be taxed to maintain a "system" while his neighbor and competitor goes free is self-evident discrimination and is in no way relieved by any training or readiness for quarantne assistance. In fact, all of the suggestions about aid in the quarantine service applies almost wholly to foreign-going vessels. The fact that vessels plying in the foreign trade can and do compromise with the pilots regardless of the apparent State law; that by some secret arrangement pilots regularly make rebates to a foreign vessel while charging an American vessel of the same size more than three times as much as they charge the foreign craft, and that where compulsory pilotage does not exist, as on the Great Lakes, the business is most prosperous and cheap transportation secured to the people, all militates against this system. It is not surprising that the construction of vessels subject to this southern pilot tax has been steadily decreasing and has now nearly ceased. This is shown by the following newspaper extract:

THE YEAR'S RECORD—NOT ONE TO WHICH BATH CAN POINT WITH PRIDE.

The year 1905 was a most unfortunate one for Bath shipyards so far as the amount of tonnage built and launched is concerned, thereby making the year appear small in comparison with many previous years. There were but eight vessels built, all schooners, and their aggregate tonnage was 8,454, divided among the following vessels:

	Tonnage.
Alice May Davenport	1,144
Evelyn W. Hinkley	698
Orleans	758
Camilla May Page	688
Frances Hyde	739
Herbert D. Maxwell	772
Davis Palmer	2,965
Robert P. Murphy	697

The comparison in the amount of tonnage with previous years is as follows:

	Tons.
1905, 8 vessels	8,454
1904, 26 vessels	26,683
1903, 23 vessels	25,149
1902, 26 vessels	31,663
1901, 28 vessels	33,563
1900, 35 vessels	41,532

As a result of this cessation of building there are at least 1,500 ship carpenters in Bath alone that are now deprived of their usual employment.

The claim made by Captain O'Brien that vessels were earning large percentages on their cost and that Maine had practically a monopoly of this business, while not germane to the question, is entirely incorrect, and the statement of Mr. Pendleton made before the committee is proven by the illustrations here given:

Schooner Ellen Little, launched at Rockland, Me., in September, 1904, cost, $56,000; dividends first year as follows: December, 1904, dividend $601.12; April 10, 1905, $1,600; June 9, 1905, $896; August 1, 1905, $1,280; October 1, 1905, $1,120, making a total of gross earnings of $5,497.17, from which should be deducted the insurance, which, at 8 per cent (the regular rate), amounts to $4,480, leaving a balance for owners or $1,017.12 to cover interest and depreciation on an investment of $56,000, which is less than 2 per cent.

And the showing made by the schooner Katherin M. Monahan, launched at Mystic, Conn., October 18, 1904, is similar. Cost, $45,000; dividend January 10, 1905, $500; April 7, 1905, $400; June 13, 1905, $1,400; August, 1905, $600; October 20, 1905, $1,200, making a total of gross earnings for the year of $4,100, from which deduct the insurance at 8 per cent (the regular rate), leaving $500 net for owners on an investment of $45,000 to cover interest and depreciation, or a fraction over 1 per cent.

This statement shows the relation of pilotage to earnings for owners.

These vessels are owned in small pieces by individuals distributed in many States. In the Ellen Little there are over 40 owners, and in the Katherine M. Monahan there are 83 owners, nearly every State from Maine to Texas being represented in the above-named vessels.

With a few exceptions this great multiplicity of owners is characteristic of the whole coastwise sail fleet.

How unfounded have been the statements made regarding the necessity for pilots, and the great benefits secured to vessels employing them, is shown by the following from the hearings:

"NO VESSELS LOST FOR LACK OF PILOTS.

"Mr. PENDLETON. Mr. O'Brien said that there were 365 accidents on the coast, and led you to believe that they were all caused by the fact that pilots were not employed, although he was frank enough to state that a great many of them were outside the pilots' jurisdiction. Well, now, he forgot to tell you or to show you any particular case where a vessel had been damaged because there was not a pilot aboard. I challenge him to show one, but if he says to me, 'I challenge you to show where a pilot has damaged a vessel when he was aboard,' I will refer him to a case less than six weeks ago, down in his own neighborhood, within 100 miles of his own port, where the pilot ran the vessel ashore, stove her bottom and keel out, and the owners had to pay damages to an extent of almost half the value of the vessel. I refer to the schooner James Slater, at Pascagoula."

That the challenge of Mr. Pendleton to the pilots to name a single instance where a sailing vessel had been damaged because of the lack of a pilot remained unanswered, supports the view of the Wilmington, N. C., Chamber of Commerce, i. e., that when men are compelled to earn their money they make a business of it and better service necessarily results.

That these pilots do possess and actually exercise the right to sell the privilege of navigating United States waters regardless of the competency of the captain in charge of the vessel so licensed, is shown by the following:

"PILOT LICENSE FOR COASTING VESSELS.

"In pursuance of an act of the general assembly of Virginia, entitled 'An act changing the law in relation to pilots,' pilot license is hereby granted for the schooner called the T. W. Lawson, burthen 4,914 tons, and trading in the waters of this Commonwealth for one year from the date hereof and no longer, the sum of four hundred and ninety-one dollars and forty cents having been received by me.

"VIRGINIA PILOT ASSOCIATION.

"Given under my hand and seal this 11th day of February, 1905.

"O. E. EDWARDS, Agent,
"Per J. J. D."

The system of compounding for pilots' fees exists in Virginia and Georgia, and reduces the business to one of revenue alone to the pilots, as it licenses the vessels and proceeds upon the theory that the services of the pilots are not in any sense necessary to the vessel. In such cases it is simply an arbitrary tribute which the coastwise sail fleet is compelled to pay without receiving any benefit therefrom.

That is, here is a system under which an officer of one of these pilot associations sends out from his office to the several vessels annual bills for licenses and collects the money, which he then divides up among the pilots there, and no service is rendered to the vessel paying this money, and no investigation is made by the pilot as to the competency of the men in charge of that vessel. The responsibility of the pilot begins and ends with the collection and division of the money taken by them, and if by any chance one of these vessels should require the services of a pilot, she would be compelled to pay him the full fee exactly as if she had not already paid her annual tribute for her license.

And this license is of no use in any other southern port except at the one where issued. Outside of these States the vessel can not compromise, but must pay every time she enters or leaves the harbor.

And these licenses regularly issued by the pilots in the States of Virginia and Georgia demonstrate beyond all question that the vessels need no pilots there—the pilots by these licenses say so themselves.

That even the seeking of a port in distress to secure medical aid for sick seamen does not secure relief from the taxes of these pilots is shown by the recent cases of the Jennie Hulbert and Fortuna, among others.

The claim of the pilots that the shifting of the southern bars makes it impossible for any but members of their pilots' association to safely navigate those waters seems to be completely answered by the following testimony given by Mr. Pendleton (p. 18 of hearings):

"Mr. PENDLETON. That is the old question. Last year, or two years ago, you will remember that that question came up, and I went over to the Hydrographic Office and I brought over some charts of five years ago and of the present time, and when they brought up the question of showing how the bars had shifted we asked them to show where they had done it in five years. They did not do it. They were not able to do it. If you think that the bars are changing, send over and get the charts which were published a year ago and compare them with those of to-day."

No attempt was made to answer this statement in relation to the charts and bars.

The committee recommends the passage of this bill and briefly summarizes some of the reasons:

I. It removes unjust and oppressive discrimination against coastwise sailing vessels in southern waters.

II. It removes an unnecessary burden from interstate commerce for the benefit of the public.

III. It gives sailing vessels freedom to seek shelter in United States ports in time of need, and thus insures greater safety to life and property.

IV. It permits competent captains to navigate without charge the waters which they now navigate without aid from the pilot and waters which the licenses of the pilot, issued to the vessels regardless of their captains, show that any man can safely sail without assistance.

V. Free coastwise pilotage has proved a distinct success in the ports of Baltimore and Wilmington, as well as in all other ports where it obtains, and a benefit instead of the predicted injury to the safe navigation of those waters, and has not impaired the efficiency of the pilot system as applied to foreign-going vessels.

VI. Because the opponents of this bill admit that compulsory pilotage on coastwise sailing vessels will be done away with whenever their business is sufficiently profitable without it, i. e., the coastwise fleet is now taxed to maintain a system for the benefit of others.

[House Report No. 4090, Fifty-eighth Congress, third session.]

REMOVING DISCRIMINATIONS AGAINST AMERICAN SAILING VESSELS.

January 31, 1905.—Referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD, from the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, submitted the following report:

[To accompany H. R. 7298.]

The Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7298) entitled "A bill to remove discriminations against American sailing vessels in the coasting trade," having given the same careful consideration, recommend that it do pass.

The discrimination to which sailing vessels in the coasting trade are at present subjected was made by Congress in 1871 when it exempted steam vessels in the coasting trade from the compulsory employment of State pilots whenever such vessels are commanded by a pilot, duly licensed by the United States inspectors of steam vessels as a competent pilot for the waters into and out of which he pilots his vessel, an exemption that is still denied to sailing vessels when in command of duly licensed United States pilots.

Again, a sailing vessel in the coasting trade, when in tow of a tugboat, the latter commanded by pilots duly licensed by the United States inspectors of steam vessels, is required in certain States to empoy a State pilot, although the State pilot's services are entirely unnecessary, merely consisting of an order to the helmsman on the sailing vessel to "follow the tug," which, in fact, is the only thing it is possible for the sailing vessel to do when fastened to the tug. In fact, the tug is in charge of and legally responsible for the safety of the vessels being towed.

American sailing vessels in the coasting trade are only subjected to the compulsory employment of State pilots in the Atlantic States south of the capes of Virginia and in the ports of the Gulf States. In all other ports of the Atlantic, in all of the ports of the Pacific, and in the ports of the Great Lakes vessels in the coasting trade, sail and steam, are exempt from the compulsory employment of State pilots.

It can not be made too plain, in order to clear away the misconceptions that have gathered around the efforts that have been made to secure for sailing vessels relief from the discrimination imposed upon them by the act of Congress of 1871, that the bill (H. R. 7298) merely proposes to exempt sailing vessels in the coasting trade from the compulsory employment of State pilots, on condition, however, that competent pilots, so certified by the local inspectors of steam vessels in the several local districts that have been established by Federal enactment, are in command of such sailing vessels, or that they are being towed by tugboats that are in charge of duly licensed United States pilots.

The safety of life and property will be greatly enhanced by the passage of this bill. At the present time, because of the enormously high pilotage charges imposed upon sailing vessels by State pilots in the nine States south of the capes of Virginia, such vessels, when in stress, or in danger, or leaking, seek to remain at sea and face the danger of destruction of life and property rather than attempt to seek shelter in these southern ports, because to do otherwise would be to consume the entire gross earnings of the vessel and tend to bankrupt the owners. Doubtless much property and a great many valuable lives have been sacrificed in attempts made by the masters of sailing vessels on our South Atlantic and Gulf coast to weather storms rather than seek shelter in ports that exact pilotage tolls of an extortionate character for entirely unnecessary services, and in many instances without any services. On the North Atlantic coast, where the dangers to navigation are equally great, the situation is entirely different. Sailing vessels may, and frequently do, seek the shelter of our ports when injured, or in distress, or threatened by severe storms, starting out again when temporary repairs have been made or when the storm has passed, and having been subjected to no compulsory pilotage charges for entering and leaving the ports of shelter.

The great increase in the safety of life and property that will be gained by the passage of this bill will be understood from a careful understanding of the license system in vogue in three of the nine States that still exact pilotage fees from sailing vessels in the coasting trade, and this is very clearly explained in the testimony presented to the committee by Mr. Fields S. Pendleton, a New York sail-vessel owner, who on that subject said:

"Let me first explain the matter of the licenses issued to sail vessels by the State pilot commissioners, pursuant to State laws, in three of the nine Southern States that still impose upon sailing vessels in the coastwise trade the compulsory employment of State pilots. In the State of Virginia these licenses are issued to the vessel for one year, quite regardless of who is in command of the vessel so long as the fee of 10 cents per registered ton is paid. If the license is not obtained, then the vessel is compelled to pay full pilotage fees for every entry into and every departure from a port of Virginia. It must be clear that, the license being issued to the vessel and the vessel then and thereafter during the year being free from the compulsory employment of State pilots, in that State there is no necessity whatever for the employment of State pilots. This refers, of course, to Virginia alone. This is true for the reason, as I have stated, that a vessel using the same channels and sailing through the same waters, but bound for Baltimore or any port in Maryland, or to Washington, is not compelled to pay any State pilotage fee whatever when engaging in the coastwise trade.

"In North Carolina such licenses are issued to the vessel, good only for the port of Wilmington. In this case, also, it does not matter what kind of a man is in command of the sail vessel—so long as the license fee is paid, the vessel for the balance of the year is exempt from the employment of a State pilot. This must satisfy the committee that the conditions at Wilmington admit of the easy navigation of sail vessels into and out of that port without any aid whatever from State pilots.

"In the State of Georgia a vessel can procure a pilot license after paying an inward pilotage and then paying a fee of 25 cents per ton register and an additional fee of $3 for issuing the license. In the State of Georgia licenses are good only in the port in which they are issued. For instance, a vessel trading to Georgia ports would need a license at Savannah, Darien, Brunswick, and Satilla River, which would amount to four pilotages each year and $1 per ton on the gross tonnage of the vessel. From this it must be perfectly clear to the committee that in none of the ports of Georgia is the services of a pilot actually necessary, the license issued for each port taking the place of and doing the work of the pilot.

"But it must be understood that these sailing vessels are not running regularly to the ports of Georgia; they only go there when there are cargoes there for them to carry. It is an extremely rare thing where the same vessel will enter the ports of Georgia more than four times in any single year. They go to the ports of other Atlantic and Gulf States part of the time for cargoes. It might easily be, and it very often occurs, that a vessel does not again enter the same port in Georgia for which the vessel has procured a license.

"But the committee should remember that these licenses are not issued to vessels in and of the other six States in which the compulsory employment of State pilots is required on sailing vessels in the coastwise trade. As the vessels are trading to the ports of the other States quite as much as to the three States that do issue licenses, it will be apparent that the licenses only help in the three States, one-third of the number, where the employment of pilots is compulsory, and in one of the States, in Georgia, the licenses only apply to the particular ports in which they are issued."

Mr. Pendleton filed with the committee three of the original licenses issued to vessels in which he is interested, copies of which are appended:

[Virginia license.]

Pilot license for coasting vessels.

In pursuance of an act of the general assembly of Virginia entitled "An act changing the law in relation to pilots," a pilot license is hereby granted for the schooner Cactus, burthen 456 tons, and trading in the waters of this Commonwealth, for one year from the date hereof and no longer, the sum of forty-five dollars sixty cents having been received by me.

[SEAL.] O. E. EDWARDS, Agt.

Given under my hand and seal this 2d day of Nov., 1903.

[Savannah license.]

City of Savannah, State of Georgia—No. 513.

Pilot's license for vessel exclusively engaged in the coastwise trade.

In pursuance of an act of the general assembly of the State of Georgia, passed December 1st, 1886, amending the pilotage law of this State:

Permission is hereby granted by the commissioners of pilotage for the port of Savannah to the schooner Joseph W. Brooks, of Philadelphia, Pa., of the burthen of 729 registered tons, to navigate the bar of Tybee and River Savannah, free of compulsory pilotage, for twelve months from the tenth day of January, nineteen hundred and four. Expires Jan'y 10th, 1905, at noon.

Said vessel having complied with all requirements of said act.

JAS. M. BARNARD, JR.,
Chairman Commissioners of Pilotage.

Attest:
O. C. NEWCOMB,
Secretary Commissioners of Pilotage.

729 tons, at twenty-five cents per ton, $182.25.

[Darien license.]

City of Darien, State of Georgia—No. 69.

For vessels exclusively engaged in the coasting trade.

In pursuance of an act of the general assembly of the State of Georgia, passed December 1st, 1886, amending the pilotage laws of this State:

Permission is hereby granted by the commissioners of pilotage for the port of Darien to the schooner Cactus, of New York, N. Y., of the burthen of 456 registered tons, to navigate the Sapelo and Doby bars, and all the bars and inlets from Sapelo bar as far south as St. Simons and River Altamaha, free of compulsory pilotage, for twelve months from the fifth day of December, 1903.

Said vessel having complied with all the requirements of said act.

JAMES K. CLARKE,
Chairman Commissioners of Pilotage.

Attest:
T. A. STUBBS,
Secretary Commissioners of Pilotage.

456 tons, at twenty-five cents per ton, $114.00.

The issuance of the license to the vessel, of the character described above, carries with it exemption from the compulsory employment of any State pilot, quite regardless of whether or not a competent man is employed to navigate the vessel in the waters of the State or the port for which it is issued. The vessel is not subjected by the local boards to any examination, nor are those in command of her, in order to ascertain whether or not they are competent to pilot the vessel into and out of the waters covered by the license. The license, in fact, is a substitute for the State pilot. It is tantamount to an admission by the State legislatures, and by the boards of pilot commissioners, and by the State pilots, in the States in which it is issued, that the safety of life and property on board of sailing vessels engaged in the coastwise trade is not what is sought by those issuing the license, but that a fee from the vessel and a naked subsidizing of the pilots are the sole objects sought.

The bill (H. R. 7298) substitutes for this condition the requirement that the vessel must be commanded by a duly licensed and competent pilot, so certified by the United States local inspectors of steam vessels in the district in which the port is located, which local inspectors, for the purposes of examining applicants for such pilots' licenses and for the issuance of such licenses, stand to the United States as the boards of pilot commissioners do for the several States.

The bill (H. R. 7298) substitutes for a paper license issued to the vessel by a State, regardless of the competency of the master, a license issued to the master by the United States, certifying that he is a competent pilot for the waters he is permitted to navigate with his vessel.

Obviously this safeguards life and property, while the license issued to the vessel by the State entirely disregards the safety of life and property.

Underwriters, shippers, and travelers, and the people generally, aside from the interested State pilots, their friends, supporters, and sympathizers, must realize that the passage of this bill (H. R. 7298) is for the general good of all. They must realize that relief is also granted to such vessels as now are compelled to pay these pilotage fees when they are commanded by or in tow of tugboats commanded by duly licensed pilots certified as competent by the officers of the United States.

There has been shown a disposition to reflect upon the competency of the local inspectors of steam vessels, in their several districts, to examine applicants for these pilots' licenses. This tendency has been quite manifest on the part of the State pilots and their advocates in their statements before the committee at the recent and at previous hearings. The fact, however, that the masters and mates of all, or nearly all, of the regular steamships entering and leaving these southern ports in the coastwise trade have been examined by these United States local inspectors and given licenses certifying to their competency, and that these pilots thereafter navigate their vessels into and out of the ports for which they are licensed with safety and dispatch, must show that they are quite as competent as the State pilots. No complaint is made as to the injurious evasion of the law in case of steamers. Again, the tugboats that tow vessels into and out of these ports are licensed by the United States inspectors, and these tugboats are handled by men of great skill and dexterity, besides which the tugboats are responsible for the vessel property they undertake to pilot in and out, whereas there is no recovery possible to the owners or the underwriters through the loss of a vessel or injury to her through the neglect or incompetency of the State pilots. These facts tend to strongly emphasize the necessity for the passage of this bill.

In the great commercial ports of the North Atlantic sailing vessels are permitted by State laws to enter and leave without employing State pilots, except when engaging in voyages to and from foreign countries. The dangers of navigation have not been in the least enhanced because of the exemption of sailing vessels in the coastwise trade from the compulsory employment of State pilots in the ports of Maryland, Delaware, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, New York, Connecticut, Rhode Island, and Massachusetts. In the State of Maine there has never been any law compelling the compulsory employment of State pilots on any vessels, whether engaged in the coastwise or the foreign trade, and yet there is no more loss of life and property in that State, with its dangerous rock-bound coast, than there is in other States, proportioned to the amount of commerce conducted along its shores, nor is there any difficulty in procuring adequate pilotage for all shipping in need thereof.

As a matter of fact, the vast expenditures made by the United States Government for the improvement, and deepening, and straightening of these channels and harbors, especially on the southern coast, and the excellent charts also issued by the United States Government, together with the elaborate systems of light-ships, beacons, buoys, ranges, etc., render navigation both easy and safe. That is the principal object of the expenditure. In these expenditures for river and harbor improvement, running far into the millions, and aggregating close to a half a billion of dollars for the entire country, the nine States of the South that still exact pilotage fees from sailing vessels engaged in the coasting trade have had at least their due share. Their shoal harbors have been made deep, their crooked channels have been straightened, their bars have been removed, extensive and expensive jetties have been built and are being maintained, and the channels have been so buoyed and lighted, and so elaborately and completely charted, that it is an easy matter, in any weather, for a competent navigator to sail his vessel into and out of these ports with perfect safety. That it is done in the ports of the States north of the capes of Virginia, the stormiest part of the Atlantic, day in and day out, year after year, is the most conclusive evidence of the truth of this contention. It can not be reasonably asserted that what is so frequent and so common an occurrence in the ports of the North Atlantic States is a difficult and dangerous undertaking in the ports of the States to the south of the capes. But if it were either dangerous or difficult the licenses would probably never have been granted by the three States that have been named to sailing vessels, exempting them, for a year at a time from the employment of any local pilot whatever.

It is a fact, and especially at Cape Henry, that few if any vessels ever employ the Virginia State pilots to conduct their vessels into the Chesapeake Bay. Were all of the vessels that enter and leave that bay to require the services of pilots the number in existence would be quite inadequate. About all that the pilots do, therefore, at least for vessels in the coastwise trade, is to hail and speak them, in order that the fee may be exacted for pilotage services, should the vessel fail to have or to purchase, after entering the bay, a license or an exemption by way of tribute from the Virginia board of pilot commissioners.

As has been so frequently pointed out, two vessels, entering the Chesapeake Bay via the capes, side by side, one bound to a Virginia port and the other to a Maryland port, navigate precisely the same waters and at almost the same time. The vessel bound to a Virginia port must employ a State pilot or purchase a license for the vessel. The one bound to a Maryland port is entirely free from the compulsory employment of any pilot. The necessity is equally great in each case.

Vessels bound to the District of Columbia from sea are exempt from the employment of local pilots of any kind. The United States Government has not found that navigation is so dangerous or difficult as to compel vessels in the coastwise trade to employ pilots for the waters of the Potomac River, and such vessels, bound for ports on the Potomac, in the District of Columbia, are exempt, both on the Potomac and at the capes of Virginia, whereas vessels bound to Alexandria are compelled by the laws of Virginia to either employ a pilot or purchase a license.

Even under the laws of the Southern States, where pilotage fees are exacted of vessels in the coastwise trade, if the vessel manages to enter the ports without being hailed or spoken by a pilot, she is exempt from the payment of the pilotage fee. So it occurs that sailing vessels frequently remain at sea until nightfall, and attempt to enter the ports where the pilotage fees are required by escaping the vigilance of the State pilots. But this matter is carefully attended to by the pilots, who anchor their pilot boats at the entrance to the channel at the bar, sweeping the channel periodically with powerful searchlights, and hailing and speaking the vessels attempting to escape from their unnecessary, unused, and costly services. Such methods and procedure in the ports to the north of the capes of Virginia are quite unknown, and yet their vast traffic is conducted expeditiously, skillfully, and safely, without complaint or hazard other than inherent maritime hazards, that no pilot can give immunity from.

In these southern ports, where the compulsory employment of State pilots is still in vogue, it is almost the invariable custom for the sail vessel to employ a tugboat to tow her from sea to her dock in the harbor, and to tow her out to sea from her dock after she has secured her cargo. These fine ocean-going tugboats, costing in the neighborhood of $100,000, and in some cases even more than that, employing a crew of a dozen or more men, burning coal, and commanded by skillful pilots licensed by the United States Government officials, render their services for about one-half, in many cases for one-third, and in some cases for one-quarter the sum that is exacted by the State pilot who levies this unnecessary and expensive tribute upon the unwilling vessel. The State pilot is rarely on board of the sailing vessel for a longer time than the tugboat is fastened to her, and in such cases his duties are perfunctory and merely nominal—he merely directs that the sailing vessel shall follow the tug. A written note to the master of the vessel in such a case would be just as efficacious. Thus, for a service covering but a few hours, of no consequence or benefit whatever to the vessel upon which it is forced, a sum from $50 to upward of $100 is charged by the State pilot, according to the draft of the vessel that is compelled by State law to accept his services. If the tugboat causes injury to the vessel she tows, or the sail vessel is lost while in tow of the tugboat, the latter is liable for the injury or loss. But if the State pilot by reason of incompetence or negligence causes injury to the vessel or causes her to be lost, he is not liable for the damage caused, and neither owner nor underwriter has any recourse but to accept the loss.

The following newspaper item shows how vigorously the pilots contest the question of liability which is sought to be maintained:

PILOTS WILL APPEAL.

DECISION IN THE SANTUIT CASE OF FAR-REACHING IMPORTANCE.

[Special to The Washington Post.]

Judge D. Tucker Brooke, counsel for the Virginia Pilots' Association, which was held liable for damages caused by a collision between the steamer Santuit and the schooner George Churchman, while the latter vessel was in charge of Pilot Guy, will appeal to the Supreme Court from the decision of Judge Waddill.

The court ruled that Pilot Guy and the association of which he is a member must pay to the owners of the Santuit $3,175 paid by them to the owners of the schooner Churchman as collision damages. It is stated that the pilot associations of several States are interested in the appeal, the effect of which will be widespread if sustained in the higher courts.

NORFOLK, VA., January 30, 1905.

It has been explained to the committee that it is a rare thing for owners of sailing vessels on our coast to insure their vessels; the insurance rates are so high, and the net earnings of the vessels are so small, that if they were insured there would rarely, if ever, be anything left for the owner; so the owner assumes the risk. A few cases, showing what the comparative earnings of these compulsorily employed State pilots are, were brought to the attention of the committee. They are worthy of reproduction. Says Mr. Fields S. Pendleton, a New York sail-vessel owner:

"I recently had a vessel loaded at Norfolk whose pilotage was $64.40. She went to Charleston and her pilotage in and out was $206, making a total pilotage of $270.40. The owners had left on the voyage $07.06. In other words, the pilots got three times as much as the owner did. * * *

"Mr. DAVIS. That was for one trip?

"Mr. PENDLETON. Yes, sir; from Norfolk to Charleston.

"Mr. DAVIS. That is an exceptional case.

"Mr. PENDLETON. I am going to show you some others. The tugboat charge for that voyage was $65. It was the Waban, which is a new tug, which cost from $70,000 to $80,000, and which employs 11 men and takes all the risk of towing a vessel in and out of port, so far as accidents go. Her services cost $65, and the pilots, who stood there without any responsibility except to walk the deck and wear out their shoes, got nearly 333⅓ per cent more.

"Mr. WILSON. Was the $65 included in the $270?

"Mr. PENDLETON. The charge of the tugboat was $65. The pilotage at Charleston was $206, and at Norfolk $64.40, making a total pilotage on the voyage of $270.40. * * *

"The schooner Elizabeth T. Doyle recently went to Jacksonville. She had a pilot on board thirty minutes going in and forty-five minutes coming out, and on coming out the pilot said to the captain, 'Captain, there is no need of my going out with you; just follow the tug, and you will be all right.' * * *

"The schooner John R. Bergen since September has paid the following pilotage: September, pilotage in and out of Charleston, $206.

"Mr. LITTLEFIELD. That was in 1904?

"Mr. PENDLETON. Yes, sir; October pilotage at Norfolk, $56.40; November, pilotage in and out of Charleston, $206; December, pilotage in and out of Charleston, $184. The pilotage from September to December was $652.40.

"The CHAIRMAN. How much was that pilotage?

"Mr. PENDLETON. Six hundred and fifty-two dollars and forty cents from September to December. The vessel is now in Georgetown and has got to pay another pilotage in and out, making in all $752, nearly $800 since September. The owners received $1,000 dividend, and the pilotage is 65 per cent of what they receive, and there have not been any sails or anchors or chains bought or any repairs. * * *

"Mr. PENDLETON. * * * The schooner Laura went from New York to Charleston with coal at 65 cents per ton and had similar expenses. Her gross earnings on the trip were $2,246.65. On that voyage the bills were $1,934.10, and that left the owners $312.65.

"The CHAIRMAN. Who got the balance of the $1,000?

"Mr. PENDLETON. It was spent for loading, discharging, and the towage, and to pay the other different people employed on the voyage—the crew and the master.

"Mr. WILSON. How much was it for pilotage?

"Mr. PENDLETON. The inward pilotage was $86.61 and the outward pilotage was $86.61, making a total pilotage of $173.22. The net earnings were $312.55. So the pilotage was 55 per cent of the net earnings of the property. That included the vessel. Out of that $312 the owners have to pay interest, insurance, depreciation, the interest on capital invested, and other things.

"Mr. DAVIS. All that, however, was paid and still left net earnings?

"Mr. PENDLETON. No, sir; I will clear that point. In the amount I have stated there is nothing for the owners, nothing for insurance, nothing for interest, and nothing for depreciation. No sail-vessel owners figure anything for that; it is what they get as a dividend.

"Mr. LUCKING. What port was that?

"Mr. PENDLETON. That was at Charleston. That schooner on another voyage got gross earnings $2,235.73. The gross amount of the bills on the voyage were $2,119.41 and the dividends to the owners were $116.32. The pilotage inward was $81 and the outward pilotage was $98, making a total of $179. The owners had $116.32 to pay their interest, insurance, and depreciation, and the pilots had $179, $62.68 more than the net earnings of the vessel."

Here is the case where a powerful and valuable tugboat, employing eleven men, received but one-fourth the sum that the State pilot received. The employment of tugboats is not compulsory, and the competition between them keeps rates at a reasonable amount. The employment of pilots is compulsory. There is absolutely no competition, and the rates charged are extortionate. The pilots have an absolute ironclad monopoly.

Capt. W. W. Kimball, of the United States Navy, in charge of the light-house district, with his headquarters at New Orleans, La., says, under date of January 19, 1905:

"Pilots are all right as such, but the way the association has gotten control makes me tired. Supply and demand would arrange themselves all right in this case and no harm in protecting the pilot's interests reasonably, but this Gulf pilot business is the most outrageous monopoly whatever. I never took a pilot in any ship I commanded but once, and he put me ashore because I yielded to his local knowledge. It was not in the Gulf, I acknowledge."

Mr. Pendleton showed that the pilots own a tugboat at Wilmington, N. C., and earn double amounts. He said:

"The tugboats and the pilots at Wilmington are combined so that they get the pilotage and the same men get the towage. In other words, the pilotage at Wilmington on a vessel I had there last winter was $220, in and out, and the towage was about $150. So they got double; they got $370, because they used their steamer as their towboat, and in that way they made it count both ways."

The committee, in January, 1903, two years ago, had a similar hearing on a similar bill. At that hearing appeared Capt. C. B. Parsons, the president of the New York Maritime Exchange, which organization, with a membership of upward of 1,000, advocates the passage of such a bill as H. R. 7298. Among the many interesting and valuable statements at that time made by Captain Parsons was a brief table, as follows:

Pilotage on five schooners engaged in the southern coastwise business during 1902.

Name of schooner.	Registered tonnage.	Trips.	Pilotage.
Annie C. Grace	454	6	$720
Anna L. Mulford	518	6	840
Lizzie M. Parsons	571	6	538
Bayard Hopkins	212	8	476
John R. Bergen	564	4	690
Total	2,319	.....	3,264

Another member of the New York Maritime Exchange, Mr. F. V. L. Jones, submitted statements showing an expenditure during one year on each of two of his vessels, one paying pilotage fees amounting to $769.50 and the other paying pilotage fees amounting to $695.50.

Still another member of the New York Maritime Exchange, Mr. William A. Anderson, also submitted statements showing amounts of pilotage paid during one year on vessels belonging to him. In the case of the schooner Pasadena he paid during one year $1,176. The Pasadena is 500 net registered tons. On the schooner Laura C. Anderson, of 912 net tons, Mr. Anderson on one trip paid pilotage fees amounting to $562.52. This last-named case may better be explained by Mr. Anderson in his own words:

"She was loaded in Baltimore last March with coal. She had been out three days from Baltimore when one of the crew, shipped in Baltimore, was taken sick with smallpox. She went into Charleston, paid pilotage in, $115, and we employed a tugboat at $50. When she got into quarantine and they found this case of smallpox, they ordered her to Sapelo, Ga., to be quarantined. There were twenty cases of smallpox, I was told, in Charleston, and yet they sent the vessel out of that harbor to Sapelo at a great expense, when the man could have been taken off and the vessel fumigated. Of course we had to pay the pilotage out across that bar, $115, to get out, and then at Sapelo we had to pay the pilotage to get in. When we came back there was another pilotage fee of $115, and when we had discharged and loaded the vessel again with railroad ties, which were loaded for New York, we paid another $103, altogether $662.52.

"I paid that myself, and as I was there and kicked so hard and threatened to sue before I paid the last $115 inward from Sapelo, they cut it down to $562.52. * * *"

At the public hearing in 1903, Capt. J. Ed. O'Brien, the president of the National State Pilots' Association, when asked as to the number of pilots in the several South Atlantic ports where compulsory pilotage is still maintained under State laws, said that there were 10 pilots at Key West, 10 at Jacksonville, 12 at Fernandina, 15 at Brunswick, 20 at Savannah, 20 to 23 at Charleston, 42 in North Carolina, and 23 at Norfolk. The following question and answer illuminates the subject:

"Mr. LITTLEFIELD. How many pilots would be affected by this bill?

"Mr. O'BRIEN. One hundred and thirty."

The only justification for the unearned tribute levied upon the sail coastwise fleet is that the sum thus collected is necessary to maintain a corps of pilots required to take care of the foreign-going vessels. It is not claimed that the coastwise fleet need them or use them to any extent. On this point the foreign business of these ports and the number of pilots thus supported to take care of it—as compared, for instance, with Baltimore, which for the time employed per ship and the ground covered by the pilots—greatly exceeds any of the ports affected by this bill, is illuminating. Baltimore has 52 pilots. No one contends that they are not amply sufficient to take care of the business of that port, and their number is regulated by the law of supply and demand. Last year there were 715 foreign entries, with a tonnage of 1,338,888, one pilot in a year averaging nearly 14 vessels and a tonnage of 257,478 in a year.

In Charleston, from which some of the most vigorous opposition to this bill comes, there were 107 foreign entries, with a tonnage of 74,790 with 23 pilots, one pilot piloting at the rate of a little more than 4⅔ foreign-going vessels in a year, with a tonnage of 3,152, or one-third of the number and a little more than a twenty-fifth of the tonnage—that is, if Baltimore is a fair criterion—and, as it requires more time, Charleston has the advantage in the comparison. Charleston has at least three times as many pilots as the foreign trade needs, and the coastwise sail fleet is maintaining the unnecessary two-thirds, or 15 pilots, by a subsidy that is without consideration to them. At Wilmington, N. C., in 1903 they had 44 pilots. Last year the foreign entries were 80, with a tonnage of 83,196.

Assuming the number of pilots to remain the same, we would have one pilot during the entire year piloting at the rate of a little less than two vessels, with a tonnage of 1,891, or one-seventh in the number of vessels and about one-fortieth of the amount of tonnage, and the sail coastwise fleet is maintaining, in this instance, the unnecessary six-sevenths, or thirty-six pilots, by this naked subsidy, for which they get no returns. These, it is true, are the most extreme illustrations of the iniquity and injustice of the existing system. The data at hand relating to other ports are as follows:

Port.	Foreign entries.	Tonnage.	Pilots.
Brunswick, Ga	155	173,930	15
Fernandina, Fla	69	66,546	12
Norfolk, Va	238	403,830	23
Savannah, Ga	247	390,179	20
Key West, Fla	500	514,613	10

To compel a coastwise sail vessel to pay a pilot for a service that she does not need and does not receive in order that the pilot may be supported so as to render a service a few times a year to a vessel that does need and does receive the service is clearly the most offensive form of subsidizing one individual at the expense not of the whole country, but of a few other individuals who are endeavoring to keep alive one of our most languishing industries. But it is claimed—and we have no doubt properly—that an adequate system of pilotage is essential to the commercial welfare and business prosperity of the respective ports affected and the States in which they are situated, and that they ought to be allowed to say when and how the system should be regulated. If this be true—and we concede it may be—then the port and the State where it is situated are the real beneficiaries of this system. It is for their profit and benefit that it is maintained.

If, then, in order to have an adequate pilotage system the pilots must be subsidized for services they do not render, why should not those who are benefited by the subsidy and in whose interests alone it is maintained pay it? If North Carolina insists that a subsidized system of pilotage is essential to the business prosperity of Wilmington, inasmuch as she gets the value received, why shouldn't she pay the consideration instead of loading it upon a single industry which receives no value therefrom? The coastwise sail fleet can pilot itself, at least as well, if not better, than the steam coastwise fleet. They haven't the remotest interest in the pilotage of the foreign fleet. Why should they be compelled to maintain a pilot, say, three hundred and fifty days in order that he may pilot foreign-going vessels during, say, sixty-five days?

For 130 men's maintenance, practically in idleness to a large extent, the entire coasting schooner trade of the Atlantic and Gulf coasts of the United States is made to pay tribute. Hundreds of thousands of dollars annually are thus extorted from the pockets of these sail-vessel owners, and enough has been shown to disclose the practical operation of the entire system.

It was stated that it was not the vessel but the shippers of freight who really paid these pilotage fees, and the leader of the State pilots made the bold assertion that the shippers were not objecting to the system; that they desired the continuance of the compulsory requirement, and that it was really a few northern vessel owners who were objecting.

The following letter is of interest at this point:

JACKSONVILLE, FLA., January 21, 1905.

Hon. CHARLES H. GROSVENOR,
Chairman Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

SIR: The undersigned lumber manufacturers, shippers, merchants, and vessel owners of Jacksonville, Fla., respectfully urge the immediate passage of House bill No. 7298, introduced by Mr. LITTLEFIELD, of Maine, entitled "An act to remove discriminations against American sailing vessels in the coasting trade," as a measure of the utmost importance to the commercial interests of this city and the industries whose shipments are made through this port. The exorbitant pilotage fees have long been a useless tax upon our domestic commerce, from which we beg to be freed.

JACKSONVILLE, FLA., January 21, 1905.

Hon. CHARLES H. GROSVENOR,
Chairman Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We write to express our approval and to urge the passage of House bill No. 7298, entitled "An act to remove discriminations against sailing vessels in the coastwise trade."

We are residents of this city, own over $100,000 worth of shipping property, and are large shippers of coastwise lumber. My vessels all hail from Jacksonville, and have repeatedly come in and sailed out of this port without any pilot, but have been obliged to pay for their services just because the pilot spoke them outside.

I inclose herewith several pilotage bills which show that I paid pilotage, but the master preferred not to bother with the pilots. These exorbitant fees should be abolished in the interest of southern industries and the sailing vessels, whose main competitors are steamers which are exempt from these fees.

Trusing that this bill will promptly pass Congress, I beg to remain,

Yours, very respectfully,

WESTON & Co.,
H. WESTON, President.

The bills for pilotage referred to in the foregoing communication are as follows:

Weston & Co., owners of schooner Springfield to R. D. Gordon, Dr.

Apr. 8, 1904. To inward-bound pilotage of the schooner Springfield, inner pilotage, 9 feet, at $2.50 ..... $22.50
Outward pilotage, 16½ feet, at $3 ..... 49.50
72.00

Received payment.
MAY 30, 1904. R. D. GORDON.

Did not pilot vessel outward, but spoke the vessel only.

Weston & Co., owners of schooner Fairfield, to C. H. Wilson, Dr.

Apr. 6, 1904. To outward-bound pilotage of schooner Fairfield, 16 feet, at $3 per foot $48.00
Received payment.
C. H. WILSON.

Did not pilot vessel, but spoke her only.

JANUARY 24, 1905.

Hon. CHAS. H. GROSVENOR,
Chairman Committee Merchant Marine and Fisheries,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We understand the bill to abolish compulsory pilotage in the coastwise southern trade will soon be acted upon, and we wish to state that we sincerely hope the bill will receive earnest support.

Our firm has been in the shipping business since 1857 and was incorporated in 1901, and we to-day handle, perhaps, forty sailing vessels, nearly all of which at times trade in southern waters and our South Atlantic and Gulf ports, and our experience has taught us that compulsory pilotage in the South is entirely unnecessary and a heavy burden to our coastwise tonnage.

These captains trading regularly in southern waters are good pilots, experienced navigators, and with harbor charts and towage service do not require pilots; in fact, it is an unnecessary burden, and in our opinion does not add to the safety of coastwise navigation in these ports.

Nearly all New England waters are exempt from compulsory pilotage in the coasting trade, and we do not remember meeting with accidents when not having pilots in the past, but have lost vessels with pilots on board.

We have for years thought it advisable to abolish the compulsory pilotage in southern waters, and we hope now this bill will become operative, and we sincerely hope you will do everything possible to influence legislation in this direction.

Yours, very truly, WM. H. RANDALL, Secretary.

COASTWISE TRANSPORTATION COMPANY,
Boston, Mass., January 24, 1905.

Hon. CHARLES LITTLEFIELD,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. LITTLEFIELD: I note by the papers that the hearing of the compulsory pilot bill will be before the committee on Thursday the 26th. I will give you a statement of the amount we pay for compulsory pilotage on our fleet, as follows:

Thomas W. Lawson	$491.40
William L. Douglas	347.00
George W. Wells	274.00
T. Charlton Henry	214.90
Van Allens Boughton	190.50
Henry W. Cramp	144.80
Sagamore	122.00
Mount Hope	98.90
J. C. Strawbridge	75.80

You will note that this is quite a sum to pay each year for something that we do not get any benefit from, and it is quite a heavy tax on our vessels.

I wish to state further that all of our captains and mates have to go through a rigid examination before they can become captains and mates, and have to have certificates from the United States Government, and I can not understand why they should not have the privilege of taking their own vessels in and out of southern ports without either having to take a pilot or pay a pilot license.

I will inclose a pilot license that is issued by the pilots of Virginia and you can see how absurd it is. All light-houses, light-ships, buoys, and day marks are furnished and kept by the United States Government, and why should any State put a restriction and make our vessels pay for the privilege of navigating our own vessels in and out of these ports?

I hope and trust that you will be able to impress this upon the committee and upon Congress, and that they will pass an act to abolish this unjust tax on our American vessels.

Yours, very truly,
J. C. CROWLEY,
General Manager and Treasurer.

The license inclosed with the last foregoing letter reads as follows:

Pilot license for coasting vessels.

In pursuance of an act of the general assembly of Virginia, entitled "An act changing the law in relation to pilots," pilot license is hereby granted for the schooner called the J. C. Strawbridge, burthen 758 tons, and trading in the waters of this Commonwealth, for one year from the date hereof and no longer, the sum of $75.80 having been received by me.

[SEAL.] VIRGINIA PILOT ASSOCIATION.
O. E. EDWARDS, Agent.

Given under my hand and seal this 19th day of January, 1905.

The pilotage fees covered by the above itemized statement probably refers solely to those paid for the licenses issued to the vessels named by the Virginia Board of Pilots, and does not cover pilotage fees paid by any of the vessels in other southern ports.

It will be interesting, in view of what Captain Crowley says, to show in some detail what the United States Government has expended for the improvement of some of these southern ports. From the records of the War Department we find a compilation by Lieut. Col. C. W. Raymond, Volumes I and II, printed as Document No. 439, House of Representatives, Fifty-seventh Congress, of the following appropriations for river and harbor improvements in South Atlantic and Gulf States and ports, to and including 1900:

Virginia, total for State	$5,526,387.97
Norfolk Harbor, 1876 to 1898, inclusive, $1,542,500.
North Carolina, total for State	5,122,058.92
Wilmington, Cape Fear River at and below Wilmington, $3,383,228.92.
South Carolina, total for State	7,151,385.00
Charleston Harbor, 1852 to 1900, inclusive, $4,672,200.
Port Royal (Beaufort River), 1890 to 1896, inclusive, $31,000.

Georgia, total for State	$7,971,472.35
Savannah Harbor (from 1826), $6,743,563.58; Brunswick Harbor and outer bar, $265,000.
Florida, total for State	4,627,606.46
Carrabelle bar and harbor, 1896 to 1899, $20,000; Fernandina, $149,000; Key West Harbor, 1882 to 1899, $352,500; Pensacola Harbor, 1878 to 1899, inclusive, $720,000; Jacksonville (1852 to 1899, inclusive), $1,892,000, and Tampa (1880 to 1900), $340,000.
Alabama, total for State	6,783,102.22
Mobile bay, harbor, and river (1826 to 1900), $4,248,620.60.
Mississippi, total for State	1,464,244.80
Pascagoula (1827 to 1896), $518,100.
Louisiana, total for State	2,727,115.25
New Orleans (mouth of Mississippi), $10,689,869.75.
Texas, total for State	15,452,421.85
Galveston (1870 to 1899, inclusive), $8,528,000; Sabine Pass Harbor (1852 to 1900, inclusive), $3,444,750.
Total for all States above enumerated	56,825,774.82

Notwithstanding all of these expenditures, despite the great changes that have been made in the channels and harbors, the increased depth, the straightening of tortuous channels, the buoying, lighting, and marking, and the splendid charts prepared by the Government, and the ease with which vessels that have paid for a license may sail in and out of them, all indicate very clearly that the retention of compulsory pilotage on coasting sailing vessels has no other justification than a determination on the part of the several States concerned to arbitrarily exercise a power they have been permitted by Congress to retain to unjustly tax interstate commerce.

To show the extent to which these pilotage fees are levied upon sail vessels in the coastwise trade, below will be found charges in a few of the leading South Atlantic and Gulf ports:

Port, etc.	Pilotage from sea inward.	Total amount in and out.
Wilmington, N. C.:
16 feet draft	$77.25	$154.50
21 feet draft	167.25	334.50
Brunswick, Ga.:
16 feet draft	79.00	158.00
23 feet draft	195.00	390.00
Fernandina, Fla.:
16 feet draft	80.00	160.00
23 feet draft	138.00	276.00
Mobile, Ala.:
16 feet draft	88.00	176.00
23 feet draft	149.50	299.00
Pensacola, Fla.:
16 feet draft	80.00	160.00
23 feet draft	138.00	276.00

The abolition of this compulsory pilotage on sailing vessels in the coasting trade has received the indorsement and recommendation of successive adminstrative departments of the Government that have supervision over the maritime interests of the United States. The reports of Commissioners of Navigation are replete with argument, piled upon argument, year after year, bearing upon this subject and urging upon Congress the rectification of this grievous discrimination against sailing vessels. A few extracts culled from the reports of the present Commissioner of Navigation since and inclusive of 1895 are herewith appended:

[Extract from report for 1895.]

Pilotage is one of the heaviest charges upon navigation, and to exempt one description of American vessels in the coasting trade from that charge while imposing it upon another description of American vessels in the same trade comes close to ruling the sailing vessels out of the business and bestowing it upon steam vessels exclusively.

[Extract from report for 1896.]

The recommendation has the cordial support of the leading maritime and commercial organizations of the Atlantic seaboard, and its enactment by Congress is almost indispensable to the existence of our sailing fleet on the Atlantic coast in the coastwise trade, virtually the only trade open to it under present conditions.

The report for 1897 renews the recommendations made in 1896.

[Extract from report for 1898.]

The bill is limited in its operations and considers all possible danger to navigation. Only sail vessels of which the masters or mates have passed the examination prescribed for and obtained the license awarded to masters and mates of steam vessels are to be exempt from pilotage when no pilot is in fact employed. It will be a considerable gain to safety in navigation under any circumstances thus to require masters and mates of sail vessels to qualify as pilots.

[Extract from report for 1899.]

It is contended that Congress is the proper tribunal to which to appeal for a correction of this unfair discrimination—

First, because the Constitution vests in Congress the right to regulate commerce of which pilotage is essentially a feature, and Congress, by its first act relating to pilotage, reserved to itself the power to regulate it as occasion requires.

Second, because Congress, by exempting steam vessels from State pilotage charges, except for services rendered, itself created the discrimination which now calls for correction.

"Third, because Congress, by its liberal appropriations for improvements of the harbors in the nine States which still exact pilotage fees from coasting sailing vessels where services are not now rendered, has removed the reason by which such charges were formerly justified."

Report for 1900 repeated recommendations made in 1899 report.

[Extract from report for 1901.]

"The steady and large increase in the foreign vessels entering and clearing at our ports in foreign trade and our vast expenditures for river and harbor improvements to reduce the danger of navigation and render our ports more accessible to vessels of great draft, strengthen every year the argument in favor of the abolition of this discrimination. The situation created by law is one of peculiar hardship to men who, as a rule, are hard working and of small or moderate means, the owners of coasting schooners. Necessarily, large steamers, operated in connection with railroad systems, are acquiring a steadily increasing share of the coasting trade. The money spent in deepening, widening, and straightening channels and removing bars which these schooner owners, in the form of Federal taxes, help cheerfully to contribute, is principally for the benefit of the large steamer, exempt from pilotage, which the small schooners are required to pay, whether a pilot is employed or not."

The report for 1902 repeats the recommendations on this subject contained in the report for 1901.

The report for 1903, after showing the decline in our sailing tonnage under register, says:

"All competent nautical authorities agree that training on a square-rigged ship is necessary for the officer of a steamer. Such training is obligatory in our Navy. The great German steamship companies within the past few years have added several full-rigged ships to their lists as training schools for the future deck officers of their ocean steamers. Unless Congress or private interests soon follow this example the lack of competent officers for American steamers may soon prove a serious handicap to any development of our ocean steam merchant fleet.

"In the meantime the abolition of the discrimination in pilotage charges against sail vessels in the coasting trade is again earnestly recommended as an immediate and practical method of fostering American sail tonnage."

On this subject the report for 1904 says:

"Discrimination against sail vessels in the coasting trade.—Heavy pilotage charges or license fees are imposed on American sail vessels in the coasting trade in ports from Virginia to Texas, inclusive. American steam vessels in the same trade are exempt from such charges. The discrimination is severely felt, and it has undoubtedly contributed to retard American sail tonnage. While the charges are imposed under State laws, the discrimination arises from section 51 of the act of Congress approved February 28, 1871. Among other things that section (incorporated as section 4444 in the Revised Statutes) provided:

"'And no State or municipal government shall impose upon pilots of steam vessels herein provided for any obligation to procure a State or other license in addition to that issued by the United States, nor other regulation which shall impede such pilots in the performance of their duties as required by this act; nor shall any pilot charges be levied by any such authority upon any steamer piloted as herein provided.'

"When this act was passed, thirty-three years ago, the inspection system applied only to steam vessels, and Congress may have deemed steam vessels deserving of the special encouragement involved in the exemption from State pilotage charges. On June 30, 1871, our enrolled tonnage comprised 903,543 tons steam and 1,901,731 tons sail. On the 30th of last June it comprised 3,004,928 tons steam and 2,278,861 tons sail. Steam has increased over 200 per cent, sail only 20 per cent, in enrolled tonnage. Since 1898 the Government inspection system has been extended so as partially to include the sail fleet. Such burdens as the inspection system may entail have been imposed on the sail fleet. The corresponding benefits remain to be bestowed by Congress. In the reports of the Bureau for some years past arguments for the removal of this discrimination have been set forth at some length. (Report for 1895, pp. 45–47; 1896, pp. 31–32; 1897, pp. 45–46; 1898, p. 62; 1899, p. 89; 1900, p. 60; 1901, p. 65; 1902, p. 64; 1903, p. 46.)

"The conditions of foreign trade afford only steadily diminishing opportunities for American sailing vessels, and the sail fleet must more and more be confined to domestic transportation. The sail fleet is a necessity to the maintenance of a reserve personnel for national defense. As an original proposition it seems that Congress could well enact a law giving to sail vessels, when piloted by officers whose competency has been tested by Federal examination, exemption from State pilotage charges. It is the best form of relief practicable."

The considerations hereinbefore set out in detail amply justify these recommendations. A great amount of time and energy has been spent, and especially of late, in devising ways and means for the rescue of our merchant marine from elimination as an appreciable factor in our commerce. As to the desirability of that end there is a universal consensus of opinion. As to the proper and adequate means to be employed there is a decided difference of opinion. Here is an opportunity to afford some needed relief to certainly not the least deserving branch of that marine.

All who believe in equal rights to all and special privileges to none should join in the support of this bill.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask, on behalf of all who have spoken on this subject, leave to extend remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I would like five minutes longer.

Mr. SHERLEY. That is hardly a fair request, and I shall have to object to it.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I did not suppose my time had so nearly expired or I would not have yielded to the interruptions. I ask unanimous consent that I may have five minutes more.

Mr. SHERLEY. Under the plain stipulation, I feel it my duty to object.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill to its final passage.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MAYNARD) there were—ayes 127, noes 116.

So the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 109, nays 165, answered "present" 6, not voting 103, as follows:

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts with Mr. BYRD.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas with Mr. FITZGERALD.

Mr. ANDREWS with Mr. BOWIE.

For the session:

Mr. VAN WINKLE with Mr. MCDERMOTT.

Mr. SHERMAN with Mr. RUPPERT.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded. [Applause.]

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I move to reconsider the last vote, and to lay that motion on the table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky moves to reconsider the vote, and to lay that motion on the table.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I now renew my motion that leave to print be given those who spoke upon the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that gentlemen who spoke upon this measure may have leave to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. MANN. Upon the subject-matter?

Mr. SHERLEY. Why, of course.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. BRUMM, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence until Tuesday next on account of important business.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bill of the following title:

S. 1804. An act providing for the use of certified checks to secure compliance with proposals and contracts for naval supplies.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

By unanimous consent, the Committee on the District of Columbia was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 20992) to authorize the paving of Twenty-third street NW., between S and U streets, and the same was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly (at 5 o'clock p. m.) the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings filed by the court in the case of Mary W. Littell, widow of William J. Littell, against The United States—to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings filed by the court in the case of Ella J. Vermillion, daughter and heir at law of Zachariah A. Morgan, deceased, against The United States—to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings filed by the court in the case of D. W. Poor, son and heir at law of James A. Poor, deceased, against The United States—to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a letter from the Secretary of the Navy submitting an estimate of appropriation for printing and binding for the Navy Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the secretary of the board of naval officers appointed under act of March 3, 1905, submitting report of the board as to cost of armor plate and armor plant—to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a report of a joint committee of the Treasury and Post-Office Departments in relation to the destruction of certain papers used in the money-order department—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a letter from the Secretary of the Interior submitting an estimate of appropriation for survey and subdivision of Indian reservations and allotment of lands in severalty—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a letter from the Secretary of the Interior submitting an estimate of additional appropriation for the work of the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a letter from the secretary of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia submitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the public schools of the District—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Comptroller of the Currency, transmitting his report for the year ended October 31, 1906—to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a letter from the Secretary of the Interior submitting an estimate of appropriation for contingent expenses of land offices—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Librarian of Congress, transmitting his annual report and the report of the Superintendent of the Library Building and Grounds for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1906—to the Committee on the Library.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an abstract of the official emoluments of officers in the customs service received by them during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1906—to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting reports of inspections of disbursements and transfers by officers of the Army—to the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department.

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report of examination of Pearl River from the mouth to Rock River, Mississippi—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report of examination of Long Rock, Echo Bay, New York—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report of examination of Upper Cache River, Arkansas—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report of examination and survey of St. Lawrence River near Thousand Island Park, New York—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report of examination of New London Harbor, Connecticut—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report of examination of Pearl River, Mississippi—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report of examination of Great Harbor, Culebra Island, Porto Rico—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report of examination of Pentwater Harbor, Michigan—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report of examination of anchorage basin at Gulfport channel, therefrom to the roadstead at Ship Island and of Ship Island Pass, and survey of Ship Island Pass, Mississippi—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of War, submitting certain modifications of the annual estimates for transportation of the Army, and submarine mines—to the Committees on Appropriations and Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of War, submitting abstract of proposals received during the fiscal year ended June 3, 1906, for materials and labor in connection with works under the Engineer Department—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a certificate from the governor and secretary of state of New Mexico showing the result of the election in that Territory on November 6, 1906, on the subject of joint statehood with Arizona—to the Committee on the Territories, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the decisions filed by the court in dismissing the cases of William D. Long and Lucy L. Breckenridge, heirs of Stephen H. Long, and sundry other cases against the United States—to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings filed by the court in the case of Elias Emmert, administrator of estate of Samuel Emmert, against The United States—to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings filed by the court in the case of William H. Brown against The United States—to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings filed by the court in the case of Martha E. Conklin against The United States—to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings filed by the court in the case of William Reading against The United States—to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings filed by the court in the case of Mary E. Barrows against The United States—to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings filed by the court in the case of John W. Dixon against The United States—to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, December 7, 1906.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move that when the House adjourn to-day it be to Monday next.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

CALL OF COMMITTEES.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will proceed with the call of committees.

Mr. LACEY (when the Committee on the Public Lands was called). Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 15335) for the protection of game animals, birds, and fishes in the Olympic Forest Reserve of the United States, in the State of Washington.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States is hereby authorized to designate such area in the Olympic Forest Reserve, in the State of Washington, not exceeding 750,000 acres, as should, in his opinion, be set aside for the protection of game animals, birds, and fishes therein, and as a breeding place therefor.

SEC. 2. That when such area has been designated as provided for in section 1 of this act, hunting, trapping, killing, capturing, or pursuing game animals, birds, and fish, upon the lands and within the waters of the United States, within the limits of said area, shall be unlawful, and any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and shall, upon conviction in any United States court of competent jurisdiction, be fined in a sum not exceeding $1,000 and be imprisoned for a period not exceeding one year, in the discretion of the court.

SEC. 3. That it is the purpose of this act to protect from trespass the public lands of the United States and the game animals, birds, and fish which may be thereon, and not to interfere with the local game laws as affecting private or State lands.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill introduced by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] authorizing the designation of a portion of the Olympic Forest Reserve as a game preserve, in addition to its present use as a forest reserve. There is in this particular locality the only remains of a herd of elk.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order against this bill.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] rise?

Mr. PAYNE. I rise for the purpose of making a point of order that this bill can not come in under this order, that it is not properly on the House Calendar. If I had understood the bill, I could have made the point of order before. As I understand the gentleman, it proposes to change a reservation, and the point of it is to appropriate for a game reserve instead of a forest reserve. Of course, incidentally, it requires officials, game wardens, constables, and all that sort of thing, but it changes the nature of the reservation—appropriates it to a new use.

Mr. LACEY. In the first place, Mr. Speaker, the objection comes too late. In the second place, there is no appropriation of public property and there is no creation of any charge upon the Treasury. There is no provision in the bill for the payment of a game warden or anybody else. It authorizes the issuance of a proclamation declaring that a portion of this reserve may be treated as a game reserve. That is all, and nothing more. There is no appropriation either directly or indirectly involved in it. The effect of it would be to enable the Executive to preserve the remains of an elk herd, which is all that is left to-day on the Pacific coast, except a small herd that has recently been transferred at the expense of the Government from a private reserve in southern California to a forest reserve in that locality.

Mr. PAYNE. What does the gentleman say as to the change in the appropriation in public lands?

Mr. LACEY. It is not an appropriation at all. It is simply a reservation for an additional public use, not for a private one. It is not parting with the property in any way whatever, any more than it would be declared that in the District of Columbia there should be a closed season during a certain portion of the year as to game.

Mr. PAYNE. If that is correct, then why could not the Congress under this order say it should be used for an army reservation of a military post? Certainly the gentleman then would say it was obnoxious to the rule and subject to the point of order.

Mr. LACEY. The establishment of a military post of necessity, Mr. Speaker, involves an expenditure. The mere reservation of land for a public use is not an appropriation. It is just the opposite of one. It is a retention and not an appropriation of the property.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] makes the point of order upon this bill——

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, clause 3, Rule XXIII——

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that it should first be considered in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY]. The gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] makes the point of order that this bill should be on the Union Calendar rather than on the House Calendar. In other words, that it should be considered in the Committee of the Whole, as the Chair understands.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, suppose we pass a law creating a new statutory offense. It necessarily follows that for a commission of that offense arrests may be made, the grand juries may indict; but it does not follow at all that that involves a charge on the Treasury, and that a bill of that kind should be considered in the Committee of the Whole. This bill simply authorizes the issuance of an Executive order, which will forbid the killing of game on a certain locality of the public land. It becomes thus subject to an Executive order. It makes no additional provision or appropriation of the property. We have to-day provisions of law forbidding the cutting of timber. It does not follow that because you have a law forbidding the cutting of timber that a modification of that law or the reservation of other lands for timber purposes that there necessarily follows an appropriation or charge on the Treasury. On the contrary, it is a retention of the property belonging to the Government, and it is not an appropriation that is involved in a bill of this kind. The fact that crimes may be committed in this locality and these crimes may involve some expense indirectly in the courts, and thus involve a charge on the public Treasury, would not bring it within the meaning of the rule.

The rule under which this point of order is made is paragraph 3 of Rule XXIII:

All motions or propositions involving a tax or charge upon the people—

And this is not a tax or charge—

all proceedings touching appropriations of money, or bills making appropriations of money or property, or requiring such appropriation to be made, or authorizing payments out of appropriations already made, or releasing any liability to the United States for money or property, or referring any claim to the Court of Claims, shall be first considered in a Committee of the Whole, and a point of order under this rule shall be good at any time before the consideration of a bill has commenced.

Now, consideration of the bill has already commenced. The "gentleman from Iowa," in charge of the bill, had already begun to debate the bill when the motion was made. It is too late, in the first place; and if not too late, there is no foundation for the objection in any event.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman inform us what is the method by which a game reservation is preserved?

Mr. LACEY. That depends wholly and entirely upon such legislation as Congress may enact. This forbids the killing of game within a certain locality on the public domain.

Mr. MANN. You refer to it as a game preserve?

Mr. LACEY. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Is there any method by which the game reserves are to be preserved?

Mr. LACEY. The bill does not use that term. This is simply a bill "for the protection of game animals, birds, and fishes in the Olympic Forest Reserve." There is no method now provided by law which would involve any charge upon the Government except the enforcement of the criminal law. This is a bill for the protection of game in the Olympic Forest Reserve. That is all.

Mr. MANN. Is there any method provided by law outside of the criminal statutes which would require, if the bill should become law, any officer of the Government to protect the animals in this forest reserve?

Mr. LACEY. Only to the extent that to-day we have public officers to protect forest reserves and other property of the United States. It becomes their duty to enforce the laws, whatever they may be, in all the public domain of the United States. Now, if we provide against setting out fire, that, of course, necessarily would fall upon the officers now in charge to protect the public domain.

Mr. MANN. That is an unfortunate illustration, because, necessarily, that would have to go to the Union Calendar.

Mr. LACEY. Not at all. If so, then we could not pass a criminal law of any kind which would not go to the Union Calendar, because it might cause an expenditure before the grand jury for any offense that might be committed under it.

Mr. MANN. If it requires a forest reserve to be protected against fire, it would require an expenditure of money and the employment of officials. But this bill might not.

Mr. LACEY. The gentleman does not understand. Suppose that by law we prohibit the setting out of fires between the month of March and the month of June. We pass a law prohibiting the setting out of fires between these two periods. Now, to set out fires between those two periods becomes a crime, and it becomes the duty of the officer of the Government now in existence to enforce the law. Does it follow, when you have created a statutory offense, that therefore you create a charge on the Treasury? If so, all legislation hereafter must go to the Committee of the Whole if it involves any change in our criminal law or the creation of an offense.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. LACEY. Certainly.

Mr. MONDELL. Is it not a fact that at the present time the duty of protecting the game in this region devolves upon the State officials under the State game law, and this bill creates a new class of duties and would place a new set of responsibilities upon Federal officials, and therefore involves, necessarily, an expenditure for the care of game being at this time now entirely dependent upon State officials under State laws?

Mr. LACEY. The care of game under the State game laws is, of course, enforced by the State authorities and by appropriations from the State treasury or from county treasuries, as the case may be; but merely to forbid the killing of seals during a closed season or merely to forbid the killing of game in a certain area does not involve an appropriation in any sense of the word, any more than the creation of any other offense under the laws of the United States would do so.

Mr. HEPBURN. It simply imposes certain new duties upon officials now in existence, that is all.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is prepared to rule. This bill authorizes the President to designate such area in the Olympic Forest Reservation, in the State of Washington, not exceeding 750,000 acres, as should in his opinion be set aside for the protection of game animals, birds, and fishes therein, and as a breeding place therefor.

Section 2 provides the penalty for hunting, trapping, or otherwise destroying the game upon the reservation. Section 3 declares the purpose of the act to protect from trespass the public lands of the United States, and the game animals, birds, and fishes which may be therein, and so forth. It seems clear to the Chair that the very object of this legislation is to devote that 750,000 acres of land to a use to which it is not now devoted, namely, the preservation of game.

It is not necessary, however, for the Chair to hold that the provisions in the bill, under the rules of the House, require its consideration in Committee of the Whole House as affecting the property of the Government. If the point of order had been made in apt time, the Chair would rule one way or the other; but the gentleman from Iowa says truly that after the bill was read he had taken the floor for debate and had proceeded to debate; so that the point of order, whatever might have been the opinion of the Chair in the premises, comes too late.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield either to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] or to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. CUSHMAN]. I see the gentleman from Washington [Mr. CUSHMAN] is present, and I yield to him. I will ask him to tell us something about the number of elk remaining there. I know it is a matter concerning which he has more detailed information than I have.

The SPEAKER. How much time does the gentleman yield?

Mr. LACEY. I yield to him such time as he may require.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa yields to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. CUSHMAN. Mr. Speaker, this bill, prepared by my colleague [Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington], seeks to create out of a portion of what is known as the Olympic Forest Reserve, in our State, a game preserve. To be exactly correct, this bill, if passed, would not create this game preserve, but its passage would authorize the President of the United States to set aside a portion of this present forest reserve as a game preserve. It goes without saying that I favor this bill, and that its passage is desired by the people of the State of Washington.

I will very briefly outline the situation in the State of Washington to which this bill applies:

In the northwestern portion of the State of Washington is a great peninsula known as the Olympic Peninsula. This peninsula is bounded on the west by the Pacific Ocean, on the north by the Straits of Juan De Fuca, and on the east by Puget Sound. This peninsula is about 75 or 80 miles in length from north to south and of about that same width from east to west. This peninsula is to a certain extent separated by natural barriers from the rest of the State. In its very center rises the great Olympic Range of snow-capped mountains. This entire peninsula is covered with a dense growth of native timber, and splendid streams run from these mountains toward the four points of the compass.

Inasmuch as this peninsula is somewhat difficult of access and rugged in contour and densely wooded, very few settlers and farmers have made their homes therein. No more ideal resort for wild game ever existed than this region affords, and it abounds in all the wild game native to that region and climate, including elk and deer, bear and cougar, grouse and pheasants, while all the numerous streams and lakes are filled with trout.

A number of years ago, in 1897, a very large portion—the central portion—of this peninsula was created into a United States forest reserve. When first created, that forest reserve contained about 2,594,240 acres. Afterwards, in the year 1901, certain of those lands were eliminated, leaving the present area of this forest reserve 1,466,880 acres.

This bill proposes to give the President of the United States authority to set aside a portion, not exceeding about one-half, of this area as a game preserve "for the protection of game animals, birds, and fishes therein, and as a breeding place therefor." And after the President has designated such an area as a game preserve, hunting, trapping, and fishing are prohibited within that area.

The conditions that exist in this region amply justify the passage of this bill. And there is nothing new in this character of legislation. In the year 1904 the Wichita Mountain Forest Reserve, in Oklahoma, was made a game preserve for protecting the small game animals that inhabit that region.

Within the last week the President of the United States, by virtue of authority vested in him by a bill similar to the one we are now considering, set aside a portion of the Grand Canyon Forest Reserve, in Arizona, as a game preserve.

Therefore I am free to assert that the passage of this bill is justified, first, because the conditions existing in my State justify this legislation; and, second, because there is abundant precedent for the passage of this bill.

While this bill does not specifically designate this fact, it is the intention by the passage of this bill to protect the herd of wild elk that remain in that locality.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. CUSHMAN. Yes.

Mr. TAWNEY. How do you propose to protect the elk or the game in the preserve without a game warden and without policemen and inspectors and all the rest of the necessary service?

Mr. CUSHMAN. In answer to the gentleman, I will say that under the present law and the regulations of the Government there are a certain number of forest-reserve rangers and supervisors whose business it is to look after these forest reserves. In addition to the duties which they now perform they would simply have the additional duty of helping to enforce the law created by the passage of this bill for the protection of the game.

Mr. TAWNEY. How many more would be required to perform that service?

Mr. CUSHMAN. Well, I can't tell that. No man can tell. In my judgment it would be wise to have more men in the forest service in my State than are there now. But those things are details which can and will be settled by experience after this game preserve is created. The first step, necessarily, is the creation of the game preserve, and the details can and will be arranged later. In my judgment the moral effect of the passage of this bill making it unlawful to kill or take game in that locality would add immensely——

Mr. TAWNEY. But it would not be effective unless you had men there to enforce the prohibition of the law.

Mr. CUSHMAN. I do not agree entirely with that reasoning. It is not necessary to have a Government agent or a Government detective present on every foot of the public domain in order to enforce the law. The vast majority of the American people, when they have knowledge of what the law is, bow in obedience to its decrees. Now, when the fact becomes known——

Mr. TAWNEY. That is not the case when they want to kill an elk.

Mr. CUSHMAN. I do not know how it is in the gentleman's own State, but we have a very law-abiding class of people in the community in which I live; and it is, as I said, in my judgment, true that the very passing of this bill creating a game preserve there for the purpose of protecting these noble animals will, in itself, have a great moral effect.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman from Washington yield?

Mr. CUSHMAN. Certainly.

Mr. MONDELL. Are there no State game laws in the State of Washington affecting the taking or killing of elk?

Mr. CUSHMAN. Oh, yes. Just a moment or two ago I sent a page boy to the Library to bring me the Washington State laws, and the volume has just reached my desk. The last session of the Washington State legislature (act of March 13, 1905) passed a game law for our State, one section of which makes it unlawful to hunt or kill any elk within the State of Washington prior to the year 1915—that is, for about ten years after the passage of the act. And the same Washington State law also provides that after the year 1915 that elk shall only be killed in that State between the 15th day of September and the 1st day of November each year. And that no person during the season when it is lawful to kill elk shall kill more than one male elk. With the permission of the House, I will include with my remarks section 7 of the Washington State game law, which covers this elk question:

SEC. 7. That after the passage of this act and until October 1, 1915, it shall be unlawful to hunt, pursue, capture, or kill any of the elk (Cervus alces, or Cervus canadensis) within the State of Washington. After 1915 it shall be unlawful to hunt, pursue, capture, or kill any of the elk (Cervus alces, or Cervus canadensis) within the State of Washington between the 1st day of November of any year and the 15th day of September of the following year.

No person shall within the State of Washington, during the season when it is lawful to kill the same, kill more than one of the male elk (Cervus alces, or Cervus canadensis). Any person violating any of the provisions of this section shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined not less than $100 nor more than $500, or be imprisoned in the county jail not less than thirty days nor more than ninety days, or by both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court.

Mr. MONDELL. If the killing of elk is prohibited by law in the State of Washington, why the necessity of this Federal legislation? If the people of Washington are all law-abiding citizens, why is it necessary to pass this piece of legislation?

Mr. PAYNE. And I want to suggest to the gentleman that he has the moral effect of the State statutes to find out what the moral effect is. [Laughter.]

Mr. CUSHMAN. With regard to what the gentleman has said, I undertake to say that the law which to-day prohibits the killing of game in the Yellowstone National Park and the continual fear of the enforcement of that law is a greater protection to the game of that region than the few guards that patrol that park. I also call attention to the fact that this bill makes provision not alone for the protection of the elk, but for all the game birds, animals, and fishes within the area which the President shall hereafter (by virtue of the authority of this bill) set apart for a game preserve.

Mr. MONDELL. Have not the people of Washington State expressed their views in regard to all game?

Mr. CUSHMAN. They have. We have a lengthy game law in our State covering all sorts and classes of game.

Mr. MONDELL. I do not want to interrupt the gentleman too much, but I would like to have him explain to the House why it is that it is necessary to have Federal protection of the game in the State of Washington. Whether it is because the people of Washington can not enforce their own State game laws, or because it is sought to have a different class of protection of the game by the Federal statute than the people of Washington have provided for in the State statutes?

Mr. CUSHMAN. Oh, no. The fact is that we have a very large area in the State which has been turned into a forest reserve by the United States Government, and over this tract of land the Federal Government has assumed general jurisdiction. The United States Government is in control of this tract of land and has its agents and officers present on this land. The State has not the same unlimited control over this forest-reserve land that it has over other lands in the State. Now, I admit that the State game laws do extend over this forest-reserve region at present, but the fact that the United States Government controls these lands in every other way adds to the difficulty of enforcing the State game law. It seems to me that inasmuch as the United States Government has assumed general jurisdiction and control over these lands, enforcing their own regulations in every other particular, there certainly seems to me abundant reason and excuse that a portion of that domain especially adapted for game should be made a game preserve and protected by the General Government.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CUSHMAN. I will yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. Does not the Washington law in reference to elk cover the Olympic Forest Reserve?

Mr. CUSHMAN. It covers the entire State of Washington, including the Olympic Forest Reserve.

Mr. MANN. Is it not in force there, and does not the Washington game law affect also the property owned by the United States Government?

Mr. CUSHMAN. It does.

Mr. MANN. You have a law forbidding the killing of elk in any part of the State for ten years?

Mr. CUSHMAN. Yes; until the year 1915.

Mr. MANN. Then what is the object of the National Government reenacting that law as to a part of the State?

Mr. CUSHMAN. It is results we are after more than the vindication of a theory. As I said before, the fact that the United States Government has a general jurisdiction over this region makes it especially appropriate that the Government should, while controling this region in all other ways, also assume control and protection of the game. Here are a million and a half of acres which the United States Government has practically taken out of the State of Washington. It is true that the land is still there in a physical sense, but no settler can settle on it and make his home there. The settler can't own it; the State can't tax it; it don't bring a cent of revenue to the State treasury. And yet in the face of this great loss to the State men on this floor object to this bill, because they fear that its passage may in years to come cause the Government to pay out a small salary to one or two game wardens. The Government has assumed almost complete control over these lands, and that being true, I think the Government should also protect the game.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think the United States ought to assume a different position with reference to elk than it does with reference to Japanese children?

Mr. CUSHMAN. The Government, if this bill passes, does not attempt to assume any particular attitude with reference to elk; it is a bill similar to other bills that have heretofore passed this House, creating a national game preserve out of a part of a forest reserve, and applying to all game therein.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will pardon me, you now have a State law covering this question in this locality, and you want the General Government to pass another law. Does not that interfere with the local self-government which we are hearing so much about at present on the Pacific coast?

Mr. CUSHMAN. The two laws do not interfere with each other at all. They are in harmony with each other.

Mr. MANN. Suppose we should pass a law that you could kill elk in this forest reserve, exercising the same jurisdiction. Would that interfere with local self-government?

Mr. CUSHMAN. Well, I will say to the gentleman that the Members from the State of Washington would do the best they could to see that no such bill was passed. The gentleman seems to have the skeleton of "States rights" on his mind this morning.

Mr. MANN. I suppose they would then cry out about how we were violating the rights of the States, but the principle is the same. Will the gentleman differentiate between the power of Congress to pass a law that the State wants and the power to pass a law that the State does not happen to want? What is the difference in the power?

Mr. CUSHMAN. If there is no difference in the power, there is a vast difference in the propriety. I see no impropriety in this Congress here passing a bill (which the State desires) setting aside a portion of a forest reserve over which the Government now has jurisdiction and creating it into a game preserve.

Mr. MANN. I fully agree with the gentleman; but why is it necessary for us to reenact a law that the gentleman's State has already enacted and is now enforcing?

Mr. CUSHMAN. Simply because, in my judgment, it gives additional protection to the game in that locality.

Mr. MANN. Is it not because you will not enforce the law of your State, but now appeal to the National Government, through its expenditures and through its officers, to enforce a law which your law-abiding people will not obey?

Mr. CUSHMAN. No; that is not correct.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I merely want to suggest that there are already forest officers over this forest reservation; and if this proposed area is set aside as a national game preserve those officers will also cooperate with the officials of the State in the enforcement of such a law and the preservation of this game. This is a large mountainous area, and it is difficult to keep after the violators of the law, and if we can have the assistance of the forest officers, backed up by a national law setting it aside as a national game preserve, it will render very great assistance in the preservation of the game.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CUSHMAN. Certainly.

Mr. MONDELL. Is it not true that as to the territory which it is herein provided shall be created into a game preserve the State game laws will cease to be operative; that they will be repealed by this legislation and will have no further force and effect by reason of the fact that the land is practically all in the ownership of the Federal Government, and by this legislation the State sovereignty and control over the game in that region will cease and the Federal authority will be set up and be established and be paramount?

Mr. CUSHMAN. Yes; that is true. But this is not a region where game is to be killed. If game were to be killed in this region and the State had one game law and the United States another game law, there might be a conflict. But this bill proposes to establish a region in which no game shall be killed. If the Government enforces that proposition and the State agrees to it, isn't all this conflict merely imaginary?

I now yield back the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman, before he yields, tell us how many elk there are there, and tell us something about the elk and their habits.

Mr. CUSHMAN. As to the number of elk in this region, I will say I have talked with a good many people who have been through this country. They do not agree very closely as to the number, but I may say that none of them have ever fixed the number of wild elk yet remaining in this region at less than 500, and most of them have estimated a greater number. The habitat of this band of elk would be covered under the provisions of this bill. This band of elk has been in this region for a great many years, but the number has been steadily decreasing. The habits of the elk are somewhat like the deer. They go high into the hills and mountains in the summer time, when the weather is warm, and drift down into the lower altitudes in the winter time, when the weather is cold. There is one marked difference between the elk and the deer that I know from my own experience of years ago in the mountains. Deer may be hunted year after year, but will still remain in the same general locality until entirely exterminated. But the wild elk after being hunted a few times seeks a different locality or a different mountain chain. I shall, with the permission of the House, include with my remarks a short but very interesting letter on this subject which I received three years ago from the one man who is perhaps better acquainted with this region and the elk therein than any other—Mr. Horace M. Guptill, of Port Angeles, State of Washington.

Mr. MANN. What is the area of land which this bill provides may be created into a game preserve?

Mr. CUSHMAN. Not to exceed 750,000 acres. It might be any amount less than that in the discretion of the President, but it could not be more.

Mr. MANN. I understand; but that does not convey any impression to my mind about the size of it.

Mr. LACEY. The reservation contains 1,466,880 acres.

Mr. MANN. How many square miles are there, or how many townships—something of that kind.

Mr. CUSHMAN. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that the present Olympic Forest Reserve is somewhat in the form of a rectangle, but with very irregular boundaries, and approximately it is 65 miles in length from east to west, and 57 miles in width from north to south. Now, this bill proposes to take an area somewhere about the center of this larger tract for a game preserve, and 750,000 acres would make a tract of land about 34 miles square—that is, a tract of land 34 miles north and south, by 34 miles east and west. At one time several years ago I made a map of a proposed national park or game preserve which we hoped to create in that region. I regret that I do not have that map here with me to-day. But this bill provides for a tract about 34 miles square.

Mr. MANN. Is that reservation of sufficient size to make these elk remain within it summer and winter without wandering outside to be conveniently killed?

Mr. CUSHMAN. The gentleman will remember that these elk are not by any means without protection under the laws of our State when they wander outside the limits of this reservation. As I said a while ago, it is unlawful to kill any elk within the State of Washington before the year 1915.

Mr. MANN. Evidently they are not sufficiently protected now. It would be very convenient to have a small game preserve where they can be bred at the Government expense, and then wander outside for the convenience of hunters.

Mr. CUSHMAN. That is not the object of this bill at all. It is to preserve one of the few herds of wild elk yet remaining in America.

Mr. MANN. I fully agree with the gentleman as to the merits of the bill. The only question is whether it goes far enough.

Mr. CUSHMAN. I desire to insert as a part of my remarks the letter which I mentioned as having received on this subject.

PORT ANGELES, WASH., September 15, 1903.

DEAR SIR: Relative to the establishment of a game preserve in the Olympic Mountains, concerning which we had a conversation during your recent visit here, I have to say:

It has been twelve years since I first went into the Olympic Mountains, and I have made frequent visits there since that time. I have examined a greater portion of the parts which would naturally be used for a game preserve, and am thoroughly acquainted with all the different streams, peaks, trend of mountain ranges, and grass lands included in this region. The Olympic Mountains are located in the Olympic peninsula, in Clallam and Jefferson counties, State of Washington, forming the most northwesterly portion of the United States. In general terms this section is heavily timbered. The central portion is mountainous, ranging from 5,000 to 7,000 feet in height. It is characterized by numerous valleys and streams, interspersed here and there by prairies and timber and bench lands covered with a heavy stand of wild grasses.

Most of the streams have their source in the region around Mount Olympus, which is located in about the central portion of the Olympic Forest Reserve. This region is the natural home of the elk, as well as the deer, bear, and the cougar, besides other smaller animals, such as the fox, mink, and raccoon. The game birds are grouse and pheasants. The streams abound in mountain trout.

In this section are practically the only bands of wild elk in the United States. When I first visited the mountains they were very numerous, but now they are to be found only around the headwaters of the Elwha River and its tributaries, and the Solduck River, the Hoh and Queets rivers, and the Quinault River. There are now probably not more than 500 elk remaining in all this region. There having in the past been no restrictions, they have been slaughtered for the horns and teeth merely, and the carcasses left lying on the ground. In the winter when the deep snows are in the mountains the elk work down the streams toward the west coast to a lower altitude and return as the snow disappears. In my judgment the following boundaries would comprise about the proper territory for a game preserve:

Commencing at a point on the Elwha River in section 8, township 29 north, range 7 west, about 12 miles southwest of Port Angeles and running in a westerly direction, following the apex of a mountain range for about 10 miles to a point south of Lake Crescent, and in section 9, township 29 north, range 9 west; thence south about 22 miles, crossing and including the headwaters of the north and south branches of the Solduck and Hoh rivers to the south side of township 26 north, range 9 west; thence east about 24 miles, including the headwaters of the Queets River, to a point south of Mount Anderson; thence in a northerly direction, following the apex of a mountain range separating the Elwha and Dusewallips rivers, about 16 miles; thence in a northwesterly direction, following the ridge and passing south of Mount Angeles and over Hurricane Hill to the Elwha River, to a point about 2 miles south from the place of beginning.

If this territory should be regarded insufficient I see no reason why another tier of townships should not be added on the south.

The territory included in the above description is the natural haunt of the greater portion of the elk in summer and winter, and is unsuitable for settlement except a small portion in and along the Elwha River bottom to about 3 miles above the north boundary of the territory described, and so far there are only two permanent settlers in its limits. I would consider it eminently desirable to set aside territory in the Olympic Mountains to be used for the preservation and propagation of elk, and hunters rigidly excluded therefrom. If some action is not speedily taken the elk will be exterminated.

HORACE M. GUPTILL.

Hon. F. W. CUSHMAN, Tacoma, Wash.

I now yield back the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY].

Mr. JONES of Washington. I suggest to my colleague that there are over a thousand square miles in this.

Mr. KEIFER. Thirty townships.

Mr. LACEY. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JONES].

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I simply want to say the people of our State are all in favor of the passage of this bill. We do not have any fears as to the conflict between the National Government and State government in this matter. The area is something over a thousand square miles, and most of the country, in fact, all of the territory, is a very mountainous region, and, as I understand it, the elk range will practically all be included in the boundaries of this forest reserve, and the fears of the gentleman from Illinois that they are apt to wander outside of that and be slaughtered I do not think have very much foundation in fact. Fifteen hundred square miles cover a pretty large territory.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Is this intended to protect all the game?

Mr. JONES of Washington. It is to protect all the game—all game animals, birds, and fish, as well as the elk.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Do you know the exact number of acres in this reserve?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Something over 2,000,000.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Why did not the bill reserve it all?

Mr. JONES of Washington. A great deal of it is low land and practically beneficial only for timber purposes. It comes down to the seashore and borders on Puget Sound, so there was no necessity of reserving all of it as a game reserve. As a matter of fact, there is a strong desire on the part of a great many of our people to eliminate a portion of the lands from the forest reserve because of its agricultural character. That is all I care to say about it.

Mr. LACEY. I would like to ask the gentleman whether it is not the general desire in Washington that this reserve should be thus enlarged?

Mr. JONES of Washington. You do not mean enlarged?

Mr. LACEY. I mean the purposes enlarged from a mere forest reserve to a game reserve in addition.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes. At least to the extent of 750,000 acres. I stated that a moment ago.

Mr. LACEY. As far as the gentleman knows, that is the universal sentiment of his State?

Mr. JONES of Washington. As far as I know, that is the universal sentiment. In fact, a great many people are very anxious to have this done.

Mr. LACEY. The Japanese question does not enter into it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Certainly not.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. In other words, there is no negro or Japanese in the wood pile.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES].

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, the State of Washington desires to protect its game, and the State of Washington is wise in that conclusion. The birds in the State of Tennessee, and game generally, are being better preserved, I may say, and I hope the gentleman from Iowa will listen to me now, because of the Lacey bill, and the State of Tennessee has availed herself of the patriotic, I may say, and wise provisions of that law and has enacted game laws and has vigorously enforced them, I may say, through the offices of an ex-Member of this Congress, Col. Joseph H. Acklen, formerly of Louisiana, with the result that, it seems, in every county now in Tennessee, that law having been in force in the State for the past three or four years, any man, whether from a city or from the country, can go out in the fields of Tennessee and get all the game that he wants in a short while. Before these laws they could not do so. I think the law limits the number of birds the huntsman can kill to thirty—enough for any man to shoot at for sport or kill to eat in the course of a day. Now, I think it is wise, not only as a matter of preserving the birds in the State of Washington but throughout the United States, that each and every State should avail itself of the provisions of the Lacey law and preserve not only in the State of Washington, but throughout the United States, our game birds and game animals. Now, it is very hard for the birds of Tennessee, as in the days of the Indian or any other enemy of the South, to escape the rifle of the Tennessean, and in the later days the bird gun, so it is well enough to have this game reserved or preserved, I may add, in the State of Washington, that the birds of the State of Washington may have a retreat in a Federal reserve to escape the huntsman with his shotgun and the rifleman with his rifle.

So, Mr. Speaker, in all seriousness, I hope this bill will pass, for the benefit of the State of Washington, and I hope that it may be an example to other States to ask for the same kind of law. If there is any Federal place in the State of Tennessee where a similar law can apply, I now serve notice on the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] that I shall ask for a like law to be passed by Congress, in order that the birds of Tennessee, the birds of the air and the animals of the beautiful, silvery, grass-padded valleys of Tennessee may have a thanksgiving day, a day of vacation, when they can escape the riflemen of Tennessee as well as the bird guns. [Applause.]

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, in view of the statement that has been made that practically everyone in the State of Washington is favorable to this legislation, I regret very much that I feel it my duty to express any opposition to it, because if all the good people of Washington believe it well to surrender their State sovereignty to this extent and provide that within a large area within their State State laws shall be inoperative, possibly the balance of us should be content to let them have it as they will. I simply wish to call attention to the fact that this bill does by indirection what it would be impossible under the Constitution of the United States to do directly. It has been held by the Supreme Court, notably in the celebrated Race Horse case from the State of Wyoming, that the State is sovereign in its authority and jurisdiction over the game within its borders, and that the Federal Government can have no control whatever over the game within the borders of a State unless the State legislature shall specifically relinquish its authority and control. It has been said in opposition to that that there is a region in the country where the destruction or the taking of birds and animals is prohibited, namely, the Yellowstone Park; but the Yellowstone Park was created at a time when the territory embraced within the park was not within the boundaries of any State, and therefore Federal authority was supreme.

This bill provides, however, that upon Government lands and waters within this forest reserve the taking of game and birds shall be prohibited. Well, inasmuch as practically all of the land within this forest reserve is Government land, that amounts to a repeal of the State game statutes, and within that area no game animals, birds, or fishes can hereafter be taken; and I suppose that prohibition applies also to the bear, the mountain lions, the wolves, and the coyotes in the region, inasmuch as they are game. And under this law it will be impossible in the future, except by an act of Congress, to provide for the destruction of any of these animals which, by multiplying, as they are bound to do when protected, will prey upon the game and upon the flocks and herds of the surrounding territory.

Now, I present these observations to the House in view of the fact that an effort has been made to provide for the creation of game preserves generally throughout the country by Executive act. I am very much opposed to that legislation, and my opposition to this legislation is that it is a step in the same direction. I shall vote against it, regretting that I must do so in view of the fact that the gentlemen from the State of Washington say their people all favor it, because I do not believe it to be wise to establish within the boundaries of a sovereign State great areas where State game laws are no longer operative and over which, by Federal legislation, State sovereignty is impaired. The sensitiveness in regard to the sovereign rights of the States, which is generally in evidence here, is a curious thing, and it is remarkable how the sting of the infringement of State rights is often soothed or lessened by the hope of a liberal Federal appropriation or the assumption by the Federal Government of a duty which the State should perform. By this legislation the people of the State of Washington will be relieved from the expense of the enforcement of game laws in this region, and that expense will be laid upon the Federal Government. The result sought could be accomplished in the State of Washington, as it has been in my State, by a State statute, but in that case the State would be called upon to pay game wardens to protect the animals in the territory.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. MONDELL. I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Can not this bill be so amended that it would be operative until the State legislates to the contrary?

Mr. MONDELL. Well, I do not know but what that could be done, but there is no such provision in the bill. The bill sets up and establishes Federal authority and control exclusively over the game within the region described and to be set aside, and to that extent it repeals and annuls all State game statutes. And so far as that territory is concerned the State game wardens will not in the future, unless the State of Washington takes the matter to the Supreme Court and the law is held unconstitutional, as I believe it is, have any control over the taking of game and wild animals. The bears and lynx and mountain lions will there disport themselves, and from this secure shelter will descend upon the valleys surrounding the region and feed upon the flocks and herds of the good people of Washington.

Mr. PERKINS. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MONDELL. I will be pleased to.

Mr. PERKINS. What is the authority for including those in game animals? I do not understand myself that the term "game animals," which has been frequently defined, covers any animal which is itself a beast of prey. Game animals are deer, mountain sheep, and elk—animals of that character. It does not include either bears, wolves, or mountain lions. My friend can go into this district and kill a mountain lion, if he is able to.

Mr. MONDELL. It includes all wild animals.

Mr. PERKINS. They are not game.

Mr. LACEY. Will the gentleman contend that the term "game animals" include vermin?

Mr. MONDELL. I do not know what the gentleman's definition of vermin is.

Mr. LACEY. What would be called "varmints" in Wyoming.

Mr. MONDELL. What would be called "varmints" in Iowa, I think, would be included.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. "Varmints" would certainly include the "red fox," the "coon," and the "'possum," or any animal that would run from a good hunting dog.

Mr. MONDELL. I think the Government authority would include them all.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I want to make one or two inquiries of the gentleman on his proposition of law.

Mr. MONDELL. As I am not a lawyer, I prefer the gentleman would not ask them of me.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. If you are not a lawyer, you are talking like one. You are begging the question.

Mr. PERKINS. Do you mean that as a compliment?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I say it respectfully; I mean that as a compliment to my friend. In this matter the gentleman rather confuses the power of Congress in these forest reserves. It is Federal property. The Federal Government has exclusive right to control it. Now, the gentleman well knows that the Federal Government can control forest reserves, and is doing it. The State governments could, if they had the power over such Federal property. These birds and ducks, while in the forest reserve, the Federal Government certainly can protect as its own property. The gentleman knows that.

Mr. MONDELL. In answer to the gentleman's inquiry, I respectfully direct him to the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of Ward against Race Horse, which I think answers the gentleman's question fully.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. What did they decide in that case?

Mr. MONDELL. They decided that the State game laws extended over and controlled and protected the game on the public domain as well as upon private property. And this in a case where the Federal Government had by treaty agreed with a certain tribe of Indians that they could hunt upon certain lands described in the treaty when those lands were in a Territory and hunt so long as water ran; and the Supreme Court held that as soon as the State of Wyoming was established and extended its borders over the territory described, the solemn treaty of the Government was annulled by that fact, and that the State game law extended over that territory, and the Indians did not have the right to hunt, which the treaty gave them. In other words, that the State was sovereign, and that no Federal legislation or treaty could deprive a State of that sovereignty. This law attempts to deprive the State of sovereignty in the protection of game and transfer that power to the Federal Government.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LACEY. I yield one minute to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I just want an answer to an inquiry. Of course, the State law applies in these reservations, I take it, when the Federal law does not intervene. Whenever the Federal Government undertakes to protect these birds, which are on its own land, clearly the Federal Government has that right. That is the proposition, and it can do so better than the State can.

Mr. MONDELL. The only difficulty about that proposition is that the gentleman and the Supreme Court do not agree.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Oh, well, that is the case frequently, because sometimes the Supreme Court is wrong. [Laughter.] But the Supreme Court has never decided that the Federal Government did not have the right and power to take care of its birds on its own land and docks and custom-houses and other public property. It has always decided that they have, and never decided any other way.

Mr. MONDELL. But it has decided that the Federal Government owns no birds, ducks, and elks. All these creatures belong to the people.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Of course they do, because they are wild, but this Government has the right to say that the gentleman from Wyoming shall not go into this reserve.

Mr. MONDELL. It has no more control over its lands than any other landowner has over his.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I would like, in this connection, to call the attention of the House to section 3 of the Constitution, Article I, which provides that "the Congress shall have power to make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory of the United States." The word "territory" there has been held in an opinion by the Attorney-General to mean the public lands of the United States. When this Constitution was adopted there was no such thing as a "Territory," but there was the territory—the domain of the United States. When this question first came up in Congress a few years ago it was submitted to the Attorney-General, Mr. Knox, who, in an elaborate opinion, gave it as his view that Congress had full power to legislate on this subject as to the public domain. I ask leave in this connection, Mr. Speaker, to incorporate that opinion in my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The opinion is as follows:

FOREST RESERVES.

CORRESPONDENCE IN RELATION TO THE POWERS OF CONGRESS OVER FOREST RESERVES SITUATED IN THE VARIOUS STATES, PUBLISHED BY ORDER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, December 5, 1901.

MY DEAR SIR: In furtherance of my verbal inquiry in regard to your views upon the subject of forestry legislation, I wish to obtain the benefit of your views upon the constitutional powers of Congress to control the various forest reserves where they are situated in the States.

1. As to those reserves situated in the Territories, it seems to me quite clear that Congress can accept the Territorial laws or can modify or change them at pleasure, and that those reserves are clearly within the jurisdiction of the Congress.

2. As to the enactment of Federal laws to punish the setting out of fires or trespasses in cutting or injuring the timber, I would be pleased to have your views as to what constitutional limitations within the limits of the States would interfere. In view of the permanent withdrawal of these forest lands for a general national purpose, would the powers of regulation and control be greater than those which may be exercised in the preservation and management of ordinary public lands open to entry or settlement where the same are covered with timber?

The questions involve the general power of enacting statutes punishing the persons who may injure the forests as well as making and enforcing regulations for their care.

3. In these forests the wild game have opportunities to breed and find shelter.

An enlightened public sentiment, though unfortunately too tardy in its development, has finally led to the enactment of very efficient and adequate game protection in nearly all the States and Territories, which laws, if suitably enforced, would in most instances give adequate protection. But unfortunately in many localities these laws are either wholly or in part disregarded. The President in his message has asked for the enactment of laws creating game preserves in these forest reserves.

This recommendation involves the question as to the extent of Congressional power and also the choice of methods.

If Congress has no power or control over the subject within the limits of a State, it has unquestioned authority, in my judgment, to prevent interstate commerce in the dead bodies or living creatures themselves.

This control Congress has already asserted in the Federal law prohibiting transportation from one State to another of such game when killed in violation of State laws.

In the disposition of this question in the forest reserves the custodians of the forests might be directed to make complaints and enforce proceedings under the local statutes, thus supplementing the efforts of the State authorities. On the other hand, special Federal statutes might be framed, if constitutional power exists, to deal directly with the question.

Indirectly, protection might be furnished by preventing trespass of all kinds during certain seasons, and thus give incidental protection to the wild inhabitants of these national forests during certain portions of the year.

In this borderland of State and national authority I regard it as of the utmost importance that the legislative should keep in view the rights and powers of the States and that care should be exercised to avoid conflict of jurisdiction where so much depends upon having the laws backed up by a friendly local public sentiment.

I would be gratified to have the benefits of your judgment as to how far legislation on these various subjects would be within the constitutional domain of the Congress.

Very respectfully, JOHN F. LACEY.

Hon. P. C. KNOX,
Attorney-General United States.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, D. C., January 3, 1902.

SIR: Complying with the request therefor contained in your note of December 5, 1901, I here transmit to you some of my views upon the questions there suggested. These questions are as to the power of Congress to enact laws for the protection and control of or relating to our national forest reserves when within the limits of the State, and specifically to make such reserves, to some extent, refuges for the preservation of the remnant of the game in those localities. They necessarily involve, also, substantially the same questions as applicable to the general public domain, for so far as concerns the question of Federal legislative power no difference in principle is perceived.

I quite agree with you that as to those reserves situated within a Territory of the United States this Federal legislative power is ample, and the questions are those arising when such reserves are within the limits of a State; but in order to the determination of those it may be well to refer briefly to the nature and source of this Federal power over the Territories.

As to the source of this power there has been a diversity of opinion, and the power is claimed to have arisen from that provision of the Constitution which gives Congress the "power to dispose of, and make all needful rules and regulations respecting, the territory and other property belonging to the United States;" and other sources of this power have been suggested; but, whatever its origin, the existence of this power, as the Supreme Court has several times said, is undoubted.

While, in the Dred Scott case (19 How., 393), it was held that this constitutional provision applied only to such territory as the United States then had and did not apply to that subsequently acquired by treaty or conquest, this has not been acquiesced in in later cases, several of which point to this provision as, at least, one of the sources of the power and control which Congress exercises over the various Territories. And, I think, it may be taken as now settled that this provision confers upon Congress the power stated over all the Territories.

Congress, then, having sovereignty and ample legislative control of the Territories while they are such and of the public lands therein, one important question is how far this sovereignty and right of control is surrendered to the State by its admission into the Union. And here we may look again to the Constitution, then to the acts admitting such States, and to their constitutions when admitted.

And, first, as to the Federal Constitution. Assuming, as I think we may, that the provision above referred to applies to all "territory and other property belonging to the United States," whether then already or subsequently acquired, what was the intended limit of the duration of the power thus conferred? Was it intended to continue only until the new State was admitted, and to then cease and leave Congress and the Government without any power to "dispose of" or to "make needful rules and regulations respecting" the public lands or "other property" belonging to the United States, or was it intended to continue as long as its subject-matter and its necessity continued? If the former, we must look to some other source for the power of Congress to dispose of and regulate the management of the public domain within the limits of a State. If the latter, then this provision is ample.

I do not consider here the case of military forts, posts, dockyards, etc., for which special provision is made in the Constitution, nor sites for post-offices, court-houses, etc., the question of jurisdiction over which is generally settled by convention.

When the Constitution was adopted we had but one Territory, though it is fair to suppose that others were looked upon as possible; but the one that we had was acquired under conditions which required its admission into the Union in not less than three nor more than five States, with equal sovereignty with that of the original States, and the Constitution provided for the admission of new States. Thus, with the subject of new States directly in mind, did the framers intend to give Congress power to dispose of and manage the public lands while in a Territory and to leave it without the power to do either after a State was admitted? For it could not have escaped them that to confer this power while the Territory remained such was, by the strongest implication, to deny it afterwards. Did they intend this?

In the first place—and this is quite sufficient for its construction—the provision itself imposes no limitation, either of time or of Territorial or State condition; nor does the nature of the power conferred imply any such limitation. On the contrary, the power is as broad and general as language could make it, with no limitation whatever, either expressed or implied. And the reason and necessity for the power are tenfold stronger after the admission of the State than during the existence of the Territory; and there is no rule of law or of construction which will permit us to impose a limitation which neither the instrument itself nor the nature of the power imposes or implies. And the general rule is that when a power is conferred without limitation, express or implied, it continues as long as the necessity for its exercise. And the Supreme Court has more than once said (as in Gibson v. Choteau, 13 Wall., 92, on p. 99) "that power is subject to no limitations."

The difficulty and misconstruction here arises chiefly from the use in this clause of the word "territory." If, instead, the expression had been that Congress should have power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the land and other property, there could have been no question but that this power of disposition and control continued after statehood as before. But this is exactly what the provision does mean. It does not refer to organized Territories, as to which the term "dispose of," and make "rules and regulations," and "other property" are not appropriate; but it refers to land and other property. And this is expressly held in United States v. Grotiot (13 Pet., 526), where it is said (p. 536):

"The term territory, as here used, is merely descriptive of the kind of property, and is equivalent to the word lands. And Congress has the same power over it as over any other property belonging to the United States, and this power is vested in Congress without limitation."

This of itself would seem to make the meaning fairly certain. Consider the situation. After a long struggle, which had long delayed the adoption of the Constitution, the people had finally settled the ownership and sovereignty of the lands outside of the States in the General Government. It was claimed that as this territory had been wrested from Great Britain by the blood and treasure of the people of all the States it should be held for their common benefit, and not for any State, and it was finally so settled and agreed and the whole territory ceded to the United States for the common benefit of all. At that time, next to State jealousy of Federal power—if second to even that—there were mutual State jealousies of the power of each other, and this was one of the causes of the dispute over the public territory, and yet it was certain and well known that on the admission of the expected new States, with their sovereignty within their borders, all of the sovereignty and control of this territory within their borders which was not in the United States would be in those States, respectively, and that that sovereignty and control which they had so long struggled to place in the United States would be passed over to these three to five States as they were admitted. This was certain to be the case, for if Congress did not have this sovereignty and control after a State was admitted, then the State did have it, and no other State could interfere.

These States might then, by unfriendly legislation or by no legislation, or both, so hamper these lands, their sale, occupancy, and control as to render them of little value except to those States and their people. It is simply incredible that this was intended. If it was not, then it was intended that this vital power of disposal and control should continue at a time when, of all others, it was most needed. While the Territory remained such the sovereignty of the United States was complete without any other grant than that contained in the cession, and this special grant of power was not at all necessary. Its chief if not its only use and purpose was that, when and after these lands passed into and under the sovereignty of a State, they should do so subject to the paramount sovereignty of the United States so far as was needful.

In framing this dual government, this imperium in imperio, in which each State was to be in many respects sovereign in the nation and the nation in many respects sovereign in each State, the separation of these sovereignties and their lines of demarcation must have received the most careful attention of those statesmen as one of the most important and difficult problems which confronted them. And, as the control and disposal of this Territory was one of the most important and burning questions of the time, and had long been such, delaying and, for a time, endangering the adoption of the Constitution, it would seem impossible that when dealing directly with this question provision was made for this control while in a Territorial state, and when it was little needed, and purposely omitted at a period when, of all others, it was most needed. We shall come nearer to the real meaning of this provision by reading it as it is so plainly written, without any limitation, either of time or Territorial or State condition.

If authority for this construction be needed it is not lacking, and in another connection I shall refer to some cases which come first to hand.

Assuming, then, as I think we must, that this constitutional provision confers upon Congress the power of disposition and control of the public lands after the admission into the Union of the States containing them, how much, if any, of this power is surrendered to the States by the acts admitting them into the Union as sovereign States? And here the general rule is certain (although questions may arise as to its application to particular cases). So far as its exercise is needful to the disposition and full control and management of these lands, Congress has always been and is incapable of diverting, alienating, or surrendering any part of it. It is uniformly held that while the title of the United States to the public lands is absolute as against every other title, yet it is held in trust for the ultimate benefit of all the people in such manner as may be prescribed by law, and this is peculiarly the case as to the only Territory we had at that time. Congress, then, being a trustee of the title, can not divert, alienate, or surrender any power necessary or proper for the disposal, protection, preservation, control, or management of its lands, nor in any way discharge itself from the duty of executing the trust confided to it.

But while this power to make all needful rules and regulations is also the power to determine what are needful, and while, therefore, this power so conferred is, in terms, absolute and unlimited, yet, notwithstanding some general statements of the Supreme Court, it may be well claimed that, after the admission of a State, there is necessarily a limit arising from other portions of the Constitution and the general powers of the State. For example, may Congress continue to legislate for this public land—some of it, perhaps, in small, isolated quantities—upon all subjects of municipal legislation, civil and criminal, and irrespective of the laws of the State upon the same subjects, as it does, for example, in the District of Columbia? Or, on the other hand, is the power of Congress within a State limited to such acts, legislative or otherwise, as are required for the disposal, protection, and control of such lands? Or is there, between these, a limit to Federal power, legislative or executive? It is not necessary to discuss here the first of these questions, for no such general legislation is contemplated, and the other two, and also how far Federal control has been surrendered by acts admitting States into the Union, may be examined in the light of another consideration, viz, the rights incident to ownership.

Subject to the eminent domain of the State, the collection of taxes, the service of process, and other kindred superior rights the ownership of land carries with it, as incident to and a part of such ownership, the right of exclusive possession and control, which includes the right to forbid and prevent intrusion thereon for any purpose and to prevent and remove trespassers. The owner may forcibly prevent such intrusion if he can, or he may apply to the courts for relief or to recover damages. But a private individual may not himself enact laws for the protection of his property or to punish trespassers upon his lands. Is the United States in the same situation as to its lands within a State? Is it without power to itself enact laws for the disposal or management of its public lands within a State, or for their protection from fires, or the preservation of its timber or minerals thereon? This is undoubtedly the case, if the United States, as to such lands, has no other rights than those of an ordinary proprietor.

And it must be admitted that much that is said by the court in Fort Leavenworth Railroad Company v. Lowe (114 U. S., 525) is directly to the effect that as to lands within a State, unless jurisdiction is reserved in admitting a State, or the land is acquired by the United States with the consent of the State for military purposes, etc., as provided in the Constitution, the United States has no other rights than those of an ordinary proprietor, and that, like other lands, they are subject to the sole jurisdiction and sovereignty of the State. And it is in view of this that I discuss this question more elaborately than I otherwise would. But, if what is there said is to be considered as a denial of all legislative power of Congress over such lands, not only is it opposed to the uniform practice of the Government from the beginning, with the frequent approval of that court, and to many contrary declarations of that court, but the contrary is directly held in later cases.

But what is said in that case must be read with reference to and in the light of the case then before the court. The question in that case was that of the exclusive jurisdiction or not of the United States over that part of the reservation not used for military purposes. Upon the admission of Kansas no reservation of Federal jurisdiction was made, but later the State ceded that jurisdiction to the United States with this saving clause, viz, the right to serve civil and criminal State processes therein, and "saving further to said State the right to tax railroad, bridge, and other corporations, their franchises and property on said reservation." The State levied a tax on a railroad on this reservation, and the question of its power to do so depended upon whether the reservation was in the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States. The court held that, inasmuch as it was not purchased with the consent of the State "for the erection of forts, magazines, arsenals, dockyards, and other needful buildings," under clause 17, section 8, Article I, of the Constitution, the United States had no such exclusive jurisdiction, and that, under this saving clause, the State had power to tax the railroad property; and that the only way by which the United States could acquire this exclusive jurisdiction within a State was that provided by the Constitution, viz, by purchase with the consent of the State.

The question of concurrent jurisdiction or of Federal jurisdiction for some purposes, was not discussed nor even mentioned, for it was not involved. Nor was any allusion made to that other constitutional provision giving to Congress the power to make needful rules, etc., which certainly gave to Congress much greater power than is possessed by an ordinary proprietor. And, if the court decided that it did not do so, or did not apply to lands within a State, or decided anything else upon a question of such vast importance, it did so sub silentio by saying nothing about it. That is not the way in which that court settles questions of such importance.

From the beginning the whole policy and practice of the Government in respect of its public lands has been based upon the generally unquestioned power of Congress to legislate for their disposal, management, and protection, in both Territories and States, and with the frequent approval of the Supreme Court. It is needless to refer to these various acts of legislation as to lands in States and Territories. Their name is legion, but each and every one of these acts was the assertion and the exercise of Federal jurisdiction and sovereignty, and of a right far superior to that of any mere proprietor as to lands within a State.

This must have been either because, in the admission of the State, the jurisdiction necessary for that purpose was either expressly or impliedly reserved—the latter of which is not probable—or because the constitutional provision referred to confers that power, and this would seem a quite sufficient source of power.

In Gibson v. Choteau (13 Wall., 92) it is said in the syllabus that "the power of Congress in the disposal of the public domain can not be interfered with, or its exercise embarrassed by any State legislation." And on page 99, "With respect to the public domain, the Constitution vests in Congress the power of disposition and of making all needful rules and regulations. That power is subject to no limitations." Nothing could be more conclusive that this constitutional provision applies also to lands within a State, and that the legislative power thus conferred is paramount.

In Jorden v. Bennett (4 How., 169) it is said (p. 184):

"By the Constitution Congress is given power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory and other property of the United States, for the disposal of the public lands. Therefore, in the new States where such lands be, Congress may provide by law, and having the constitutional power to pass the law, it is supreme. So Congress may prohibit and punish trespassers on the public lands. Having the power of disposal and of protection, Congress alone can deal with the title, and no State law, whether of limitation or otherwise, can defeat such title."

This was the holding of the Supreme Court up to the time when the Fort Leavenworth case was decided, and it is not supposable that that court intended to then overrule these cases and deny this legislative power of Congress and all other powers save such as belong to an ordinary individual proprietor, while making no reference whatever to its previous holdings. That it did not so intend is manifest from the only other case which I shall cite upon this question, that of Camfield v. United States (167 U. S., 518), where it is said in the syllabus:

"The Government of the United States has, with respect to its own lands within the limits of a State, the rights of an ordinary proprietor to maintain its possession and to prosecute trespassers; and may legislate for their protection, though such legislation may involve the exercise of the police power."

And on pages 524 and 525 the powers of the Government, both as an individual proprietor and as a sovereign, are well stated:

"The lands in question are all within the State of Colorado. The Government has, with respect to its own lands, the rights of an ordinary proprietor to maintain its possession and to prosecute trespassers. It may deal with such lands precisely as any private individual may deal with his farming property. It may sell or withhold them from sale. It may grant them in aid of railways or other public enterprises. It may open them to preemption or homestead settlement, but it would be recreant to its duties as trustee for the people of the United States to permit any individual or private corporation to monopolize them for private gain and thereby practically drive intending settlers from the market."

And on page 525:

"The General Government doubtless has a power over its own property analogous to the police power of the several States, and the extent to which it may go in the exercise of such power is measured by the exigencies of the particular case. If it be found to be necessary for the protection of the public or of intending settlers to forbid all inclosures of public lands, the Government may do so, though the alternate sections of private lands are thereby rendered less valuable for pasturage. The inconvenience, or even damage, to the individual proprietor does not authorize an act which is in its nature a purpresture of Government lands. While we do not undertake to say that Congress has the unlimited power to legislate against nuisances within a State which it would have within a Territory, we do not think the admission of a Territory as a State deprives it of the power of legislating for the protection of the public lands, though it may thereby involve the exercise of what is ordinarily known as the police power, so long as such power is directed solely to its own protection. A different rule would place the public domain of the United States completely at the mercy of State legislation."

This, so manifestly the correct doctrine, would seem to cover and to settle the whole question and to authorize the proposition that, as to public lands within a State, the Government has all the rights of an individual proprietor, supplemented with the power to make and enforce its own laws for the assertion of those rights and for the disposal and full and complete management, control, and protection of its lands.

Among these undoubted rights is the right of absolute or partial exclusion, either at all or at special times and for any or for special purposes.

While Congress certainly may by law prohibit and punish the entry upon or use of any part of these forest reserves for the purpose of the killing, capture, or pursuit of game, this would not be sufficient. There are many persons now on these reserves by authority of law, and people are expressly authorized to go there, and it would be necessary to go further and to prohibit the killing, capture, or pursuit of game, even though the entry upon the reserve is not for that purpose. But the right to forbid intrusion for the purpose of killing game is one thing, and the right to forbid and punish the killing, per se, and without reference to any trespass on the property, is another. The first may be forbidden as a trespass and for the protection of the property; but when a person is lawfully there and not a trespasser or intruder the question is different.

But I am decidedly of opinion that Congress may forbid and punish the killing of game on these reserves, no matter that the slayer is lawfully there and is not a trespasser. If Congress may prohibit the use of these reserves for any purpose, it may for another; and while Congress permits persons to be upon and use them for various purposes, it may fix limits to such use and occupation and prescribe the purpose and objects for which they shall not be used, as for the killing, capture, or pursuit of specified kinds of game. Generally, any private owner may forbid, upon his own land, any act that he chooses, although the act may be lawful in itself; and certainly Congress, invested also with legislative power, may do the same thing, just as it may prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors, though such sale is otherwise lawful.

After considerable attention to the whole subject, I have no hesitation in expressing my opinion that Congress has ample power to forbid and punish any and all kinds of trespass upon or injury to the forest reserves, including the trespass of entering upon or using them for the killing, capture, or pursuit of game.

The exercise of these powers would not conflict with any State authority. Most of the States have laws forbidding the killing, capture, or pursuit of different kinds of game during specified portions of the year. This makes such killing, etc., lawful at other times, but only lawful because not made unlawful. And it is lawful only when the State has power to make it lawful by either implication or direct enactment. But, except in those cases already referred to, such as eminent domain, service of process, etc., no State has power to authorize or make lawful a trespass upon private property. So that, though Congress should prohibit such killing, etc., upon its own lands at all seasons of the year, this would not conflict with any State authority or control. That the preservation of game is part of the public policy of those States and for the benefit of their own people is shown by their own legislation, and they can not complain if Congress upon its own lands goes even further in that direction than the State so long as the open season of the State law is not interfered with in any place where such law is paramount.

It has always been the policy of the Government to invite and induce the purchase and settlement of its public lands, and as the existence of game thereon and in their localities adds to the desirability of the lands and is a well-known inducement to their purchase, it may well be considered whether, for this purpose alone and without reference to the protection of the lands from trespass, Congress may not, on its own lands, prohibit the killing of such game.

Your other questions relate to the method of enforcing these Federal powers, if they exist, to the nature and kind of laws therefor. While such questions are peculiarly for Congress, yet, as you request it, I will suggest what occurs to me.

You very properly suggest the power of Congress over interstate commerce as tending indirectly to this end, by prohibiting interstate transportation of game, living or dead, or of the skins or any part thereof. There is some legislation upon that subject. I do not take the pains to examine this to see how sufficient it is; but if not already done something to the end desired may be accomplished in this way, but as a remedy this would fall far short of what is required.

You allude also to the aid and cooperation of forest rangers and those in charge for the enforcement of State laws. This would be well, and especially so in the way of securing good feeling and harmonious action between Federal and State authorities. There is a provision for that in the act of March 3, 1899 (2 Sup. Rev. Stat., 903), but it simply imposes a very general duty, and should be more specific as to what acts are required to be done.

In this connection, and with reference also to the general protection of these reserves and the other public lands from fires, cutting timber, killing game, and other depredations, I would suggest, in view of the existing law as to arrest without a warrant, whether it would not be well to give marshals and their deputies, and the superintendents, supervisors, rangers, and other persons charged with the protection of these reserves power, on the public lands, in certain cases approaching "hot pursuit," to arrest without warrant.

Complaints come to this Department that very often the place of illegal acts is so far from the office of any magistrate, and the means of communication such, that before formal complaint can be made and an officer with a warrant sent there the offenders are beyond successful pursuit. I commend this to your consideration. No matter what laws we may have for the protection of these reserves, the public lands generally, or the game, they would be in a very great many cases wholly inefficient, owing to the impossibility, under the present law as to arrests, of their enforcement.

There are already many statutes against setting fires and trespassing upon the public lands. Perhaps these are sufficient, so far as laws go. I do not examine this; but as to the protection of game on forest reserves drastic laws for that purpose, together with better means, as above suggested, for their enforcement, are required.

I would suggest the making it an offense to enter or be upon or use any portion of a forest reserve for the purpose or with the intent to kill, capture, or pursue (certain specified kinds of) game, or to kill, capture, or pursue with intent to kill or capture such game, on any portion of such reserve, and I would do this for the whole year as to some kinds of game, at least, and make such killing, capture, or pursuit the evidence of such purpose or intent. The latter clause, as you will see, proceeds against the act itself, irrespective of any trespass upon the lands, if, indeed, such act does not necessarily involve a technical legal trespass. But this may be questionable in case, for example, when one who is properly there, kills game. I would insert it at any rate, and it will, with the other, operate as a preventive.

Respectfully,

P. C. KNOX, Attorney-General.

Hon. JOHN F. LACEY,
House of Representatives.

Mr. LACEY. Now I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE] for a question.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I am in favor of the bill, but I want to ask the chairman of the committee if the question was considered of providing conditions under which there might be exception to this section 2. As I understand it, if this bill becomes a law, there can be no hunting or trapping or fishing whatever within this reservation under any conditions; and what I wanted to ask the gentleman was whether or not the committee considered giving some department of the Government authority to grant the privilege under certain conditions—for instance, to fish? Fishing is permitted in the Yellowstone Park, and I do not think that any harm has come from it. This provision is pretty binding.

Mr. LACEY. The purpose of this bill was to make a perpetual closed season as to legitimate game within that much of the area, in order that it might be a breeding place from which the animals and birds might overflow into the other parts of the State of Washington, just as to-day the Yellowstone Park furnishes a great and perpetual source of supply for the adjoining States of Idaho, Montana, and Wyoming, and even Utah. In the case of the Olympic Reserve the area was cut down to 750,000 acres, because it was believed that that would be sufficient. Originally, however, this question came up at the request of the people of Washington, because of the fact that there was in that range the only remaining herd of elk in that whole region. They are importing elk into Michigan and moose into Maine, trying to restore again those animals to the woods of those States.

It was believed that while a small herd of the original elk remained in Washington it was wise, as they were already on a tract of land that was reserved absolutely from sale or settlement, to give them protection there, and while this bill primarily had that special object in view it was also made broad enough so that the grouse and other wild birds and animals of that forest could also use it as a breeding ground. Congress passed a law of like import for the Wichita Reserve in the new State of Oklahoma, to the very great delight and satisfaction of the people down there. A similar bill was passed in the last session of this Congress as to southern Utah, giving them the benefit of a like reserve in a portion of the Grand Canyon Forest Reserve. Now, we have pending upon the Calendar a bill authorizing the same action to be taken by the Executive generally in other localities. Some opposition has arisen to a general bill, and it was deemed better, perhaps, to press separate bills for such localities as really wanted this sort of legislation, and give them the benefit of it. Washington has come in and asked it, Utah has asked it, Oklahoma has asked it and got the benefit of it, and I have no doubt that other States or Territories will avail themselves of this legislative power by requesting Congress to grant them a similar reserve for game in the forest reserves, possibly in the gentleman's own State.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The gentleman has not yet answered the point that I made. Suppose, in the course of time, that the game upon this reserve multiplies so that it might be advisable to transplant from that reservation certain game animals. Under this bill how could you do it?

Mr. LACEY. I do not think it could be done under this bill. It, however, could be done, I think, under the general Federal law (known as the Lacey Act), which placed the protection of game within the jurisdiction of the Secretary of Agriculture, and forbade its export when killed or taken in violation of local law. The general bill also gives to the Secretary the power that would enable him to take game within any particular game preserve and transfer the animals to another preserve. This bill does not, either by implication or in terms, attempt to repeal that law. I think there is already ample authority.

Now, that was one of the purposes in making the Wichita Reserve. It had been desired to take quail in the Territory of Oklahoma and transfer them to Maryland and other localities. It could not be done under the local law, but by having a breeding ground especially set apart in the Wichita Reserve, under the general power that the Secretary has, he might transfer quail from Wichita Reserve to Maryland or South Carolina or Tennessee, or other places, that might for the time being need the additional replenishment.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Suppose an animal should become vicious or diseased and it is desirable to destroy him. Under this bill, would any person have the right to go out there and kill him? Who could authorize him to do so?

Mr. LACEY. There was no attempt to go into details. Further legislation could be enacted from time to time, in order to meet any such question as my friend from South Dakota suggests, or which might hereafter arise. The present purpose was to make the reservation.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. What I want to know is whether the committee had considered putting into this bill a provision that would make it possible to accomplish these things, if it ever became desirable?

Mr. LACEY. I think under the general power to make regulations in the Territories of the United States, a power vested in the Secretary of Agriculture, who has charge of this particular reserve, because it is a part of the forest reserve, under the general power given him, he would undoubtedly have the power to carry out the purposes my friend has in view.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. If an act is unlawful, there is no person that can make it lawful. Does not this act say that it shall be unlawful for any person to do certain things?

Mr. LACEY. Yes; but there in another provision of statute law saying that such things shall be lawful for a certain Government official. This does not interfere with that provision. He is not a "person" within the meaning of this statute; he is a Government official in charge of the reserve. Of course there is nothing in this bill that would in any way interfere with the slaughter of these animals or birds that got outside of the boundary of the reserve.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Let me suggest in that connection and in connection with the question put by the gentleman from South Dakota, that while preparing this bill my colleague considered the question whether the power should be invested in the Secretary of the Interior to give permission to people to go in and hunt. Our people at this time do not want anything of that kind.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Was the question of fishing considered?

Mr. JONES of Washington. That question was considered also.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of this bill, and I want to ask the gentleman from Iowa whether he does not think there should be a more particular designation of the birds and animals? This bill says "for the protection of game animals, birds and fishes therein." I take it that you want to protect mink, otter, muskrat, which might not come within the designation of game animals, and also you would want to protect robins, bluebirds, and all kinds of birds which might not come strictly within the designation of game birds.

Mr. LACEY. The word "game" does not apply to birds; it applies to the animals and not to the birds or fishes, according to the punctuation.

Mr. OLMSTED. I believe that the punctuation in an act does not control. Would it not be better to amend it so as to include all birds and particular animals that you wish to protect?

Mr. LACEY. It is not desirable to protect all animals, for there are wolves in this reserve.

Mr. OLMSTED. They are game.

Mr. LACEY. No; they are not; they come within the class that I called "vermin" a short time ago. They are not game animals.

Mr. OLMSTED. They are game that hunters go after.

Mr. LACEY. They kill them, but not as game.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Let me interrupt the gentleman. You construe this bill that if game birds or animals escape from the reserve and get out into the State territory—that is, beyond the limits of the reserve—anybody has a right to hunt or kill them?

Mr. LACEY. Unquestionably; the bill does not go beyond that. It only legislates for the reserve.

Mr. OLMSTED. Is the grizzly bear a game animal?

Mr. LACEY. I am inclined to think that he would be; but that would be a matter of construction.

Mr. OLMSTED. Well, the bill leaves it all open to construction. My inquiry is whether it would not be better to specify the particular animals which it is sought to protect.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, the committee thought best not to go into the details, because there might be a question raised as to whether a particular animal ought to be protected. The general term "game animals" has been well understood, because the State itself has legislated and declared what should be regarded as game.

Mr. MONDELL. Does the gentleman understand that this applies only to what he considers game animals and that as to predatory wild animals the State law would apply?

Mr. LACEY. I think undoubtedly.

Mr. MONDELL. Then we would have a dual jurisdiction over animals in this territory—the jurisdiction of the Federal Government over game animals, birds and fishes, and the jurisdiction of the State over predatory wild animals.

Mr. LACEY. Wherever the two jurisdictions did not conflict of course they would both apply, and where they do conflict the Federal jurisdiction of course would take control, because it is in the territory of the United States.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. Speaker, before debate on this bill is closed I would like to state that my colleague [Mr. HUMPHREY], who is the author of this bill and who has taken a very great interest in it, was called out of town last evening on very urgent business. He did not know this bill would come up, and I think in justice to him this statement should be made to appear. I also ask unanimous consent that he may have leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD on this bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington asks that his colleague, the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY], may have leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD on this bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I now move the previous question on the bill to its final passage.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the previous question.

The question was taken; and the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, I would like to inquire whether the bill is subject to amendment at this time.

The SPEAKER. The previous question having been ordered, it is not. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. LACEY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. Is there any further business from the Committee on Public Lands? If not, the Clerk will call the next committee.

The Clerk proceeded with the call of committees.

Mr. SHERMAN (when the Committee on Indian Affairs was called). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Indian Affairs be passed without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the Committee on Indian Affairs be passed without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MAKING INHABITANTS OF PORTO RICO CITIZENS OF UNITED STATES.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin (when the Committee on Insular Affairs was called). Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 17661) providing that the inhabitants of Porto Rico shall be citizens of the United States, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The SPEAKER. This bill which the gentleman from Wisconsin calls up seems to be on the Union Calendar and not subject to a call of committees.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I think it does not make any appropriation. I do not understand why it should be on the Union Calendar. There is no tax upon the Government whatever. It carries no appropriation.

The SPEAKER. Has the gentleman the act on his desk which this bill seeks to amend?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, it is the organic act, known as the "Foraker Act," creating a civil government in Porto Rico. This bill seeks to amend a section of that act. I will hand to the Speaker a copy of the act.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin seeks to call up the bill (H. R. 17661) reported from the Committee on Insular Affairs, with an amendment, providing that the inhabitants of Porto Rico shall be citizens of the United States. This bill is on the Union Calendar and not upon the House Calendar. Being upon the Union Calendar, it is, therefore, not within the rule. The gentleman, however, makes the point that the bill should not be upon the Union Calendar, but ought to be upon the House Calendar. The Chair, upon examination of the bill, is inclined to the opinion that the bill ought to be upon the House and not upon the Union Calendar. The bill, however, is upon the Union Calendar.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, if the Chair will permit, I would like at this point to inquire if that bill undertakes to confer American citizenship on all of the people in Porto Rico?

The SPEAKER. It does, apparently.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. It seems to me that that is such a bill as ought to be considered in a full House.

The SPEAKER. That is a question for the House to determine. The Chair is dealing now only with the point that the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] makes—that the bill is improperly on the Union Calendar and should be upon the House Calendar.

Mr. OLMSTED. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. OLMSTED. Whether, being upon the wrong Calendar, it can not now be put upon the right Calendar and called up under a call of committees, and can it not now be treated as on the House Calendar, where it properly belongs?

The SPEAKER. If it is on the wrong Calendar. On the point being made, under the practice of the House, it is within the power of the Chair to transfer it to the proper Calendar. The Chair sustains the point of order, and the bill is ordered to the House Calendar. Has the gentleman any other bill to call up?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Nothing more.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I raise the question of consideration.

The SPEAKER. The bill is not up now.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. All right; I withdraw the remark.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill H. R. 17661, reported by the Committee on Insular Affairs.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri, as the Chair understands, objects to the consideration of the bill at this time.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. Now, then, upon that motion it has been held that a bill must be actually on the House Calendar, and properly so also, in order to be considered in the morning hour. The idea is, as the Chair understands the ruling and the rule, that the House should have notice of what is liable to be called upon the House Calendar in the morning hour. Now, the House did not have that notice upon the Calendar when the gentleman called the bill, and the gentleman then elected to make the point of order that the bill should be upon the House Calendar and not upon the Union Calendar. In the opinion of the Chair, as the gentleman from Missouri objects, the bill is not subject to call to-day in the morning hour.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. Would it be in order to make a motion that the Committee on Insular Affairs pass by this call without prejudice?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can ask unanimous consent. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent—just what was the gentleman's request?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I ask unanimous consent that this bill be taken up for consideration next Monday at 2 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that the bill may be taken up next Monday at 2 o'clock.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I object.

The SPEAKER. To which the gentleman from Missouri objects.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I then move that the bill be taken up next Monday at 2 o'clock.

Mr. PAYNE. Of course that is not in order.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That is out of order.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is made upon that motion. It seems to the Chair the motion is not in order.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask the Committee on Insular Affairs be passed upon this call without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. It requires unanimous consent.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, I will ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Insular Affairs be passed without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the Committee on Insular Affairs be passed without prejudice.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I object to that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri objects. As the gentleman has no other bill, the Chair will order the next committee to be called.

When the Committee on Education was called,

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to inquire whether the call of the Committee on Education at this time does away with the passing without prejudice of the Committee on Education heretofore?

The SPEAKER. In the Chair's opinion, yes.

GOODS, ETC., MANUFACTURED BY CONVICT LABOR, ETC.

When the Committee on Labor was called,

Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the Committee on Labor be passed without prejudice.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I think I shall have to object to that.

The SPEAKER. To which the gentleman from New York objects.

Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey. Then, Mr. Speaker, I move the following bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 12318) to limit the effect of the regulation of interstate commerce between the several States in goods, wares, and merchandise wholly or in part manufactured by convict labor or in any prison or reformatory.

Be it enacted, etc., That all goods, wares, and mechandise manufactured wholly or in part by convict labor, or in any prison or reformatory, transported into any State or Territory or remaining therein for use, consumption, sale, or storage, shall, upon arrival and delivery in such State or Territory, be subject to the operation and effect of the laws of such State or Territory to the same extent and in the same manner as though such goods, wares, and merchandise had been manufactured in such State or Territory, and shall not be exempt therefrom by reason of being introduced in original packages or otherwise.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey. How much time does the gentleman from Georgia desire?

Mr. BARTLETT. I do not want any time; I want to make an inquiry of the Chair and of the gentleman. This seems to be a bill which deals altogether with matters of interstate commerce, and I understand the gentleman reports this bill from the Committee on Labor. I would like to raise the question of consideration on this bill—as to the right of the Committee on Labor to consider a matter which affects altogether interstate commerce. It is a bill drawn almost in the same words as a bill known as the Wilson bill, passed in 1890, which had reference to the transportation of manufactured spirits. This bill does not appear to have any reference to labor—simply a matter which deals altogether with interstate commerce—and I raise the point that the Committee on Labor has no jurisdiction of this bill. I raised the point of order, Mr. Speaker, that the Committee on Labor had no jurisdiction over this bill.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, may I make a parliamentary inquiry here?

The SPEAKER. First permit the Chair to make a statement as to the gentleman's point of order. The gentleman at this stage makes the point of order that the Committee on Labor did not have jurisdiction of this bill, and not having jurisdiction to report, the House can not consider the same.

Mr. BARTLETT. Can not consider the same upon call of the committees from the Committee on Labor.

The SPEAKER. Upon this order?

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes, sir; that is the point.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Can not the House go along and pass a bill regardless of what committee reports it? I think it can. I will answer my own question. I would like to have it from higher authority also.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear from the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT].

Mr. BARTLETT. We are acting on the call of committees. The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce has not considered this bill. The call now rests upon the Committee on Labor. The Committee on Labor calls up a bill which it has had under consideration and which has been reported by that committee. Upon inquiry and upon the reading of the bill it is demonstrated that it has no reference whatever to the question of labor, but it deals altogether with a matter of interstate commerce—the transportation of goods between one State and another—and undertakes to deal altogether with the interstate-commerce law. In other words, but for the fact that under the interstate-commerce clause of the Constitution the Congress shall have sole power to deal with them, the States would. This bill says all shipments of goods manufactured by means of convict labor, or any other labor described in the bill, shall, when transported to channels of interstate commerce and arriving in a State, be subject to the laws of that State, as though they had not been therein conveyed by means of interstate commerce. The whole purpose of the bill is to affect interstate commerce. And I make the point of order that this committee had no right to consider the bill, and having considered it and reported it, the House ought not to consider it upon the call of this committee.

[Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey addressed the House. See Appendix.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair is prepared to rule. It is very well settled by many precedents, as expressed in the Digest in the following words:

The erroneous reference of a public bill, if it remain uncorrected, in effect gives jurisdiction to the committee receiving it.

Now, if this was an erroneous reference, the rule provided a means by which it was within the power of the House to take the bill from the committee and refer it to such other committee as they saw proper to refer it to; but the House not having taken that action, the committee having the bill, it being a public bill, and reported to the House, it seems to the Chair it is subject to the call in the morning hour. Therefore the Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make the point of order that the chairman of this committee has no right under the call of committees to call up this bill, unless he is authorized by the committee to so call it up, and I am reliably informed that he does not have the authority of the Committee on Labor to do so.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman from New Jersey on the question of fact as to whether he is authorized to call up this bill.

Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey. As to the question of whether I was authorized to call up this bill, there is no mistake about it. The committee authorized it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey is recognized.

[Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. HUNT. Mr. Speaker, this bill is not a new piece of legislation. It was presented, if I remember correctly, to the Fifty-sixth Congress and passed this House almost unanimously. It failed to pass the Senate; hence the necessity for renewing the attempt to secure this much-needed legislation. It is, as the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] observes, an attempt to curb the criminal competition of the penitentiary with the free labor of the country. It seeks to bring about a reform in that direction which of itself will aid the different States that have attempted heretofore to regulate the sale of convict-made goods and by reason of the absence of Federal legislation have been prevented from carrying out the objects intended to be accomplished. For instance, the State of New York has withdrawn its convicts from competition with the free labor of the State. Yet the State of New York is at the mercy of every other State in the Union which seeks to ship its convict-made products within the borders of that State. It only seeks, as was sought in the Wilson liquor law, to abrogate the interstate-commerce provision and to enable the States to legislate for themselves on the subject of the employment of their convicts.

This legislation appeals to the manufacturer as much as to the laborer. It is cruel to ask the free labor of this country to maintain its citizenship, its dignity, and its self-respect if it has to wait until the product of the State prison is sold before the employer can get a reasonable price for his honestly manufactured product. For that reason it has become necessary to aid the pioneers (for the States have been the pioneers) in this work of endeavoring to secure a real reform in this direction.

It will not work any injury upon any State that does not seek to avail itself of the privileges of this bill. They are at liberty to take advantage of its provisions or not as they see fit. It only seeks to arouse the patriotism of the wage-workers of this country to the fact that this country is not oblivious to their wants. It only seeks to beget a patriotic feeling that after all it is not necessary to go into combinations or cliques in order to secure reasonable and fair legislation for the people of this country. [Applause.]

It seeks to put citizenship above class or clique; it seeks to bring us a little closer to the avenues of legislation, so that we can feel at least that we are not to be set apart and marked for discrimination. It is national legislation that we seek here that has for its object the welfare of the manufacturer as well as the uplifting of the wage-earner, and for that reason I hope this American Congress will at least do this which can not be questioned as favoring or savoring of class legislation or discrimination; that it will only do this so that if the State of Missouri or New York or any other State of this Union wants to protect its citizens from coming into competition with the products of the penitentiary, it can do so. We ask you, as representatives of this great nation, to allow the different States to exercise their police powers to that extent. [Applause.]

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. HUNT. Certainly.

Mr. HEPBURN. What is the per cent of prison-made goods of the whole manufactures of the United States? How large an interest is this?

Mr. HUNT. In answer to the gentleman, I will state that this bill came up rather suddenly. At the last session of Congress I secured some data, and in the aggregate the percentage is not great. The exact amount I can find for the gentleman in a few minutes, and will furnish it to him before the hour expires. It is a small percentage when compared with the great business of this country, but in some particular lines of business the honest manufacturer is forced out of business altogether or is in a position where he is unable to sell his products until after the prison products have been disposed of.

Mr. HEPBURN. Can the gentleman give the House the percentage of prison-made goods that seek a market outside of the limits of the State?

Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey. About 51 per cent.

Mr. HUNT. I can only say that when the bill was introduced last winter I applied to the Labor Commissioner, and I found that there had been no statistics collected covering that question for a later date than twenty-odd years ago; but at the time of my asking the question of the Labor Commissioner he set his agents to work securing that data, all of which can be found in a speech which I delivered during the first session of the present Congress. I thank the House for its kind attention. [Applause.]

Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I now yield two minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY].

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, not for the purpose of opposing the bill, but because I believe it involves a very great question of governmental policy have I determined to say a few words. I think it may be well for the House to understand just why this legislation is needed, and just what is undertaken to be accomplished by it, because it is only the forerunner of many similar bills that are going to be brought to this House in regard to other subject-matters.

Under the decision of the Supreme Court in Brown v. Maryland it was held that the right to import articles from a foreign country carried with it the right to sell those articles. Subsequently it was held that as to interstate commerce this was not true; that the right to import from one State into another did not carry with it the right to sell. That decision, however, was subsequently reversed by the Supreme Court in the case of Leisy v. Hardin, if my memory serves me right. There the Supreme Court put interstate commerce upon the same footing as foreign commerce, and held that the right to import carried with it the right to sell. In that decision the Supreme Court intimated that while the right to import carried with it the right to sell, Congress could in its discretion take away from the importation that incident, and could give the State into which the importation was made control of the subject.

Congress, acting upon that hint, did pass what was known as the "Wilson law," which applied to alcoholic liquors and provided that alcoholic liquors shipped from one State to another State should be subject to the law of the State into which they were shipped, the same as if manufactured there, all of these rulings of course applying to shipments of articles in the original package. Subsequently it was determined by the Supreme Court, in construing the Wilson Act, that it applied only after delivery of the article to the consignee and not before delivery, as had been contended by some of the advocates; and since that decision we have had pending before the Judiciary Committee in this House the proposition to give the State control over interstate shipments the moment they reach the State boundary, even before delivery.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman yield three minutes more?

Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey. Yes.

Mr. SHERLEY. That has never yet been acquiesced in by Congress, and in my humble judgment would be an unconstitutional exercise of power if attempted, because it would then interfere with interstate shipments.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes; for a question.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. The gentleman says it is an unconstitutional measure. The gentleman will admit that the Judiciary Committee unanimously reported in favor of the Hepburn-Dolliver C. O. D. liquor bill, and that that bill passed through the House here one session of Congress by a practically unanimous vote.

Mr. SHERLEY. Oh, Mr. Speaker, I am not undertaking to convert the gentleman. He is wedded to his view of the law and is entitled to it.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. It seems as though the whole committee were wedded to that view of the law.

Mr. SHERLEY. Of course, that also may be the fact. The gentleman's voluntary statement inserted into my remarks may suit him. They certainly were not with my permission. The proposition I make here is simply this: That the power of Congress can go to the extent of giving the State control of an article as soon as it reaches the hands of the consignee and can prevent sales subsequently. Now, that is an important question not simply in regard to this matter, but in regard to many matters. There are abuses growing up all over the country, due to the selfishness of some States and their disregard of the wishes of other States. It may be that the solution of much of the trouble that now confronts the country lies in giving back to the State control over the commerce originating in another State as soon as it is delivered to the consignee, and it was only because I realized how broad the question was, how it would eventually reach out to embrace other subjects, that I take this occasion to call the attention of the House to it. The effect of this bill will not prevent the shipment into a State of convict-made goods. It will not prevent any person within a State making a contract with anyone in another State and receiving convict-made goods; but it will make these goods the moment they are delivered to that consignee subject to the general law of the State in which he resides. Personally I see no objection to the bill, but I felt that it was due the House that the Members should understand the effect of the law.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. I would like to ask my colleague his opinion as to the power of Congress to declare that a given article shall not be considered a subject of interstate commerce.

Mr. SHERLEY. In answer to the gentleman I would state that he has, by a very simple inquiry, brought up a very grave constitutional question. In my judgment the real line of distinction is this—and it has been so intimated by the Supreme Court in the Vance case and in several subsequent cases—that the right to sell on the part of the consignee articles imported into a State is an incident of interstate commerce, and being simply an incident of interstate commerce, Congress can take away that right and say that an article shall lose its interstate character at an earlier period of time than it otherwise would lose it. But there is a material distinction between an incident of interstate commerce and interstate commerce itself. You can not have interstate commerce unless the article shipped from one State is permitted to go into the other States, because it follows manifestly that there can not be any interstate character to it unless it crosses the State line; and if the State into which it is shipped is given control of it the moment it reaches the line, it can prevent it from coming into the State and can therefore destroy interstate commerce.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman from New Jersey yield me five minutes more?

Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey. Very well.

Mr. SHERLEY. Congress can of its own volition prohibit interstate commerce in any article, judging by the decision in the lottery cases. In the lottery cases Congress held a lottery ticket to be commerce within the sense of the commerce clause and prohibited interstate commerce in lottery tickets, but the prohibition by Congress of interstate commerce is entirely different from the prohibition by a State of interstate commerce. The one is clearly within the power of Congress and the other, in my judgment, is not. This bill goes to the utmost limit of power in Congress to give to the States control over interstate commerce, and it affects only the article after it has reached the consignee.

Mr. BOUTELL. In other words, the gentleman thinks that by striking out the first two words in line 7 it would make this bill unconstitutional, as I understand him.

Mr. SHERLEY. I think that if they had left the bill as originally drawn it would have been unconstitutional, because then it would have said "upon arrival."

Mr. BOUTELL. If the first two words were stricken out in line 7 it would make the bill obnoxious to the point?

Mr. SHERLEY. I think this: If we undertook to make the law apply to goods before they were delivered to the consignee, the moment they got to the State line, then it would be unconstitutional, and for this further reason, it would be giving the State law extraterritorial effect. If I enter into a contract with the gentleman from Illinois, in Illinois, to ship to the State of Kentucky certain goods, that is a valid contract made in Illinois. The State of Kentucky can not by her law reach out and declare a contract valid in the State of Illinois invalid and destroy it by prohibiting the delivery of the article to me, but under an action of this kind by Congress the State of Kentucky could say the moment it was received by me in Kentucky that I should not have any further right over it than I would have if the property had originated within the State of Kentucky.

Mr. HEPBURN. Let me ask the gentleman a question so that I may understand his position. If I understand the gentleman from Kentucky, he says that it is competent for Congress to authorize the State of Iowa to extend its laws at once over the products of labor of the penitentiary of Kentucky that may as interstate commerce go into Iowa.

Mr. SHERLEY. No; the gentleman's statement is not accurate of my position. My position is this, that it is competent for Congress to give to the State of Iowa power to say that after delivery of convict-made goods of Kentucky to the citizens of Iowa they shall be subject to the law of Iowa the same as if made in Iowa.

Mr. HEPBURN. After delivery—you make the point on that? You make your point on the word "delivery?"

Mr. SHERLEY. Unquestionably. The dispute between the gentleman from Iowa and myself is simply this: The Wilson law, of which this is a copy, is constitutional. It is no longer a matter of argument. The Supreme Court so held in the Rahrer case; but when they construed that law they declined to construe it as gentlemen wanted it. The advocates of that law said it meant before as well as after delivery. The Supreme Court said no, the proper interpretation of it makes it apply only after delivery, and the Supreme Court intimated that if Congress undertook to pass a law that made it apply before delivery it would be an unconstitutional exercise of power. The gentleman's bill in amendment of the Wilson bill is an attempt to do that, and, in my judgment, is unconstitutional. I simply entered into this discussion not for the purpose of opposing the bill, because I have no opposition to it, but because it involves a very great question that in the course of time is going to affect many articles of commerce, and I felt what little research I had made on the subject might be of value to the House in considering the measure.

Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. VREELAND].

Mr. VREELAND. Mr. Speaker, it has been a great many months since this bill was before the committee for consideration. It has come up suddenly to-day, and we are not as familiar with it as we were at that time. My recollection is that the bill received the unanimous report of the Committee on Labor.

Mr. HUNT. That is correct.

Mr. VREELAND. It does not always happen, Mr. Speaker, that I can support all bills brought before the Committee on Labor. It very often happens I am obliged to oppose them. This bill received the indorsement and was urged by all of the federated bodies of labor that appeared before our committee, and I am glad to be able to support it, because I believe this is a just bill and ought to be passed by this House. Now, what does this bill do? It simply provides that prison-made goods shall be put under the laws of the State into which they are shipped. The gentleman from Iowa is asking for statistics of prison-made goods. I find that they amounted during the year for which this was given, 1903–4, to something over $33,000,000. I find that 51 per cent of those prison-made goods were sold outside of the States in which they were manufactured. Now, Mr. Speaker, there is a reason why this bill is urged upon this House. Take, for instance, the State of Vermont. It maintains a shoe factory operated by prison labor. No one would advocate that convicts should be kept in idleness, but free labor has the right to urge that convict labor shall not be multiplied and reenforced by machinery and the product of their labor and machinery sent out to compete in the markets of other States with the free labor therein.

Now, we found numerous cases where States prohibited the sale within their own borders of these prison-made goods, but they were sent out, as it appears—more than half of all that were made—to be sold in the markets of other States which were unable to protect themselves.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. VREELAND] has expired.

Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY].

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, permit me for a moment to reply to the able argument of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY]. On yesterday he argued in favor of State rights on the pilotage bill, and to-day we find that his position is diametrically opposite to the one he then took.

What is the proposition involved here? Simply this: That convict-made goods shall, when they arrive within the limits of one of the States of this Union, fall within the laws of that State and be subject to the jurisdiction thereof, just as if they had been manufactured there. The gentleman by his argument somewhat confuses the legal proposition involved. He discusses the Hepburn-Dolliver bill, and does not state exactly the legal doctrines involved. What is the proposition in that measure? It is this: That when intoxicating liquors are shipped from one State to another, when they arrive within the boundaries of the State to which they are shipped, shall immediately fall within the jurisdiction of the laws of that State. The verbiage of the old Wilson bill was substantially that upon arrival within the State to which they are shipped intoxicating liquors should be subject to the laws of that State, but the Supreme Court in construing the statute said that "arrival" did not mean before delivery, but confused the question of "delivery," and held the goods must be in the hands of the purchaser before becoming subject to the laws of such State. The Hepburn-Dolliver bill employs language by way of amendment that intoxicating liquors when shipped from one State to another, "before and after delivery," when they arrive within the limits of the State to which they are shipped "shall be subject to the laws of the State" into which they are shipped. And to that measure, with the amendment proposed, the Judiciary Committee has given unanimous assent, and it is now pending before this House. During a prior session of Congress this House by almost unanimous vote passed the Hepburn-Dolliver bill with such amendment. It went to the Senate, but was not passed by that body.

This measure under consideration is along the same line as that bill—that is to say, when convict-made goods go from one State to another they shall be subject to the laws of the State to which they are shipped. So far as I am concerned, I am willing to plant myself upon the broad proposition that convict-made goods shall not come in competition with the honest labor of this country in any State of the Union. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, that is the question involved here. There is doubt about the legal proposition. If the Supreme Court has decided anything with a striking unanimity, it is that the States of this Union, when Congress remits to them the power to control any article of commerce, shall have jurisdiction over such commerce. This bill puts convict-made goods on the same legal basis with the original-package cases and is copied in almost the identical language of the amended Hepburn-Dolliver bill. Worded as it is, founded upon a wise policy, it shall receive my most cordial support.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Yes, sir.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Entertaining, as the gentleman has announced he does, the view that the Congress has the power under the Constitution to subject articles of interstate commerce, as long as they cross the State lines, to the laws of the particular State into which they are shipped, would it not improve this bill if the words "and delivered" were omitted, so that as soon as these convict-made goods cross a State line in the transit the State laws might operate upon them immediately?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I would add that as soon as they get within the limits of the State, "before and after delivery," they shall be subject to the laws of that State. I think that would perfect the bill.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. I am glad to see the conversion of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY]. I understand that the gentleman had different views on the pure-food matter.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. These are in line with my views on the pure-food proposition precisely. I said the State should pass pure-food laws, and not Congress.

Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES].

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY], who illumines almost any subject which he discusses, in the last session of Congress voted, I believe, to regulate interstate commerce, and I am glad he did. We passed a quarantine bill. I think the gentleman supported that, and I am glad he did, because both laws are good laws and were needed. We also passed the pure-food law. The States were unable to regulate the evils covered by these laws. Congress had to act. All over the country people were somewhat amazed that Congress was exercising so much power over commerce, rather curtailing State rights, and not without some degree of reason and fear, because the quarantine and food laws had not been previously covered by Congress. The States had theretofore taken charge of these matters. Now, then, I am anxious, and I believe the gentleman from Kentucky is, to give back to the State whenever we can, and as they did in the Wilson whisky law, all the powers or all the opportunity the State can possibly have to control commerce that comes within the State from any other State or Territory of the United States. It builds up the State, and without the States, as the Supreme Court said in the great Texas-White case, "without the States we would not have the United States," but, I may add, a united state. We would have one Republic without States; and we are rapidly decimating the States and making of them mere districts or spots upon the map.

Now, here is an opportunity, as it were, to give back to the States the right to say to another State, if you sell and deliver any convict-made goods to this State our State laws shall control them when "delivered." State laws shall control their sales. The State of Tennessee is working our convicts, as I believe, in coal mines. They are no longer making stockings as they did. They are no longer making shoes and ax handles and wheelbarrows and wagons and all that sort of thing. We have stopped all that, I think, and taken the convict and put him in a hole in the ground where he digs coal. In other words, we are giving the law-abiding people a better chance in Tennessee than we ever did. Now, then, gentlemen, what an outrage it would be, and what an outrage it is and has been for the State of Kentucky or the State of Indiana, or any other State—I am not saying that out of any disrespect for the State of Kentucky. I love Kentucky and love her people. My father was a Kentuckian—but what an outrage it would be for Kentucky to unload her convict-made stuff upon the people of Tennessee, upon the honest manufacturer—my son, Jones's son, Brown's son, and Smith's son—and drive him out of the manufacturing business carried on by honest labor. There should be a premium upon a man to become an honest manufacturer, and deter that which would deprive him of the encouragement that he should have. All this law does is to give to the State of Tennessee the right when a merchant in Kentucky shall ship manufactured stuff into the State for the State to take charge of that by State law, so that the honest laborer, the law-abiding citizens of Tennessee shall not be oppressed by products made by outlaws, made by bloody and disreputable convicts of the State of Kentucky, Indiana, Ohio, or any other State. I can not see how any man who wants to preserve the honor and dignity of the people of any State can raise his voice and oppose a measure that leaves each State the right to control this matter without being oppressed by a State that exports convict-made goods and ships them pellmell over the country.

Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, it might be well enough for us to stop and consider, not where we are going, for we all understand that, but how rapidly we are getting there. That we have practically taken from all the States of the Union all their jurisdiction and power will be conceded when we study the past history of the legislation of Congress during the last twenty-five years. Now we have come to the point where we are going along just possibly a little faster than some of us ever contemplated. The line heretofore has been usually drawn in this way: Wherever it is unpleasant to pass a law in a State looking to the police power or regulation of the communities, we call upon Congress to do that. We do not like to pass a temperance law in a community and make it a crime for an express company to deliver liquor, because that would create a sort of irritation in the body politic. So we come to Congress to do that and exercise its control.

Now, there is another line of demarcation. One is, is it profitable to get rid of an incumbrance or a duty? If so, get Congress to take charge of the hospitals and the quarantine service, because that would cost the State some money. So we will abolish the State for that purpose. But is it profitable to the State to make war on some industry, collecting tolls, and make money out of it? In that case we are handed over to the State, don't you see? We draw the line, therefore, on two lines of legislation. We give to the State all the power to make money out of its police regulations and its power to levy tribute upon other States; but whenever it is a little bit disagreeable or is going to cost money to carry that out, we hand it over to Congress.

Now, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES] says that State has turned its convict labor into coal mines. That is not a new thing. In the State of Georgia they raise cotton and corn and hogs and manufacture lumber by convict labor. Now, let us see how far this bill goes in the matter of the coal-mining products of the State of Tennessee.

All goods, wares, and merchandise manufactured wholly or in part by convict labor——

Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey. May I interrupt the gentleman right there?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Certainly.

Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey. Are you going to define coal as a manufactured product?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Certainly. Everybody knows it. Coal is as much a manufactured product as boots and shoes when detached from the real estate and raised to the surface as the product of labor.

Mr. PALMER. Well, it is not only that, but it is prepared for sale by being run through a breaker and otherwise prepared.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Certainly. It is prepared and manufactured into the finished product of the coal mine.

Now, the State of Tennessee mines the coal and sells it to one of its own domestic manufacturing institutions which makes pig iron. Is that pig iron manufactured in whole or in part by convict labor? No man will deny it, and that product is excluded from all the States of this Union, except the State of its manufacture; and that is absolutely true of the corn, the cotton, and whatever else is raised in the State of Georgia. Now, if this bill had limited its proposition to all goods, wares, and merchandise manufactured to the finished product in a penal institution of the State, and had provided that such product should be subjected to the provisions of this bill, it would have been sensible, and would not have gone to the absurdity that this bill has gone to at last.

[The time of Mr. GROSVENOR having expired, Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey yielded to him two minutes.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. I am perfectly willing that the bill should be passed. I shall lay no obstacle in its way, but I want to point out that it is one of those devices to rid the State of its duty and obligation. If the State of Tennessee or the State of Ohio does not want convict-made goods to be sold in that State, all it has to do is to say so in a statute and not undertake to come to this proposition. See what we are coming to next! I am not at liberty to refer to the tremendous momentum of statesmanship that is pushing a certain proposition, but it is that no product of a child's labor shall be transported on any of the railroads of this country. See what we are coming to, see where we are going to land. My proposition is that we ought bravely to walk right up to the scheme and offer a constitutional amendment wiping out all the States, and confer all police regulation of the States upon very few individuals—very few. [Laughter.]

Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey. I move the previous question on the bill and pending amendments to its passage.

Mr. SHERLEY. Before the gentleman makes that motion I should like just a couple of minutes to reply to the remarks of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY].

Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey. I will defer the motion for two minutes.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, sometimes the force of a blow is shown by the recoil. Perhaps I should be flattered at the amount of disturbance a little speech of mine, made in the hope of giving the House some information, has created. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY] seems to be, by self-appointment, the custodian of the only real and true theory of States rights. Now, that is a word much abused in this life, and especially in this place. I am what is supposed to be a States-rights man, but I also try to be a lawyer, and whenever I find the law a certain way, I accept the law whether it fits my theoretical view or not, because I realize that the law is the law, and my view is not necessarily so.

I tried to show to the House, not that this bill is unconstitutional, because it is not. It is constitutional, being exactly in line with the Wilson bill; but I tried to show that if an attempt was made to go further and to prevent the delivery of shipments from one State to another, that would be unconstitutional.

Sometimes I find myself like the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY] fighting for what both of us agree to be State rights, but I always try to determine what the law is, whether it suits a theory or not; and having determined it, I follow it. Therefore I have endeavored to make plain to the House a distinction that evidently is beyond the appreciation of the gentleman. [Laughter.]

Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I yield a half minute to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA].

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. Speaker, I am heartily in favor of this bill. Labor is entitled to protection and fair treatment, and to place convict labor in competition with free labor is, I believe, unfair. The labor organizations are justified in asking for the protection that this bill will give them if enacted into law. They have a right to ask for legislation that is just and fair and will benefit the laboring class. To ask more is unwise. In North Dakota we have in our State constitution a provision forbidding the manufacture or sale of any intoxicating liquors. A great number of the people of our State are interested in legislation of this kind, giving the State the right to enforce the law placed upon the statute books of the State. While I know that this particular bill does not affect that special subject, I simply want to say that I am in favor of it and shall vote for the bill.

Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the pending amendments and on the bill to the final passage.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman moves the previous question on the bill and amendments to the final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time.

The question being taken on the passage of the bill,

Mr. HASKINS demanded a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 138, noes 3.

Mr. HASKINS made the point of no quorum present, but subsequently withdrew the point.

Accordingly the bill was passed.

The title of the bill was amended to conform to the text.

On motion of Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the next committee.

The Clerk proceeded with and completed the call of committees.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I understand that the legislative appropriation bill can be reported in about ten minutes. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK] expressed himself as desirous of making some remarks on the President's message. I do not see him at the present moment in the Chamber. If there is any other gentleman present who would like to discuss the President's message, I will move to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for that purpose.

As there is no Member who seems ready to discuss it, I will ask the House to take a recess for twenty minutes in order that the appropriation bill may be reported.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 2 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the House was declared in recess until 3 o'clock p. m.

AFTER THE RECESS.

The recess having expired, the House was called to order by the Speaker.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BINGHAM, from the Committee on Appropriations, by direction of that committee, reported the bill (H. R. 21574) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and with the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

Mr. BURLESON reserved all points of order on said bill.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I desire to give notice that, by direction of the Committee on Appropriations, the bill will be called up for consideration on Monday next.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 2 minutes p. m.) the House, in pursuance of its previous order, adjourned until Monday next at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, submitting a reply to the inquiry of the House as to the space to be gained by the removal and storage of certain files now in executive offices and in buildings rented for storage purposes—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting the annual report of the Surgeon-General of the Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service for the fiscal year 1906—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a letter from the Secretary of Commerce and Labor submitting an estimate of appropriation for purchase of two portable hospital pavilions for use at Ellis Island, New York—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a letter from the Secretary of War submitting an estimate of appropriation for mileage to officers and contract surgeons—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, submitting a report of the treasurer of Porto Rico of the receipts and disbursements for the fiscal year ended October 31, 1906—to the Committee on Insular Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting the report of the auditor of Porto Rico of receipts and expenditures for the year ended October 31, 1906—to the Committee on Insular Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting reports of examinations and surveys for irrigation purposes—to the Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands, and ordered to be printed, with illustrations.

A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, with a copy of a communication from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, a draft of a bill to authorize reservation of power and reservoir sites on Indian reservations—to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, with a copy of a letter from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, a draft of a bill for granting right of way for certain purposes through Indian reservations—to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 20178) in relation to the Washington Market Company, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 5326); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 21408) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the keeping of employment agencies in the District of Columbia where fees are charged for procuring employment or situations," approved June 19, 1906, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 5327); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

Mr. BRADLEY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 10403) granting an increase of pension to James H. Odell, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 5210); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 3226) granting an increase of pension to John E. Leahy, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 5211); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 21119) granting an increase of pension to Alexander Boshea, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 5212); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. CHANEY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 21179) granting an increase of pension to Charles Green, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 5213); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 21124) granting an increase of pension to William Hubbard, alias William B. Crane, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 5214); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SULLOWAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 20955) granting an increase of pension to Edward L. Carpenter, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 5215); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. CHAPMAN, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 20896) granting an increase of pension to James F. Henninger, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 5216); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. BRADLEY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 20726) granting an increase of pension to Mary J. Smith, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 5217); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SULLOWAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 20725) granting a pension to Hope Martin, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 5218); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. CHANEY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 20721) granting an increase of pension to James O. Pierce, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 5219); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 21019) granting an increase of pension to Benjamin F. Fell, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 5220); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. CHAPMAN, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 20964) granting an increase of pension to John Fox, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 5221); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. CHANEY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 20351) granting an increase of pension to Peter M. Simon, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 5222); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. BRADLEY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 20199) granting an increase of pension to Joseph N. Cadieux, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 5223); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 20129) granting an increase of pension to John Lemly, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 5224); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. CALDERHEAD, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 19703) granting an increase of pension to Seth Chase, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 5225); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SULLOWAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 19672) granting an increase of pension to Thomas McDermott, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 5226); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. CHAPMAN, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 19482) granting an increase of pension to Sarah E. Cannell, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 5227); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. HOLLIDAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 19479) granting an increase of pension to George W. Savage, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 5228); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SULLOWAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 19426) granting an increase of pension to George N. Griffin, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 5229); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. CHAPMAN, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 19420) granting an increase of pension to Eliza A. McKean, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 5230); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. FULLER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 19661) granting an increase of pension to Jacob McWilliams, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 5231); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. BRADLEY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 19651) granting a pension to Joseph H. Pendergast, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 5232); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. FULLER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 19629) granting an increase of pension to Oliver Morton, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 5233); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 19603) granting an increase of pension to Jacob Farner, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 5234); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 19584) granting an increase of pension to Joseph B. Pettey, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 5235); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. FULLER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 19553) granting an increase of pension to James Robertson, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 5236); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SULLOWAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 19490) granting a pension to Estelle I. Reed, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 5237); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. FULLER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 19045) granting a pension to Mary A. Agey, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 5238); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 18871) granting an increase of pension to Emanuel Raudabaugh, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 5239); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. CHAPMAN, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 18797) granting an increase of pension to John M. Defoe, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 5240); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. FULLER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 13054) granting a pension to James M. Brown, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 5241); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. DIXON of Indiana, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 19023) granting a pension to John T. Lester, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 5242); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. FULLER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 18884) granting a pension to Weymouth Hadley, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 5243); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair presents resolutions adopted by the National Rivers and Harbors Congress in convention assembled in Washington, D. C., December 7, 1906, relative to adequate appropriations for river and harbor improvements. Without objection, the resolutions will be printed in the RECORD, printed as a document, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The resolutions are as follows:

Resolutions adopted by the National Rivers and Harbors Congress in convention assembled at Washington, D. C., December 7, 1906.

Congress has demanded in the past an awakened public sentiment in favor of adequate appropriations for river and harbor improvement. We maintain the awakening has come. Congress must now recognize that public sentiment in favor of increased appropriations, as voiced by convention and the press, has reached a point where the concern is not the advisability, but only the question of amount and frequency of such appropriation. Present conditions demonstrate that transportation facilities are totally inadequate for the prompt and economical transportation of the products of the country. Within the last ten years the tonnage moved by railroads has increased 47 per cent, while during the same period railway mileage has increased only 20 per cent.

Hundreds of millions of dollars are lost annually to our farmers and other producers by the failure of the National Government to provide the assistance which properly improved natural waterways will give in increased facilities for transporting freight.

We maintain that water competition is the best and surest regulation of freight rate. The improvement of rivers and construction of waterways will afford the most natural, permanent, and effective method of reducing and regulating the cost of transporting both our domestic and foreign commerce.

The saving in the cost of transportation to both the producers and the consumers of the country will, through cheaper and competitive freight rates, more than justify the expense incident thereto.

The opening of the Panama Canal, which will so greatly increase our facilities for trade with the Orient, and the awakened development of closer business relations with South American Republics, emphasizes the question of water transportation as one of national and international importance.

All progressive nations have learned by experience the imperative necessity of using natural and artificial waterways for the movement of their products and have adopted a policy of systematic development of such waterways, and the time has now arrived when the United States, with greater natural advantages, must also recognize the function of the waterway system in the economic development of this country.

Events have shown the wisdom of the resolutions adopted at our last meeting, which we now reaffirm.

The National Government having assumed the control of the rivers, harbors, and waterways of the Republic, it owes the people the prompt and efficient discharge of such functions: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we urge Congress to appropriate not less than $50,000,000 annually for the improvement of rivers, harbors, and waterways, commencing with the present session of Congress.

JOS. E. RANSDELL, President.

Attest:

HISTORY OF THE CONGRESSIONAL CEMETERY.

Mr. BURKETT. At Thursday's session an order was made to print a statement pertaining to the Congressional Cemetery, prepared by the subcommittee of the Committee on the District of Columbia. There is a small map covering the half dozen blocks of the cemetery, and the map can not be printed without an order of the Senate. I ask that the map may be printed with the document.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS—CHARLES H. PENDLETON.

On motion of Mr. PERKINS, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of S. 2581, "authorizing the President to appoint Charles H. Pendleton a lieutenant-commander on the retired list, United States Navy," Fifty-ninth Congress, first session, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, there having been no adverse report thereon.

AFFAIRS OF THE KONGO FREE STATE.

Mr. LODGE submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

Whereas the reports of the inhuman treatment inflicted upon the native inhabitants of the Kongo Free State have been of such a nature and so well sustained as to draw the attention of the civilized world and excite both the indignation and the compassion of the people of the United States: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That in the opinion of the Senate of the United States the time has come when the affairs of the Kongo Free State should be made the subject of international inquiry, and the Senate respectfully advises the President that in any steps he may deem it wise to take in cooperation with or in aid of any of the powers, signatories of the treaty of Berlin, which shall seek to ameliorate the conditions of the Kongo Free State and redress any evils now existent there he will receive its cordial support.

MESSENGER FOR COMMITTEE ON MANUFACTURES.

Mr. HEYBURN submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Manufactures be, and it is hereby, authorized to employ a messenger, to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate at the rate of $1,440 per annum, until otherwise provided for.

SEIZURE OF AMERICAN SCHOONER SILAS STEARNS.

Mr. MALLORY submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

Resolved, That the President be, and he is hereby, requested, if not incompatible with the public interests, to transmit to the Senate copies of all papers, documents, and correspondence now in the possession of the Department of State relating to the seizure and forcible detention of the American fishing schooner Silas Stearns by the Mexican authorities; and to inform the Senate whether said schooner has been adjudged forfeited by the decree of any Mexican court, and if so, whether the owners of said schooner were ever given an opportunity, by citation or otherwise, to appear in said court and defend their property; and also to inform the Senate of the present status of said case and what action, if any, has been taken by this Government in the premises.

THREE COMPANIES OF TWENTY-FIFTH INFANTRY.

Mr. CULBERSON submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the Senate whether Companies B, C, and D, Twenty-fifth United States Infantry, or either of them, were, prior to August 13, 1906, involved in any riot, raid, or other disturbance with citizens, and if so, to inform the Senate when and where it occurred and its character fully, accompanying his report with copies of all official correspondence on the subject.

FRANCISCO KREBS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Are there further concurrent or other resolutions? If not, the morning business is closed.

Mr. MONEY. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Order of Business 3300, which is the bill (S. 5531) for the relief of Francisco Krebs.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I rise only to suggest that after the matter which the Senator from Mississippi has in hand shall have been disposed of I think it would be well to go to the Calendar under Rule VIII for the consideration of unobjected cases, and then all Senators will have an equal chance on the Calendar. I will not, however, make that suggestion until the Senator is through with his bill.

Mr. MONEY. The bill which I desire to call up will take but little time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Mississippi asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill named by him. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported by the Committee on Private Land Claims with an amendment.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, I want to say there is a misprint in the bill. Somewhere there you will find a provision reading, "Comprising 400 feet square, upon which the legislature is now situated," etc. That is a misprint. I ask that a verbal correction may be made by inserting the word "light-house" for the word "legislature."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The error to which the Senator directs attention is in the committee amendment.

Mr. MONEY. Yes, sir.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment reported by the Committee on Private Land Claims will be stated with that correction.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add to the bill the following:

Provided further, That the site comprising 400 feet square upon which the light-house is now situated shall be excepted from this confirmation.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That Francisco Krebs be, and he is hereby, confirmed in his title to a tract of land known as Round Island, in the State of Mississippi, situated in sections 33 and 34, township 8 south, range 6 west, and sections 3 and 4, township 9 south, range 6 west, granted by the Spanish governor, Grimarest, to Francisco Krebs on December 13, 1783, and recorded in translated records, book No. 2, page 51, in the probate court at Mobile, Ala.: Provided, That nothing in this act contained shall affect the claim or claims of any other person or persons to the said land, or any part thereof, derived from the United States or any source whatever: Provided further, That the site comprising 400 feet square upon which the light-house is now situated shall be excepted from this confirmation.

Mr. MORGAN. Is the consideration of that bill open to objection, Mr. President?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill is now before the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole for consideration.

Mr. MORGAN. I shall have to object to it and ask that it go over. It seems to relate to Mobile.

Mr. MONEY. It has no relation whatever to Mobile. It merely refers to the court at Mobile.

Mr. MORGAN. I beg pardon, and withdraw the suggestion I made.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a report from the Secretary of State, with accompanying papers, concerning the claim of Lieut. Col. L. K. Scott, a British subject, on account of the adoption by the Ordnance Department of the United States Army of a system of sighting of which he is the inventor.

In view of the recognition by the Chief of Ordnance of the Army of the equitable right of Lieutenant-Colonel Scott to payment for the use of his invention, I recommend that provision be made by Congress for the payment of this claim.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, December 10, 1906.

GORDON, IRONSIDES & FARES COMPANY.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a report by the Secretary of State, with accompanying papers, in regard to the application of the British embassy, in behalf of Messrs. Gordon, Ironsides & Fares Company, of Canada, for reimbursement in the sum of $7,626.08, which they allege the United States customs authorities improperly exacted of them in November, 1902, as duties on certain sheep and cattle.

I renew the recommendation which I made to the Congress on January 12, 1904, that, in view of the facts shown in the correspondence, provision be made for the company's reimbursement.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, December 10, 1906.

EASTERN EXTENSION AUSTRALASIA AND CHINA TELEGRAPH COMPANY.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a report from the Secretary of State, with accompanying papers, with reference to the claim of the Eastern Extension Australasia and China Telegraph Company for compensation on account of expenses incurred in repairing its Manila-Hongkong and Manila-Capiz cables, which were cut by the United States forces during the war with Spain.

I renew the recommendation made by President McKinley, that as an act of equity and comity provision be made by the Congress for reimbursement to the company of the actual expenses incurred by it in the repair of the cables.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, December 10, 1906.

ORDINANCES OF PORTO RICO.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying letter of the Secretary of State, ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying ordinances, referred to the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico:

To the Congress:

Referring to section 32 of the act approved April 12, 1900, entitled "An act temporarily to provide revenues and a civil government for Porto Rico, and for other purposes," and to the provisions of section 2 of the joint resolution approved May 1, 1900, I transmit herewith five ordinances (enumerated in the accompanying report of the Secretary of State) enacted by the executive council of Porto Rico with the approval of the governor thereof.

The attention of Congress is invited to the statement of the Secretary of State that the transmission of these ordinances does not imply any request that they be printed.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, December 10, 1906.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico, and ordered to be printed:

To the Congress:

Referring to section 32 of the act approved April 12, 1900, entitled "An act temporarily to provide revenues and a civil government for Porto Rico, and for other purposes," I transmit herewith nine ordinances (enumerated in the accompanying report of the Secretary of State) enacted by the executive council of Porto Rico with the approval of the governor thereof.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, December 10, 1906.

CONSIDERATION OF THE CALENDAR.

Mr. HALE. I ask that the Senate proceed to the consideration of unobjected cases on the Calendar under Rule VIII.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, that order will be made.

AMERICAN SAILING VESSELS IN COASTING TRADE.

Mr. FRYE. The second bill on the Calendar is the bill (S. 30) to remove discriminations against American sailing vessels in the coasting trade, known as the "pilotage bill." A similar bill has just been defeated by quite a majority in the House of Representatives. Therefore there is no object at all in the Senate sending this bill to the House, and I move that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

LEASES IN YELLOWSTONE NATIONAL PARK.

The bill (S. 4433) to amend an act approved August 3. 1894, entitled "An act concerning leases in the Yellowstone National Park," was announced as first in order on the Calendar, and the Senate resumed its consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. This bill has heretofore passed the Senate, but the vote by which it was passed was subsequently reconsidered.

Mr. CARTER. I ask that the bill may be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. LODGE. I think that bill has been passed, and that the question now is on its reconsideration.

Mr. GALLINGER. No; the vote by which it was passed was reconsidered.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. Then, certainly the bill has been read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill has been heretofore read.

Mr. CARTER. The bill was passed at the last session. I understand that it fixes a period of twenty years' limitation instead of ten.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I should like to make an inquiry, having been absent when the last action was taken upon this bill, as to whether section 3 of the bill as we have it before us was amended by inserting after the word "shall" the words "to be in effect only a chattel mortgage?"

I had some conversation with the Senator from Montana in charge of the bill in regard to the matter before my enforced absence from the Senate, and called his attention to the fact that I had no objection to the enactment of this measure, except that I did not want the mortgage authorized to be made to be recognized as a real estate mortgage, because this property is partly in Idaho, partly in Wyoming, and partly in Montana; and the laws of those States regarding the status or the method of foreclosing a mortgage are somewhat different.

Then, again, I did not want to see this measure recognize the right of the Secretary of the Interior or of any other person to place a burden upon the land of a national park. If this is declared to be a chattel mortgage that shall apply only to the buildings, treating them as chattels placed upon the realty under the permission given by this bill, then I should have no objection to it; but I would object to a mortgage partaking of the nature of a mortgage upon real property being authorized at all, because the title to this property is in the United States, and Congress may do what it sees fit with that title. If Congress authorizes the making of a mortgage that would have the effect of being a mortgage upon real property, we would then jeopardize a part of the title to a great national park. I think for precaution in section 3, line 12, on page 2 of the bill, after the word "shall," the words "be in effect only a chattel mortgage" will leave no question of doubt as to the character of that incumbrance. Otherwise the bill ought not to pass.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Those words were inserted in the bill as it was agreed to at the last session.

Mr. HEYBURN. It was during my absence, and the bill before me does not indicate it.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, the bill first passed the Senate without the words to which the Senator refers. The only difference between that bill and the unamended text of this bill rests in the difference of the duration of the lease period.

As I understood the request of the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] to be that unobjected cases alone should be considered, and inasmuch as the question raised by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN] would lead to some extended explanation, I ask that the bill may now go over.

Mr. HEYBURN. I did not intend to send the bill over by my statement. I merely rose to inquire as to its status. I understood the Senator from Montana to state that his recollection was that this amendment had not been made, and the Chair states that it has been made, as I understand. If that amendment has been made, then I have no objection to interpose, and am willing that the bill shall proceed to final enactment.

Mr. CARTER. Then, if that amendment has been made, I should be constrained to ask the Senate to disagree to it for reasons which I think will appeal very forcibly to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. LODGE. Let the bill go over, Mr. President.

Mr. CARTER. Inasmuch as the explanation would require time, I shall ask that the bill now go over.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, before the bill goes over I would ask the Senator if he would have any objection to inserting in line 4, after the word "lease," the words "in his discretion?"

Mr. CARTER. No; not at all.

Mr. GALLINGER. Then I would move that amendment before the bill goes over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 1, on page 1, line 4, after the word "lease," it is proposed to insert "in his discretion."

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will lie over, and the next unobjected bill on the Calendar will be stated.

PENSIONS FOR NINETY DAYS' SERVICE.

The bill (S. 976) granting pensions to certain enlisted men, soldiers and officers, who served in the war of the rebellion was announced as next in order.

Mr. MCCUMBER. Mr. President, that bill will require some discussion, and I ask that it be passed over, retaining its place on the Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will lie over, retaining its place on the Calendar.

AGREEMENT WITH YANKTON SIOUX INDIANS.

The bill (S. 2993) to ratify an agreement with the Yankton Sioux Indians of South Dakota, and making appropriation to carry the same into effect, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, is there a report accompanying that bill?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is a report accompanying the bill.

Mr. KEAN. Then I ask that the report may be read.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is a very long report.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report will be read at the request of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. KEAN].

The Secretary proceeded to read the report submitted by Mr. GAMBLE from the Committee on Indian Affairs April 4, 1906.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, I have discovered what I desired to find out from the report. Therefore I withdraw my request.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Jersey withdraws his request, and the further reading of the report will be dispensed with.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I should like to have the bill go over. I can briefly state my reasons for making the request.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill has been passed. Does the Senator from Minnesota ask that it go over?

Mr. NELSON. I desire, if there be no objection, to make a statement showing why I ask that the bill go over.

The bill proposes to appropriate $100,000 to these Indians for a section of land. I have been on that land, and I know what it is. It is just a piece of prairie. There are some of these pipestone quarries there to which the Indians go and get stone to make pipes and other ornaments. It seems to me a hundred thousand dollars for that section of land is out of all proportion to its real value. I do not think it is a fair deal on the part of the Government. For that reason I ask that the bill go over.

Mr. GAMBLE. Mr. President, this matter has been pending for some time. The bill has the favorable recommendation of the Department. If the Senator from Minnesota will examine the report, he will see that the question of value was raised. Some of the experts who had knowledge of the land placed its value of $140, $150, and some as high as $200 per acre. I do not pretend to have knowledge concerning its value except what is stated in the report. It contains one section of land, and has stone quarries of unusual value situated upon it. They are the famous pipestone quarries.

Mr. NELSON. I saw this very land. I have seen the pipestone quarries; and it seems to me a hundred thousand dollars for that section of land, which is practically good for nothing else except for these pipestone rocks, is quite out of all proportion.

Mr. GAMBLE. I will state that the Government has appropriated a part of this land and has erected valuable school buildings thereon. The land is adjacent to the city of Pipestone, a prosperous city of some size. As I have heretofore stated, I have no other knowledge concerning the value of the land than that derived from the report. The agreement has been pending for some time and the matter ought to be disposed of.

Mr. NELSON. That is a small town of between two and three thousand people, and it is not a very growing town. This land is a piece of prairie, with nothing but this pipestone quarry on it, and it seems to me that a hundred thousand dollars for it is out of all proportion. I ask that the bill go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is of opinion, the bill having been passed, that it is beyond the reach of a single objection.

Mr. NELSON. I was not aware the bill had been passed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill has been passed.

Mr. NELSON. Then I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Minnesota moves to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. CULBERSON. I ask the Senator from South Dakota in charge of the bill if he objects to having the vote by which the Senate passed the bill reconsidered?

Mr. GAMBLE. No.

Mr. CULBERSON. The Senator does not?

Mr. GAMBLE. No.

Mr. CULBERSON. Then I have nothing to say.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Minnesota to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Under objection, the bill will lie over. The next bill on the Calendar will be stated.

EXTENSION OF GENESEO PLACE AND SUMMIT PLACE.

The bill (S. 5246) to provide for the extension of Geneseo place, District of Columbia, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, page 1, line 3, before the word "days," to strike out "thirty" and insert "ninety;" in line 10, after the word "southwesterly," to strike out "and westerly direction to Eighteenth street, so as to connect with Summit place" and insert "direction in prolongation of its present lines and to extend Summit place in an easterly direction with a width of 40 feet to connect with said extension of Geneseo place, said extension of Summit place to be north of northerly line of lot 198 of Lanier Heights and said line extended;" so as to make the section read:

That within ninety days after the passage of this act the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to institute in the supreme court of the District of Columbia, sitting as a district court, by petition, particularly describing the lands to be taken, a proceeding in rem to condemn the land that may be necessary for the extension of Geneseo place, Lanier Heights NW., in said District, in a southwesterly direction in prolongation of its present lines and to extend Summit place in an easterly direction with a width of 40 feet to connect with said extension of Geneseo place, said extension of Summit place to be north of northerly line of lot 198 of Lanier Heights and said line extended; the name of Geneseo place to be changed to Summit place.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, page 2, line 9, after the word "said," to strike out "street such amount thereof" and insert "streets;" and in line 20, after the word "said," to strike out "street: Provided, That if the aggregate amount of the benefits to be assessed, as determined by said jury pursuant to the provisions hereof, is less than one-half of the amount of the damages awarded for and in respect of the land condemned, the Commissioners of the District of Columbia may, in their discretion, reject the award and assessment of the jury, and all proceedings thereunder shall be null and void" and insert "streets. If the total amount of the damages awarded by the jury and the costs and expenses of the proceeding be in excess of the total amount of the assessments for benefits, such excess shall be borne and paid by the District of Columbia;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That of the amount found to be due and awarded as damages for and in respect of the land condemned for the extension of the said streets shall be assessed by the jury hereinafter provided as benefits, and to the extent of such benefits, against those pieces or parcels of ground on each side of said streets, and also against any or all pieces or parcels of land which may be benefited by the opening of said street as said jury may find said pieces or parcels of land will be benefited; and in determining the amounts to be assessed against said pieces or parcels of land the jury shall take into consideration the respective situations of such pieces or parcels of land and the benefits they may severally receive from the opening or extension of the said streets. If the total amount of the damages awarded by the jury and the costs and expenses of the proceeding be in excess of the total amount of the assessments for benefits, such excess shall be borne and paid by the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 4, page 4, to strike out the first word, "street," in line 9, and insert "streets;" in line 22, after the word "said," to strike out "street" and insert "streets;" and in line 1, page 5, after the word "said," to strike out "street" and insert "streets."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 5, page 5, line 8, after the word "said," to strike out "street" and insert "streets."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 7, page 6, line 4, after the words "by the," to strike out "Treasurer of the United States, ex-officio commissioner of the sinking fund of the District of Columbia, upon the warrant of the Commissioners of said District, out of the revenues of the District of Columbia, and a sufficient sum to pay the amounts of said judgments and awards is hereby appropriated out of the revenues of the District of Columbia" and insert "disbursing officer of the District of Columbia from moneys advanced to him by the Secretary of the Treasury upon requisitions of the Commissioners of said District, as provided by law; and a sufficient sum to pay the amounts of said judgments and awards is hereby appropriated out of the revenues of the District of Columbia;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 7. That when the verdict of said jury shall have been finally ratified and confirmed by the court, as herein provided, the amounts of money awarded and adjudged to be payable for lands taken under the provisions hereof shall be paid to the owners of said land by the disbursing officer of the District of Columbia from moneys advanced to him by the Secretary of the Treasury upon requisitions of the Commissioners of said District, as provided by law; and a sufficient sum to pay the amounts of said judgments and awards is hereby appropriated out of the revenues of the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 11, page 8, line 4, after the word "such," to strike out "street" and insert "streets;" and in line 7, after the word "said," to strike out "street" and insert "streets."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to provide for the extension of Geneseo place and Summit place, District of Columbia."

HENRY O. BASSETT.

The bill (S. 4323) for the relief of Henry O. Bassett, heir of Henry Opeman Bassett, deceased, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to Henry O. Bassett, sole surviving heir of Henry Opeman Bassett, deceased, the sum of $142.59.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INHABITANTS OF PORTO RICO.

The bill (S. 2620) to provide that the inhabitants of Porto Rico shall be citizens of the United States was announced as the next business in order on the Calendar.

Mr. HALE. Let this bill, which will give rise to debate, be sent to the Calendar under Rule IX.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. At the request of the Senator from Maine the bill will go to the Calendar under Rule IX.

ACQUISITION OF LAND FOR PUBLIC PARKS.

The bill (S. 5201) to acquire certain land in the District of Columbia as an addition to Rock Creek Park was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments.

The first amendment of the Committee on the District of Columbia was, in section 2, page 2, line 3, after the word "acquired," to insert "and the location of proposed new streets;" so as to read:

SEC. 2. That the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army and the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, hereinafter referred to as the board of control of Rock Creek Park, shall cause to be made an accurate map of said pieces and parcels of land showing the location, quantity, and character of each piece and parcel of private property to be acquired, and the location of proposed new streets, which map shall be filed and recorded in the public records of the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, page 3, line 18, after the word "therefrom," to insert "along the center of a proposed new street;" and in line 20, after the word "line," to insert "following the center line of a proposed new street;" so as to read:

Thence southeasterly and parallel to said center line of Cleveland avenue and 325 feet distant therefrom along the center of a proposed new street to the point where said line intersects the center line of Twenty-ninth street; thence southeasterly by reverse curved line, following the center line of a proposed new street, to the intersection of the center line of Rock Creek drive.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 5, page 6, line 7, after the word "plan," to strike out "as 90 feet in width;" and in line 9, after the word "are," to strike out "not;" and in the same line, after the words "provided for," to strike out "in said plan" and insert "herein;" so as to read:

And shall, in addition to such conveyance and dedication and in the same deed, enter into an agreement to establish building-restriction lines to agree with the street lines, as shown on said highway plan, or where any new street or streets are provided for herein, the said building-restriction lines to be of a width of 15 feet adjacent to the dedicated portion of the street, the intent of this act being that the width of such street or streets included within such building-restriction lines shall be 90 feet.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 7. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to acquire, by purchase or condemnation, for the purpose of providing a reservation for a public park, the several parcels of ground in the District of Columbia included between Euclid street, Columbia avenue or Fifteenth street, W street or Florida avenue, and Sixteenth street extended, in Hall and Elvan's subdivision of Meridian Hill, containing in the aggregate 437,000 square feet, more or less; and to pay for the said land and premises so taken, and the improvements thereon, the sum of $550,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated: Provided, That one-half of the said sum of $550,000, or so much thereof as may be expended, shall be reimbursed to the Treasury of the United States out of the revenues of the District of Columbia, in four equal annual installments, with interest at the rate of 3 per cent per annum upon the deferred payments: And provided further, That one half of the sum that shall be annually appropriated and expended for the maintenance and improvement of said lands as a public park shall be charged against and paid out of the revenues of the District of Columbia, in the same manner now provided by law in respect to other appropriations for the District of Columbia, and the other half shall be appropriated out of the Treasury of the United States. In case said parcels of ground can not be obtained by purchase at a price satisfactory to said Secretary of the Interior the same shall be condemned in the manner hereinafter prescribed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 8. That the Attorney-General, upon request of the Secretary of the Interior, is authorized and directed to make application to the supreme court of the District of Columbia, by petition, at a general or special term of said court, for an assessment of the value of said parcels of ground, and said petition shall contain a particular description of the property required, with the name of the owner or owners thereof, and his, her, or their residence, as far as the same can be ascertained, and the said court is hereby authorized and required, upon such application, without delay, to notify the owners and occupants of each such parcel, and to ascertain and assess the value of the same by appointing three commissioners to appraise the values thereof and to return the assessment to the court; and when the values of such parcels are thus ascertained and the said Secretary of the Interior shall deem the same reasonable the sum or sums so ascertained shall be paid into said court for their use. That the fee simple of all premises so appropriated for public use under the provisions hereof, and of which an appraisement shall have been made under the order and by direction of said court, shall upon payment into the said court as aforesaid of the amount so ascertained and assessed as to each parcel be thereupon vested fully in the United States, and the right of possession thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 9. That the said court may direct the time and manner in which possession of the property condemned shall be taken or delivered, and may, if necessary, enforce any order or issue any process for giving possession. The cost occasioned by the said condemnation proceedings shall be paid from the Treasury of the United States, out of any money not otherwise appropriated: Provided, That one-half of the said cost shall be reimbursed to the Treasury of the United States out of the revenues of the District of Columbia, in four equal annual installments, with interest at the rate of 3 per cent per annum upon the deferred payments. Other costs which may arise in the said proceedings shall be paid as the court may direct.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 10. That whenever and as title to the several parcels of such real estate shall be acquired as aforesaid and the same shall be ready for delivery, and the sufficiency thereof shall be certified by the Attorney-General of the United States, the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed, upon the requisition of the said Secretary of the Interior, to pay into court the condemnation price of such property, parcel by parcel.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 11. That the public park authorized and established by this act shall be under the joint control of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia and the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to acquire certain land in the District of Columbia as an addition to Rock Creek Park and in Hall and Elvan's subdivision of Meridian Hill for a public park."

ADMINISTRATION OF RECLAMATION ACT.

The bill (H. R. 17833) providing for the administration of the operations of the act of Congress approved June 17, 1902, known as the "reclamation act," was announced as the next business in order on the Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair calls the attention of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] to the bill just announced. There is a memorandum on the bill stating that the Senator from New Hampshire, among others, desired to be present when the bill came up. The name of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] also appears.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think the bill would better go over, Mr. President. I have an objection to it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will lie over, retaining its place on the Calendar.

BOUNDARY LINE OF ROCK CREEK PARK.

The bill (S. 823) to rectify the boundary line of Rock Creek Park was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

CAPTURED AND ABANDONED PROPERTY.

The bill (S. 1751) to revive and amend an act to provide for the collection of captured and abandoned property and the prevention of frauds in insurrectionary districts within the United States and acts amendatory thereof was announced as the next business in order on the Calendar.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the bill go over.

Mr. KEAN. Let it go to the Calendar under Rule IX.

Mr. GALLINGER. Under Rule IX; that is right.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go to the Calendar under Rule IX.

CHILD LABOR IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The bill (H. R. 17838) to regulate the employment of child labor in the District of Columbia was announced as the next business in order on the Calendar.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, let the bill go over, retaining its place.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. At the request of the Senator from West Virginia, the bill will go over, retaining its place.

Mr. DUBOIS. I move that the bill be taken up, notwithstanding the objection of the Senator from West Virginia. There is no child-labor law in the District of Columbia. This is a model bill. It has been objected to two or three times. It has passed the House, and is unanimously reported from the Committee on Education and Labor in the Senate. I move that the bill be taken up, notwithstanding the objection of the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. NELSON. I make the point of order that the motion is not in order. We agreed by unanimous consent to proceed with the Calendar and to take up only unobjected bills.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is of opinion that the motion to proceed to the consideration of the bill, notwithstanding the objection, is in order under the rule. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Idaho that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill just announced, notwithstanding the objection. [Putting the question.] In the opinion of the Chair the ayes have it.

Mr. SCOTT. I call for the yeas and nays.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from West Virginia demands the yeas and nays. Is there a second?

Mr. BACON. Is it in order to ask for the reading of the bill for information?

Mr. LODGE. It is the child-labor bill, which was up at the last session of Congress.

Mr. BACON. I understand.

Mr. LODGE. And it was then read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Georgia? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read the bill.

Mr. LODGE. It is the bill which passed the House.

Mr. BACON. I should like, before voting on the question of consideration, to know what are the terms of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill at the request of the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. GALLINGER. I suggest that the amendment of the committee, which is to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert, be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The SECRETARY. The amendment reported by the Committee on Education and Labor is to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That no child under 14 years of age shall be employed, permitted, or suffered to work in the District of Columbia in any factory, workshop, mercantile establishment, store, business office, telegraph office, restaurant, hotel, apartment house, theater, bowling alley, or in the distribution or transmission of merchandise or messages, or selling newspapers. No such child shall be employed in any work performed for wages or other compensation, to whomsoever payable, during the hours when the public schools of the District of Columbia are in session, nor before the hour of 6 o'clock in the morning or after the hour of 7 o'clock in the evening.

SEC. 2. That no child under 16 years of age shall be employed, permitted, or suffered to work in the District of Columbia in any of the establishments named in section 1, unless the person or corporation employing him procures and keeps on file and accessible to the inspectors authorized by this act and the truant officers of the District of Columbia an age and schooling certificate, and keeps two complete lists of all such children employed therein, one on file and one conspicuously posted near the principal entrance of the building in which such children are employed.

SEC. 3. That an age and schooling certificate shall be approved only by the superintendent of public schools, or by a person authorized by him in writing, who shall have authority to administer the oath provided for therein, but no fee shall be charged therefor.

SEC. 4. That an age and schooling certificate shall not be approved unless satisfactory evidence is furnished by duly attested transcript of the certificate of birth or baptism of such child, or other religious record, or the register of birth or the affidavit of the parent or guardian or custodian of a child, which affidavit shall be required, however, only in case such last-mentioned transcript of the certificate of birth be not procured and filed, showing the place and date of birth of such child, which affidavit must be taken before the officer issuing the employment certificate, who is hereby authorized and required to administer such oath, and who shall not demand or receive a fee therefor.

SEC. 5. That the age and schooling certificate of a child under 16 years of age shall be in the following form:

AGE AND SCHOOLING CERTIFICATE.

This certifies that I am the (father, mother, guardian, or custodian) of (name of child) ——— and that (he or she) was born at (name of town or city) ——— in the county (name of county, if known) ——— and State (or country) of ——— on the day (day and year of birth) ——— and is now (number of years and months) ——— old.

Signature of (father, mother, guardian, or custodian).

(Date.)

There personally appeared before me the above-named (name of person signing) ——— and made oath that the foregoing certificate by (him or her) signed is true to the best of (his or her) knowledge and belief. I hereby approve the foregoing certificate of (name of child) ———, height (feet and inches) ———, eyes (color) ———, complexion (fair or dark) ———, hair (color) ———, having no sufficient reason to doubt that (he or she) is of the age therein certified, I hereby certify that (he or she) can read at sight and can write legibly simple sentences in the English language, and that (he or she) has reached the normal development of a child of (his or her) age, and is in sound health and is physically able to perform the work which (he or she) intends to do, and that (he or she) has regularly attended the public schools, or a school equivalent thereto, for not less than one hundred and thirty days during the school year previous to arriving at the age of 14 years, or during the year previous to applying for such school record, and has received during such period instruction in reading, spelling, writing, English grammar, and geography, and is familiar with the fundamental operations of arithmetic, to and including fractions.

This certificate belongs to (name of child in whose behalf it is drawn) ——— ——— and is to be surrendered to (him or her) whenever (he or she) leaves the service of the corporation or employer holding the same; but if not claimed by said child within thirty days from such time it shall be returned to the superintendent of schools.

(Signature of person authorized to approve and sign, with official character or authority.)

(Date.)

A duplicate of each age and schooling certificate shall be filled out and kept on file by the superintendent of public schools. Any explanatory matter may be printed with such certificate, in the discretion of said superintendent.

SEC. 6. That whoever employs a child under 16 years of age, and whoever having under his control a child under such age permits such child to be employed, in violation of sections 1, 2, 8, or 9 of this act, shall, for such offense, be fined not more than $50; and whoever continues to employ any child in violation of any of said sections of this act, after being notified by an inspector authorized by this act, or a truant officer of the District of Columbia, shall for every day thereafter that such employment continues be fined not less than $5 nor more than $20. A failure to produce to an inspector authorized by this act, or a truant officer of the District of Columbia, any age or schooling certificate or list required by this act shall be prima facie evidence of illegal employment of any person whose age and schooling certificate is not produced or whose name is not so listed. Any corporation or employer retaining any age and schooling certificate in violation of section 5 of this act shall be fined $10. Every person authorized to sign the certificate prescribed by section 5 of this act who knowingly certifies to any materially false statement therein shall be fined not more than $50.

SEC. 7. That inspectors authorized by this act and the truant officers of the District of Columbia may visit the factories, workshops, and mercantile establishments in the District of Columbia and ascertain whether any minors are employed therein contrary to the provisions of this act, and they shall report any cases of such illegal employment to the superintendent of public schools and the corporation counsel of the District of Columbia. Inspectors authorized by this act and the truant officers of the District of Columbia may require that the age and schooling certificates and lists provided for in this act of minors employed in such factories, workshops, or mercantile establishments shall be produced for their inspection.

SEC. 8. That no minor under 16 years of age shall be employed, permitted, or suffered to work in any manufacturing, mechanical, or mercantile establishment more than eight hours in any one day, or before the hour of 6 o'clock antemeridian, or after the hour of 7 o'clock postmeridian, and in no case shall the number of hours exceed forty-eight in a week.

SEC. 9. That every employer shall post in a conspicuous place in every room where such persons are employed a printed notice, stating the number of hours required of them on each day of the week, the hours of commencing and stopping work, and the hours when the time or times allowed for dinner or for other meals begin and end. The printed form of such notice shall be furnished by the inspectors authorized by this act and the truant officers of the District of Columbia, and the employment of any such person for a longer time in any day than that so stated shall be deemed a violation of this section.

SEC. 10. That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized to appoint two inspectors to carry out the purposes of this act, at a compensation not exceeding $1,200 each per annum.

Mr. DUBOIS. I ask that the report of the committee also be read. It is short.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is of opinion that that is not in order, except by unanimous consent. Is there objection to the request that the report of the committee shall be read? The Chair hears none. The Secretary will read the report.

The Secretary read the report, submitted by Mr. DOLLIVER May 3, 1906, as follows:

The Committee on Education and Labor, having had under consideration House bill 17838, report the same to the Senate with the recommendation that Senate bill 5665 be substituted therefor, with certain amendments, as follows:

In line 4, after the word "work," on page 1, insert the words "in the District of Columbia;" and after the word "message," on page 1, line 8, strike out the words "or in the Senate or House of Representatives" and insert "or selling newspapers;" also on page 2, after the word "work," in line 1, insert "in the District of Columbia."

With these amendments the committee recommends the substitution of the Senate bill, introduced by Mr. DUBOIS, for the bill passed by the House of Representatives and that the House bill so amended do pass.

These bills have a common object; they have been framed for the purpose of protecting children of immature years against the evils and temptations incident to the various occupations in which they are now engaged in the District of Columbia. At present the District is entirely without legal restrictions upon child labor, and the result is that hundreds of children under 16 years of age have been crowded into all sorts of occupations, many of them detrimental to the morals of the children and all of them inimical to our system of public education. It is found that there are 700 children in the District of Columbia under 16 years of age who work in the daytime and try to secure their education in the night schools. The records of the probation officer of the District indicate that in the last three months 300 children under 16 years of age who had been employed in various occupations in the city have passed under the jurisdiction of those appointed to take care of child criminals. In the judgment of the committee, it is a reproach to the government of the District of Columbia that its children of tender years should be left to the night schools for education and to the criminal courts for discipline and control.

Many of the occupations of children in the District of Columbia are in their nature such as to bring those who pursue them under influences which tend to destroy their moral character, as well as to deprive them of the opportunity of education and the advantages of home training.

It is the object of this law to prevent the employment of children under 14 years of age in factories, workshops, mercantile establishments, business offices, telegraph offices, restaurants, hotels, apartment houses, theaters, bowling alleys, messenger services, or in the sale of newspapers. As to these occupations, the prohibitions of this proposed statute are full and complete. This bill seeks to prevent altogether the employment of children under 14 in those occupations which undermine their strength or expose them to temptations and moral danger. The bill goes further, and seeks to prevent children under 16 years of age from engaging in the occupations before mentioned at such times as interfere with the school duties of such children; and as to children under 16 years of age, night work is prohibited and the hours of labor regulated.

This bill is based upon a broad consideration of the social welfare of the community. It is modeled upon the State legislation which has proved most efficient and passed the scrutiny of the courts. It involves both a labor question and a problem of public morality. The intrusion of young children into breadwinning occupations is an injustice to the army of workers who are charged with the support of families. It is also an injustice to those whose taxes maintain the public school system. A community which expends the vast sum required for the maintenance of the public schools of Washington has a right to require that children of school age give their attention to the studies which fit them for a useful life. Night schools for children who ought to be at home in bed are a barbarism, unfit for the countenance of the capital of the United States.

More important, however, than the labor question and the school question involved in the employment of children for wages is the question of the moral ruin of hundreds and thousands of boys and girls who, under proper surroundings, might grow up into useful members of society. What effect upon the children themselves does this untimely bearing of the burdens of life have? Dr. Henry J. Harris, secretary of the citizens' child labor committee of the District of Columbia, stated before your committee that in the last three months 300 children less than 16 years of age have graduated in this city from the care of employers to the guardianship of the criminal courts. Such a condition of society is intolerable anywhere, and least of all in the District of Columbia, where Congress is the sole legislative authority.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there a second to the demand of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SCOTT] for the yeas and nays?

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. HALE. What is the question?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. On agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS] to proceed to the consideration of the bill, notwithstanding the objection.

Mr. HALE. I thought the Senate gave unanimous consent that it would proceed to the consideration of unobjected bills on the Calendar under Rule VIII. When that agreement has been made by the Senate it has never, as far as my knowledge goes, been departed from. That agreement cuts off such a motion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is a matter, in the opinion of the Chair, for the Senate to determine upon the motion.

Mr. HALE. But what is the force of an agreement of the Senate that it shall proceed to the consideration of unobjected bills?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is a matter to be addressed to the judgment of the Senate. The Secretary will call the roll on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I have no interest in this bill; but I give notice that hereafter when the Senate agrees unanimously to proceed to the consideration of the Calendar under Rule VIII for action upon unobjected cases, I shall insist upon the agreement. It is no use to make the agreement if any Senator has a right to move to proceed to the consideration of a bill when it is reached and objected to. That course would take away the entire scope and effect of the agreement that the Senate shall consider unobjected bills. We have done that for years, and in that way we make progress. Otherwise, when any bill is reached, if a Senator desires to make a motion to proceed to its consideration, he can make it, and he can do that unless the Senate by unanimous consent has agreed to take up only unobjected cases. I leave that to the Chair.

Mr. LODGE. If there was a unanimous-consent agreement that we should consider only unobjected cases, it seems to me very clear that no friend of the bill (and I am a very strong friend of the bill) would desire to press the motion at this time. The Calendar is a short one. It will be finished, I think, very soon, for there are many measures on it that will go over under objection, and then this motion can be made.

Mr. GALLINGER. There is an agreement to take up another bill at 2 o'clock.

Mr. LODGE. I believe there is an agreement to take up another bill at 2 o'clock.

Mr. KEAN. It is the unfinished business.

Mr. LODGE. It is the unfinished business. In any event, this is hardly a practical question at this time. But I suggest to the Senator from Idaho that if there was unanimous consent given it would be better not to press the motion at this time, for we never wish to interfere with a unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. President, I of course do not desire to antagonize the friends of this bill, who are almost the entire Senate, but I wish to call attention to the fact that I desire to have the bill called up. It has been objected to and the passage of it prevented two or three times in the Senate. I have no desire to prevent other Senators from having bills to which there is no objection passed, and I will therefore withdraw my motion. I can renew it soon.

Mr. LODGE. Let me suggest to the Senator from Idaho that he give notice now that on Thursday morning (as there are special orders for to-morrow and Wednesday), immediately after the routine morning business, he will move to take up this bill. I think we ought to do it. I think it is a bill that ought to be pressed to a vote. I suggest Thursday, or any day that is agreeable to the Senator.

Mr. HALE. I wish to say that I know nothing whatever about this bill. I did not even know what the bill was. I only invoked the unanimous agreement of the Senate.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I wish to ask the attention of the Senator from Maine to a suggestion. I quite agree with him, of course, that wherever there is a unanimous-consent agreement it should be most scrupulously observed.

Under a unanimous-consent agreement to proceed to the consideration of unobjected cases, unless that unanimous consent goes further and specifies the limit of time within which the unanimous consent shall be in force, it can always be set aside by the motion of the Senate to proceed to the consideration of any other matter, thus terminating the unanimous-consent agreement. Otherwise, if the contention of the Senator is correct, when the Senate has once agreed by unanimous consent to proceed to the consideration of unobjected cases on the Calendar, there will be no possibility during the remainder of that sitting to proceed to the consideration of any other measure.

It seems to me that a unanimous-consent agreement, without any time being specified during which the Senate will continue the consideration of unobjected cases, simply means that the Senate will continue in the consideration of unobjected cases until the Senate otherwise orders, and whenever the Senate, upon motion, proceeds to take up another bill it is equivalent to an order to terminate the unanimous-consent agreement. Of course it is not a practical question to-day, and I only state it in order that it may not be drawn into a precedent hereafter. I think the view which I present is the correct one.

Mr. HALE. On the contrary, it has always been the practice of the Senate, in order to get bills through to which there is no objection, to continue the operation of the unanimous-consent agreement until 2 o'clock. It can not go further than that, because then the regular business comes up. I have never known, in my experience here, when such an agreement has been made, that it did not run until 2 o'clock. After that, of course, other business comes up.

Mr. BACON. I simply desire to say, in response to the suggestion of the Senator from Maine, that a request to proceed to the consideration of unobjected cases on the Calendar is very frequently made after 2 o'clock. So in the consideration of this as a parliamentary question that limitation, as suggested by the Senator, would not necessarily control.

EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY BILL.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 5133) to promote the safety of employees and travelers upon railroads by limiting the hours of service of employees thereon.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

CHILD LABOR IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. DUBOIS. I move to proceed to the consideration of House bill 17838.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho moves to proceed to the consideration of a bill the title of which will be read by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 17838) to regulate the employment of child labor in the District of Columbia.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Idaho.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate resumed the consideration of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment of the committee was agreed to as in Committee of the Whole and the bill reported to the Senate. The pending question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut (Mr. BRANDEGEE) to the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HALE. I simply wish to say that I have no opposition whatever to the bill, and the course that has been taken is precisely in accordance with the custom of the Senate. The Senator after 2 o'clock had a right undoubtedly to make his motion.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, in anything that I may say in opposition to this bill I do not want to have it construed that I am opposed to the education of the children of this country. Many boys, one of whom I happened to be in my youth, have had to make their living long before 16 years of age, and many a boy has had to support his aged mother and, perhaps, younger children. Many a boy has to receive an education at a night school.

Mr. President, as I understand the pending bill and its operation, you are going to compel boys to desist from labor. You are going to place them in a position where they will not be allowed to earn anything for the support of themselves or their families. You propose to say that they shall go to school.

I think if gentlemen will take the trouble to investigate they will find that at the present time the schools in this city are in no condition to take into the lower grades the boys and girls who are classed in this bill as being compelled to attend school. Many of the grades in many of the schools are so full now that children are not able to attend even half a day, and they are compelled to remain at home.

You may talk about the morals of the boys and girls under 16 being ruined. I ask the Senator from Idaho what possible legislation could be passed that would lead, I might say, to more direct immorality on the part of the girls and boys than being compelled by this law to remain idle and yet unable to attend school?

Mr. President, I wish to say that in my experience as an employer of labor it has been my privilege to educate four boys at night schools. The four boys educated at night schools—and they were orphans, with the exception, perhaps, of two, who had widowed mothers—started at very low wages, and I arranged for them to attend night schools. Out of these four boys I got three good ones—a pretty good average I think Senators will conclude.

One of them was for seven years manager of the factory that I am president of, until he died, a year ago. He was earning a salary of $3,000 a year when he died. He educated his family and cared for his wife and had a comfortable home. The present manager of my factory was a German boy whom I sent to night school, who cared for three orphan sisters and one little brother, his father and mother being dead. He was only 11 years of age when he came to me, and to-day he is managing and caring for the factory with between 750 and 800 people in it. I am glad that the factory and the company that I represent are able to pay him a handsome salary. He lives in a three-story brick building, surrounded by his happy family, and it was due to his own exertions and his education in a night school that he is able to occupy the position he holds to-day.

If by legislation you had compelled that boy to remain idle on the streets, what would have been his condition? In all probability he would have been a loafer, unable to care for himself and his family.

I say, Mr. President, that this bill, ironclad as it is, compelling children to remain idle, would do them the greatest injustice this Senate could possibly inflict. What will become of our pages here in front of you? You could not employ a boy as a page. You will have to get pages over 16 years of age in the Senate Chamber. These boys are earning something for their mothers and fathers, perhaps, and at the same time they are acquiring an education in a way. You would debar them.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. SCOTT. Certainly.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from West Virginia to the fact that the bill is so amended as to be no longer applicable to the pages.

Mr. SCOTT. In what way, I ask the Senator? As I understand the bill, it says "under 16 years of age."

Mr. DOLLIVER. But it specifies the occupations.

Mr. SCOTT. And this is one that is omitted?

Mr. DOLLIVER. The original bill included the pages of the two Houses of Congress, but the committee on consideration felt that that was not a desirable provision of the bill.

Mr. SCOTT. I would ask the Senator, why except these youths?

Mr. DOLLIVER. The advantages that are derived from our society are supposed to reimburse them.

Mr. SCOTT. What they may absorb in associating with us, I presume.

Mr. WARREN. If the Senator from West Virginia will permit me, I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa what other classes of employment are grouped with the pages of the two Houses?

Mr. DOLLIVER. I will say to the Senator that the employments in which the labor of young children is prohibited are specifically mentioned in the first section of the bill, and the bill is applicable only to those prohibited employments.

They constitute a list including factories, workshops, mercantile establishments, stores, business offices, telegraph offices, restaurants, apartment houses, theaters, bowling alleys, the distribution or transmission of merchandise or messages, and the selling of newspapers.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. SCOTT. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I ask the Senator from Iowa, the chairman of the committee, whether the next paragraph would not bar the pages of the Senate, where the bill says:

> No such child shall be employed in any work performed for wages or other compensation, to whomsoever payable, during the hours when the public schools of the District of Columbia are in session.

Mr. SCOTT. It was my impression that they were barred.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Most of the pages, I think, are not eligible to attend the public schools here, as they have been brought here from their States.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President——

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. SCOTT. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa, the chairman of the committee, where the provision is in the Senate amendment excluding the pages from the operation of the law?

Mr. DOLLIVER. The original bill gave a list of prohibited occupations, and among the prohibited occupations was employment in the Senate or the House of Representatives. The committee in redrafting that section omitted the prohibition as applied to the Senate and House of Representatives.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. They are still included in the general terms of the bill.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I think not.

Mr. GALLINGER. It seems to me the suggestion made by the Senator from Wyoming is sound, that the general provisions of the bill would necessarily exclude these young boys from service here. I do not know whether that is wise or unwise, but I think that would be the operation of the law.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, I am very sorry indeed that the Senator from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS] called up this bill to-day. I was not prepared to have it taken up at this time, supposing it would go over under an objection; but being forced into the consideration of the bill, I have in a very feeble way given some of the reasons why I object to it.

Mr. President, there is a good deal of reform, moral preaching on honesty, and so forth, that appears to be abroad in the land. A gentleman by the name of Markham, writing a magazine article not long ago, said that he had visited the glasshouses and had seen children—boys and girls—with emaciated forms, with their eyes, as it were, protruding from their sockets, all due to overwork. He spoke of their little bodies being blistered by the hot furnaces, and a lot more of that kind of magazine stuff, for it is nothing but stuff.

I have been engaged in the manufacture of glass for thirty-five years and over, Mr. President, and if Mr. Markham had come to my factory to see the boys employed there he would have found an entirely different class from those he has described. He would have found an active, energetic set, ready to play leapfrog, catch, and hide and seek, and everything else; and in addition he would have found them singing songs in the factory, the latest production of some comic opera. He would not see anything like that which he described in his magazine article.

I am under the impression that he was not in a glass factory at all. If he was, he misrepresented the conditions prevailing there. The glasshouse boy of to-day becomes the glass manufacturer of to-morrow. There is scarcely a manufacturer of glass in the city of Pittsburg, or in the Ohio Valley, so far as my knowledge goes—and I know the majority of them—who did not commence to learn his trade, as it were, starting from what we call "warming-in boys," "sticking-up" and "carrying-in" boys, and so forth, which are familiar phrases to the glass manufacturer. They were boys who saved their money; boys who learned their trade well, and in the course of a few years became manufacturers.

As I stated a moment ago, to-day two-thirds of the men engaged in the manufacture of glass have come from the factory—boys who learned their trade while they were earning good wages, boys who earned from a dollar to a dollar and a half a day. We do not employ anybody in our factory under 14 years of age, because we now have a State law which forbids it; but the description by this magazine writer of the boys employed in glass factories is absolutely absurd. Such absurdities mislead the public and cause much mischief.

I would be very sorry, Mr. President, if we should deprive the boys and the girls of the District of Columbia of the opportunity of earning a livlihood and compel them to loaf on the streets, acquire bad habits, such as smoking cigarettes and the like, when it is impossible to get a majority of them into the public schools owing to their crowded condition. If gentlemen are so anxious to have this bill become a law, I ask them to wait until we can provide the facilities in our schools for taking care of the boys and girls who will be thrown idle upon the streets by its passage. I am not opposed, as I said at the beginning of my remarks, to the education of the youth of the land. But I am opposed to the bill as it now stands. I will gladly vote for it if it is amended as proposed by the Senator from Washington [Mr. PILES]. With this amendment it would read, on page 7, line 3, after the word "age," "who is not wholly dependent upon his own labor or who is not the sole support of a disabled father, or a widowed mother, or of a younger brother or sisters."

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SCOTT] seems to me to prove too much. He argues that it would be a hardship to compel children to go to school because they might be used to support their families and themselves. If that is true, and that argument is sound, there ought to be no child-labor law on any statute book, and we should leave children unrestrained to earn their living and go without education.

The Senator describes to us boys to whom he has shown his generosity and kindness, speaks of their success, and attributes it to the night schools which they were enabled to attend—in other words, their education and not their ignorance was the ground of their success.

Finally, the Senator says the schools of Washington are insufficient to accommodate all the children of school age, and therefore we should allow a certain number of them to run about the streets or to earn money at all hours and seasons of the day.

Mr. SCOTT. Will the Senator allow me a moment?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. SCOTT. They would have to run about the streets if this bill became a law, because they could not be cared for in the schools.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I somewhat doubt the fact; but at all events I have no doubt of what our duty is in these premises.

There is nothing new, Mr. President, in these efforts to protect children. The laws limiting the hours of labor for women and children are of an old date in England, and go back to their factory acts passed in the forties and the fifties. Those factory acts or similar acts were brought forward in the early fifties in my State by my late colleague, Mr. Hoar. It is generally recognized in all civilized communities that there should be proper legislation protecting the children of the community, boys and girls who are growing up, and giving them that education on which, according to our American belief, the safety of the country and of the State rests.

Now, Mr. President, there is nothing new in this bill which it is proposed to apply to the District of Columbia. The provisions of this bill are taken from the laws of my own State and from the laws of New York and of Ohio very largely. Last year when the subject first came up in the Senate I took occasion to examine the laws of Maine and of Vermont, meaning to examine the laws of all the New England States. In those two States I found ample provision under their truant laws to make it certain that the children of those States should go to school when they were under 14 years of age, and should not be deprived of that great opportunity by being compelled to labor. I speak out of the experience of my own State, where we have very strong restrictive laws in regard to child labor. My State is a prosperous State.

Mr. FRYE. What is the limit in your State?

Mr. LODGE. Fourteen years.

Mr. FRYE. This, I think, is 16 years.

Mr. LODGE. No; I beg the Senator's pardon, it is 14 years in the Senate bill.

Mr. FRYE. I thought it was 16.

Mr. LODGE. No; 14 in the Senate bill. The same provision that is in the Massachusetts law is in this bill, if my memory serves me, that between the ages of 14 and 16 a child can only be allowed to work at a trade or in a factory if he has a certificate from the proper school authorities that he has attended school before the age of 14.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. CARMACK. I wish to ask the Senator whether the law of Massachusetts as it applies to factories is as broad as this proposed act?

Mr. LODGE. The law of Massachusetts is as broad as this proposed act. I have not made a side-by-side comparison, but I know it has the same provisions about child labor of all sorts, and as I have read this bill it seemed to me, speaking from memory, that it had been copied pretty closely from the provisions of the Massachusetts law.

Mr. CARMACK. Is this act broad enough to prevent children under 14 years of age being engaged in any employment during school sessions?

Mr. LODGE. During school sessions; and that is the Massachusetts law in substance. It is also the law of New York and of Ohio, from which, I think I am correct in saying, this bill is also taken.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator is speaking of the Massachusetts law. I want to know if there are any exceptions in that law to any kind of employment of children under 14 years of age?

Mr. LODGE. Under the Massachusetts law?

Mr. WARREN. Yes.

Mr. LODGE. I do not now recall any, but I could not answer a question of that sort without having the statute before me. I think I have a copy of the education law in my committee room.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I should be glad to have information on that point. I want to know if the law of that State or of any other State prohibits children under a certain age from every kind of employment, under any kind of circumstances, and if so, how it has worked?

Mr. LODGE. It certainly prohibits them from the employments enumerated in the act or in the Senate amendment of the act.

Mr. WARREN. Yes; but it seems to me that there are others not mentioned here. The question is whether it applies to all labor under the second portion of the section of the bill now before us which prohibits them from being employed in any kind of labor.

Mr. LODGE. They are prohibited from all night work whatever. There is an enumeration made.

Mr. WARREN. The language of the amendment is:

> No such child shall be employed in any work performed for wages or other compensation, to whomsoever payable, during the hours when the public schools of the District of Columbia are in session, nor before the hour of 6 o'clock in the morning or after the hour of 7 o'clock in the evening.

Mr. LODGE. Certainly; that is the law of Massachusetts, I know.

Mr. WARREN. That is, no child of 14 years of age shall be employed in any occupation or vocation whatever during school hours.

Mr. LODGE. During school hours.

Mr. WARREN. Yes; during school hours.

Mr. LODGE. The theory being that every child under 14 during those hours ought to be in the public schools.

When the Senator interrupted me I was saying that we have had these laws in Massachusetts for some time. There have been, as there always are, many efforts to evade these laws in the manufacturing towns.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts whether it is true that there is not seating capacity in the public schools of the District of Columbia for all the children of school age under the age of 14?

Mr. LODGE. That I do not know, but if such a condition as that exists it ought to be remedied. But that has nothing to do with the merits of this bill, if the Senator will permit me.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. It seems to me that it has a good deal to do with the merits of the bill. I merely asked for information, because, if that condition exists, the children who can not be accommodated in the schools are thrown upon the streets if they can not be employed.

Mr. LODGE. It seems to me that we are proceeding in a vicious circle if we say if there are not sufficient schools we will not pass a law to prevent child labor.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The Senator misunderstood me. I was not arguing in a circle. I was simply asking the Senator if he had information as to the condition of the schools in this particular.

Mr. LODGE. I have not got a report of the District schools, but I have here an abstract of the acts of Massachusetts, prepared for the use of the district police, who are called upon to enforce the child-labor laws.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. LODGE. I do.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator permit me to offer an amendment so that he may address himself to it in the course of his remarks? It is very short.

Mr. LODGE. Certainly; I have no objection.

Mr. BACON. It is to strike out one word and insert another.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state to the Senator from Georgia that there is an amendment pending.

Mr. BACON. I ask, then, that my proposed amendment may be read, Mr. President, for information, to be offered at the proper time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment intended to be proposed by the Senator from Georgia will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 7, line 3, of section 1 of the amendment, before the word "years," it is proposed to strike out "fourteen" and insert "twelve;" so as to read:

> That no child under 12 years of age shall be employed, etc.

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. LODGE. I do.

Mr. MALLORY. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Massachusetts if it is contemplated by this act, if it be enacted into law, to cover the case of the boys who act as pages in the House of Representatives and Senate?

Mr. LODGE. That I do not know. I am not on the committee in charge of the bill. I was addressing myself to the general question of child labor. I see no reason, unless arrangements can be made for their education and they can get the necessary certificate, why they should not be included as well as boys engaged in any other labor; and if arrangements can be made, owing to the arrangement of our sessions, by which those boys get the quantity of education required, of course there is no reason why in the other time they should not be employed in such an occupation; but it seems to me that that is a perfectly unimportant detail, if the Senator will permit me.

Mr. MALLORY. I think the language employed may be construed to apply to them, and it occurs to me that there may be some reason why it should not apply to them.

Mr. LODGE. I dare say there may be.

Now, Mr. President, returning to the question of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], I have here an abstract of the child-labor laws of the State of Massachusetts, used, as I have said, by the district police, the State police who are required to enforce those laws. It is, I repeat, only an abstract. It reads:

> No minor under 14 years of age may be employed at any time in any factory, workshop, or mercantile establishment.
> During the hours when the public schools of the city or town in which a minor under the age of 14 years of age resides are not in session that minor may be employed in outdoor pursuits, as the selling of papers, magazines, etc., farm work, etc.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. CLAY. Does not the Senator from Massachusetts think the measure which we are now considering, if it were enacted into law, would be much more drastic than the law of Massachusetts?

Mr. LODGE. I do not think so. It is only a difference in wording. The measure before us says children shall not be employed in certain occupations while school is in session. The Massachusetts law says that they may be employed in those occupations when the schools are not in session. That is the only difference.

Mr. CLAY. Under the provision of this bill, I desire to ask the Senator whether a child under 14 years of age can be employed in any business whatever? If I read it correctly, I understand that—

> No child under 14 years of age shall be employed, permitted, or suffered to work in the District of Columbia in any factory, workshop, mercantile establishment, store, business office, telegraph office, restaurant, hotel, apartment house, theater, bowling alley, or in the distribution or transmission of merchandise or messages, or selling newspapers.

And further—

> No such child shall be employed in any work performed for wages or other compensation, to whomsoever payable, during the hours when the public schools of the District of Columbia are in session, nor before the hour of 6 o'clock in the morning, or after the hour of 7 o'clock in the evening.

I will say to the Senator that I myself believe that we ought not to permit children to work in factories and machine shops, or to do any kind of work of that sort, until they arrive at 14 years of age; but when it comes to depriving a child out of school hours of selling papers and carrying messages, frequently in many cases for the purpose of supporting a widowed mother, it becomes a most serious question.

Mr. LODGE. The section which the Senator from Georgia has just read is not happily framed.

Mr. CLAY. I think not.

Mr. LODGE. The first clause appears to make a general and absolute prohibition. The second clause——

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

Mr. LODGE. Let me finish the sentence.

The second paragraph is a limited prohibition, which is the one which, as I understand it, conforms to all the State laws; that is, it provides that children shall not engage in any of these pursuits during school hours, but allows them to engage in all gainful pursuits not in factories or mines or mercantile establishments—all other out-of-door pursuits, particularly out in the air, when the schools are not in session. I think that is the intention of that section, which, as I have said, I think is not happily worded.

Mr. CLAY. If the Senator from Massachusetts is correct in his construction, then I agree with him, and would favor such legislation; but I think it would be difficult to construe in the way he suggests.

Mr. LODGE. I agree with the Senator that as this first section of the Senate amendment reads it has the appearance, especially in the first paragraph, of excluding such children from all forms of labor at all times, whether the schools are in session or not. I am sure that is not the intention of the committee which framed the bill. It can, however, be very easily corrected, as I think it is very largely a mistake in punctuation.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I dislike to interrupt the Senator, but along the line he was arguing I wish to ask him a question. The Senator is reading from the Massachusetts law some vocations in which children are permitted to engage outside of school hours, and they are the ones I want some information about. Are they occupations connected with farms, gardens, lawns, etc.?

Mr. LODGE. They are prohibited from engaging in the enumerated occupations in Massachusetts during school hours. It is only a difference in the way it is stated in that law and in this bill. In the bill it is stated that they shall not engage in those occupations during school hours, while in the Massachusetts law it is stated that they may engage in those occupations outside of school hours—exactly the same thing.

Mr. WARREN. If I heard the reading of the Senator correctly, in Massachusetts such boys may sell newspapers.

Mr. LODGE. Outside of school hours.

Mr. WARREN. And by this bill they can not.

Mr. LODGE. That is owing to the way the first section is framed, as I just tried to explain to the Senator from Georgia [Mr. CLAY].

Mr. WARREN. It is hardly a matter of punctuation, as the Senator has suggested. It is a matter of difference between the Massachusetts law and the pending bill.

Mr. LODGE. I agree with the Senator that it is worded in such a way that in the first part of the section it is an absolute prohibition. The second half interposes a limited prohibition conforming to the State laws. I think that could be very easily arranged, for I am sure, from the conversation I have had with the Senator in charge of the bill, that the intention is to cover what is covered by the statutes of Massachusetts, New York, and Ohio.

Mr. DUBOIS. I ask the Senator from Massachusetts if the objection would not be met by striking out, in line 8 of section 1 of the amendment, the words "or selling newspapers," and, in the same line, striking out the word "such?"

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I do not think, if the Senator will allow me, that that would reach the point that I understand the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] has been making. It is not that he wants to except one specific occupation——

Mr. DUBOIS. I thought it was.

Mr. LODGE. But it is that all of those occupations, other than in factories and workshops, should be open to child labor when the schools are not in session.

Mr. WARREN. That is correct.

Mr. LODGE. On that I agree with the Senator.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair would call the attention of the Senator of Massachusetts to the fact that the bill is in the Senate, and the question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] to the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole. It might be well for the Secretary to read that amendment for the information of the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let it be stated.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the proposed amendment.

Mr. LODGE. I suppose I am at perfect liberty to speak upon the general merits of the bill, but I should be glad to have the amendment read, for it may meet the precise point I am trying to make.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 1, on page 7, line 8, after the word "newspapers," it is proposed to insert "except that the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia may make regulations for the issuance of licenses to minors between the ages of 12 and 14 years to sell newspapers: Provided, That no such licenses shall be issued except on the written consent of the superintendent of the public schools, and that such licenses so issued shall be revoked at any time on the demand of the said superintendent of the public schools."

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the trouble with that amendment is that it relates specifically to one occupation. It seems to me that the provision which I have been led to read by questions as to the Massachusetts statutes meets what I think most Senators desire:

> During the hours when the public schools of the city or town in which a minor under the age of 14 years of age resides are not in session that minor may be employed in outdoor pursuits, as the selling of papers, magazines, etc., farm work, etc.

I think that latitude ought to be allowed as it is in all of the States that have child-labor laws, and I think it is a reasonable one. The statute continues:

> But minors so employed may not work before 6 o'clock in the morning or after 7 o'clock at night.

I think a little revision of the first section of the bill will meet what we all desire—that is, allow minors, outside of the hours when the schools are in session, to take part in perfectly healthful employments and exclude them altogether under the age of 14 years from the factory and the workshop.

Mr. SCOTT. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. LODGE. I do.

Mr. SCOTT. Of course, Mr. President, I recognize my inability to discuss this question with so able and learned a Senator as the Senator from Massachusetts, and I realize that it would perhaps be much better for me if there had been a child-labor law when I was a boy; but, if there had been, I fear I sometimes should have gone hungry to my books. I want to ask the Senator what he would have done with the young man in charge of my factory to-day, who told me, when he came to me for work years ago, that he had three sisters and a brother, and he was their only means of support. He was less than 12 years of age. Would the Senator have sent them all to the poorhouse, or what would he have done? I am just as much in favor of education as is the Senator from Massachusetts, and I am sorry that I have not a better one; but I do not want to put anything in the way of the boy who is by necessity compelled to earn a living for himself or for his parents or for his brothers and sisters, or to bar him from that privilege. I would rather see him grow up a good mechanic, a hard-working, honest man, than a loafer.

Mr. LODGE. Again, Mr. President, we have the same argument, and if that argument is sound there ought not to be any child-labor laws at all. I do not know how old the boy referred to was who subsequently became the manager of the Senator's factory.

Mr. SCOTT. He was less than 12 years of age.

Mr. LODGE. Under the laws of Massachusetts a boy of 16 may be employed regardless of the fact whether he is literate or illiterate, because the night schools are open to him, and he can attend those schools. I do not know, Mr. President, that we suffer any more in Massachusetts than do the people in any other State from the lack of facilities of child labor. The law is made sufficiently elastic to allow children of an age suitable for labor to work in a factory, and they are not excluded from healthful labor of other kinds; but children below 14 years are excluded from the mine and the factory, and I believe that is sound public policy.

Mr. MONEY. Will the Senator from Massachusetts permit me?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. MONEY. I have listened with great interest to the Senator, and I should like to ask him if he will not propose as a substitute for this proposed law the law of Massachusetts as it stands?

Mr. LODGE. I can embody that section.

Mr. MONEY. I should myself like, if the Senator will permit me a moment further, to say that I want to vote for something of that sort. I do not understand this proposed law exactly, because I have not given it any attention, but at the same time I do not like the exclusion of boys, even below the age of 12 years, from work of any kind or character that is lawful and wholesome in order to aid in the family support.

Another thing. I totally object to any human being being required to get a license to do honest work. It is the privilege and the right of every man to work without a license.

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. MONEY. I ask the Senator now if he will not offer as an amendment the Massachusetts law, which I believe to be a good law, and think it would meet the case here.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator, of course, understands that we issue no license in Massachusetts to work.

Mr. MONEY. I understand that.

Mr. LODGE. It is simply a certificate that the minors between 14 and 16 years of age have had sufficient education to read and write. That is, that their education has not been wholly neglected.

Mr. MONEY. Then the Senator thinks that there ought not to be a license?

Mr. LODGE. I do not think there ought to be a license. All we are trying to provide for is a certificate as to education.

Mr. MONEY. If the Senator will permit me a word further, even in that case it is almost impossible for some boys selling newspapers to get any kind of education whatever, and as they are excluded from these little trades during school hours, the certificate ought to be quite sufficient. I have noticed boys 4 and 5 years old—and I have bought newspapers from them, although I did not want to read them—who are obliged to pursue a vocation by which they can make something for the support of the family.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator will allow me, I probably did not make myself clear. The certificate applies only to minors between the ages of 14 and 16.

Mr. MONEY. Oh, yes.

Mr. LODGE. It does not apply to any age below that.

Mr. MONEY. That would be very well.

Mr. LODGE. Only between 14 and 16, the theory of the State being that after 14 the minor can be employed, provided he has not been deprived of previous school education.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. LODGE. I do.

Mr. McCUMBER. I wish to ask the Senator one question, inasmuch as he has observed the working of the law in his own State, and that is this: What is done with cases of minors under 12 years of age who have no parents or anyone else to take care of them and who have no way of securing a living other than by their own labor? I assume there would not be very many of them, but certainly there must be some in the great cities. What provision is made for the education of those children who have no parents or anyone else who is interested enough to take care of them?

Mr. DUBOIS. May I answer the question?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. McCUMBER. I shall be glad to have an answer from any source.

Mr. DUBOIS. So far as the question is local—and this bill is local, relating merely to the District of Columbia—the associated charities of the District of Columbia gladly take care of all cases where children have no means of support.

Mr. McCUMBER. That is a charitable institution.

Mr. DUBOIS. They came before the committee and showed that they had ample provision and were prepared to take care of all such cases as the Senator from North Dakota mentions.

Mr. McCUMBER. And send them to school?

Mr. DUBOIS. And send them to school.

Mr. McCUMBER. And not send them to a workshop?

Mr. DUBOIS. No.

Mr. McCUMBER. That is the point.

Mr. LODGE. In Massachusetts, as the Senator asked me the question, I will say that children who are left orphans and who are entirely destitute of any relative or natural guardian are taken care of very largely at schools especially provided for that class of children by the State. Of course it is a limited number of children, and they can be taken care of by the State in that way. That is, they are clothed and fed and taken care of by the State or perhaps by the locality. But they are not a large number of children. I can only say that in practice there is no appearance in my State of any suffering being caused in any direction by the laws restricting the employment of child labor.

Mr. CARMACK. I wish to suggest an amendment to the first section.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. LODGE. I will, although I shall be through in a moment; and, as I say, I am not in charge of the bill, and I can not say anything about the acceptance of amendments.

Mr. CARMACK. I merely wish to suggest an amendment.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. LODGE. I do.

Mr. HALE. Let me make a suggestion in respect to the order of business. The Senator in charge of the bill, a bill which I think the Senate generally is for upon principle, must see that there are so many suggestions made of amendments to be offered here that it will be almost impossible to perfect the bill at this time. I suggest to him, if this view has impressed him, that by some agreement the whole matter go over, or be recommitted to the committee, as the Senator chooses, so that we may have a bill reported either upon the basis of the Massachusetts statute or upon some other basis which recognizes all the difficulties that arise, and for which all of us in the end can vote. Let all the proposed amendments accompany the bill.

I make that suggestion to the Senator in charge of the bill, and, if we can agree upon that course now, there will be no need of further time being taken in the suggestion of amendments.

Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. President——

Mr. LODGE. I was merely going to say that I see no occasion to recommit the bill.

Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. President, I desire to say that the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER], the chairman of the committee, I think is in charge of the bill. I introduced the bill, and it was referred to the committee of which the Senator from Iowa is the chairman. I myself would not think of consenting to the bill being recommitted. It seems to me that the objections which have been urged here have been answered by reference to the States where similar laws are in force. This is a carefully drawn bill. Almost all of the controverted points have been passed upon by the courts. Such a law is working satisfactorily in Illinois and Ohio and Massachusetts and other States.

Mr. CARMACK. I do not think the first section is in very good shape.

Mr. LODGE. I should be glad if I might finish what I have to say. I do not want to interrupt an agreement as to the bill, but I am very nearly concluded.

It seems to me that the first section can be put in form which will command the general assent of the Senate by meeting the views which I think we all have, and which I think we certainly all ought to have, that child labor ought to be stopped in the factory and the mines, and as to the other forms of child employment, they ought to be limited in such a way as not to interfere with the education of the child. That I think covers the whole ground. I do not believe it is good for the children of any country—I am speaking broadly, and you have to legislate for all and not for a few cases—to be placed in the factories or the mines or amidst machinery before the age of 14. It not only stunts their minds, but it must in the long run stunt their bodies. I have been through factories—clean and airy and healthful factories—where children were employed. But it is not a good thing for children to be so employed.

In almost all our States some limit is put upon the hours of employment for women. At the bottom of all this lies, to my mind, the great question of humane dealing with these children, to whom we are to confide and pass on the destinies of the country. I want them to have all the education the State can give them, and I want them also to have all the chance that is possible to develop soundly and well physically.

I have no doubt there are laws on the statute books of other States which are just as good as the laws of the State of Massachusetts, but I happen to be familiar with those laws. I believe that that is the sound way to treat the question—to exclude the child from the factory, the workshop, and the mines at any time of the day until he or she is 14 years of age; and after that, if they have a school certificate that they have been to school, then they can get employment. But up to that time I would exclude them absolutely. As to other employments out of doors, healthful employments in places which keep the children about and moving and out in the open air, I would give the same relaxation that the Massachusetts law gives. I would allow them to pursue those callings in the hours when the schools are not in session. I think it is the soundest policy, not only economically, but in the interest of humanity and of the future of the voters and citizens of the United States to have legislation of that kind.

I ask, Mr. President, that this abstract of the Massachusetts law be printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS,
OFFICE OF CHIEF OF THE DISTRICT POLICE, STATE HOUSE,
Boston, August 16, 1906.

To whom it may concern:

The following paragraphs constitute a brief synopsis of the provisions of the Revised Laws of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts regarding the employment of minors. The purpose of this pamphlet is to state concisely and logically the restrictions under which minors may be employed, and references to chapters and sections of the statutes containing the provisions quoted are included, the laws themselves following on succeeding pages of this pamphlet.

No minor under 14 years of age may be employed at any time in any factory, workshop, or mercantile establishment. (Sec. 28 of chapter 106, Revised Laws, as amended by chapter 267 of the Acts of 1905.)

During the hours when the public schools of the city or town in which a minor under 14 years of age resides are not in session that minor may be employed in outdoor pursuits, as the selling of papers, magazines, etc., farm work, etc., but minors so employed may not work before 6 o'clock in the morning or after 7 o'clock at night. (Same reference as above.)

No minor between the ages of 14 and 16 years, to whom has not been granted a certificate by the school authorities of the town in which said minor resides, testifying to the fact that he or she is able to read and write the English language, may be employed in any factory, workshop, or mercantile establishment, except that on Saturdays minors between the ages of 14 and 16, who do not hold school certificates, may be employed between the hours of 6 a. m. and 7 p. m. in mercantile establishments. (Sec. 28, chapter 106, Revised Laws, and sec. 2, chapter 284, of the Acts of 1906.) This requirement is operative during the regular school vacation periods, as well as when school is in session.

The illegal employment of a minor under 16 years of age is punishable by a fine of not more than $300 or six months' imprisonment, or both. If, after notification from a truant officer or inspector of factories and public buildings, the illegal employment of any such minor is continued, the party responsible may be punished by a fine of not less than $20 nor more than $100 or by imprisonment for not more than six months for each day said illegal employment is so continued. (Chapter 499 of the Acts of 1906.)

Employers must secure a school certificate from each minor between the ages of 14 and 16 in their employ, which certificates must be kept on file accessible to truant officers and inspectors of factories and public buildings. Employers must also keep on file a complete list of all such minors, posting a duplicate of that list in a conspicuous place near the main entrance of the building in which the children listed are employed. Employers must also keep on file a list of all minors whom they employ who can not read and write the English language, forwarding a duplicate of that list to the school authorities of the place in which their plants are located. (Sec. 29 of chapter 106, Revised Laws, and sec. 4 of chapter 499, Acts of 1906.)

Minors over 16 years of age may be employed regardless of their state of literacy during that portion of the year when a public evening school is not in session in the cities or towns in which they reside. When a public evening school is in session in the place of residence of a minor over 16 years of age that minor may not be employed in any factory, workshop, or mercantile establishment unless he or she has procured the regular school certificate testifying to his or her ability to read and write the English language, or a permit to work from the school department based upon a certificate signed by a registered practicing physician stating that said minor's health will not admit of attendance at day or evening school in connection with daily labor; or, failing to secure either of these certificates, said minor may yet be employed provided he or she furnishes to his or her employer each week while the evening school is in session a record proving regular attendance at either the day or evening schools of the place in which he or she resides. A record of school attendance showing absences excused by a school department official or teacher holding proper authority for justifiable cause may be accepted as proving regular attendance; but when the weekly record shows unexcused absences it becomes irregular, and the employer who allows the holder of that record to work violates the law. These provisions do not apply in cities and towns which do not maintain public evening schools.

The penalty for the violation of the requirements stated in the foregoing paragraph is a fine of $100 or less for the employer and a fine of not more than $20 for the parent, guardian, or custodian who permits the minor to be employed. (Chapter 106, Revised Laws, sec. 28, as amended by chapter 267 of the Acts of 1905, and sec. 35, as amended by chapter 183 of the Acts of 1902.)

Inspectors of factories and public buildings and truant officers are directed and empowered to strictly enforce the laws hereinbefore referred to. (Chapter 499 of the Acts of 1906.)

Respectfully,

JOSEPH E. SHAW,
Chief Massachusetts District Police.

[Chapter 267, Acts of 1905.]

AN ACT RELATIVE TO THE EMPLOYMENT AND SCHOOL ATTENDANCE OF MINORS.

Be it enacted, etc., as follows:

SECTION 1. Section 28 of chapter 106 of the Revised Laws is hereby amended by inserting after the word "years," in the first line, the words "and no child who is over 14 and under 16 years of age who does not have a certificate as required by the following four sections certifying to the child's ability to read at sight and to write legibly simple sentences in the English language;" by striking out the word "such" in the third line; by inserting after the word "child," in the third line, the words "under the age of 14 years;" and by striking out the word "nor" in the sixth line and inserting in place thereof the word "or;" so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 28. No child under the age of 14 years and no child who is over 14 and under 16 years of age who does not have a certificate as required by the following four sections certifying to the child's ability to read at sight and to write legibly simple sentences in the English language shall be employed in any factory, workshop, or mercantile establishment. No child under the age of 14 years shall be employed at work performed for wages or other compensation, to whomsoever payable, during the hours when the public schools of the city or town in which he resides are in session, or be employed at work before 6 o'clock in the morning or after 7 o'clock in the evening."

SEC. 2. No certificate, as provided for by sections twenty-nine to thirty-two, inclusive, of chapter one hundred and six of the Revised Laws, shall be approved by any person for a minor under the age of sixteen years who intends to be employed in a factory, workshop, or mercantile establishment, unless such person is satisfied that such minor is able to read at sight and to write legibly simple sentences in the English language.

SEC. 3. This act shall take effect on the first day of January in the year nineteen hundred and six. Approved April 6, 1905.

[Chap. 284, Acts of 1906.]

SEC. 2. Minors to whom the said chapter two hundred and sixty-seven (Acts of 1905) applies shall be permitted to work on Saturdays between the hours of six in the morning and seven in the evening in mercantile establishments.

[Chap. 106, Revised Laws, secs. 29, 30, 31, 32.]

SEC. 29. No child under sixteen years of age shall be employed in a factory, workshop, or mercantile establishment unless his employer procures and keeps on file, accessible to the truant officers of the city or town, and to the district police and inspectors of factories and public buildings, an age and schooling certificate, and keeps two complete lists of all such minors employed therein—one on file and one conspicuously posted near the principal entrance of the building in which such children are employed, and also keeps on file and sends to the superintendent of schools, or, if there is no superintendent, to the school committee, a complete list of the names of all minors employed therein who can not read at sight and write legibly simple sentences in the English language.

SEC. 30. An age and schooling certificate shall be approved only by the superintendent of schools or by a person authorized by him in writing, or, if there is no superintendent of schools, by a person authorized by the school committee; but no member of a school committee or person authorized as aforesaid shall approve such certificate for any minor then in or about to enter his own employment or the employment of a firm or corporation of which he is a member, officer, or employee. The person who approves the certificate may administer the oath provided for therein, but no fee shall be charged therefor.

SEC. 31. An age and schooling certificate shall not be approved unless satisfactory evidence is furnished by the last school census, the certificate of birth or baptism of such minor, the register of birth of such minor with a city or town clerk, or in some other manner, that such minor is of the age stated in the certificate.

SEC. 32. The age and schooling certificate of a minor under 16 years of age shall not be approved and signed until he presents to the person who is authorized to approve and sign it an employment ticket duly filled out and signed. A duplicate of each age and schooling certificate shall be filled out and shall be kept on file by the school committee. Any explanatory matter may, in the discretion of the school committee or superintendent of schools, be printed with such certificate. The employment ticket and the age and schooling certificate shall be separately printed and shall be filled out, signed, and held or surrendered, as indicated in the following forms:

[Employment ticket, Revised Laws, c. 106, sec. 32.]

When (name of minor) ———, height (feet and inches) ———, complexion (fair or dark), hair (color) ———, presents an age and schooling certificate duly signed I intend to employ (him or her).

(Signature of intending employer or agent.)

(Town or city and date.)

[Age and schooling certificate, Revised Laws, c. 106, sec. 32.]

This certifies that I am the (father, mother, guardian, or custodian) of (name of minor) ———, and that (he or she) was born at (name of city or town) ———, in the county (name of county, if known) ———, and State (or country) of ———, on the (day and year of birth) ———, and is now (number of years and months) ——— old.

(Signature of father, mother, guardian, or custodian.)

(City or town and date.)

Then personally appeared before me the above-named (name of person signing) ———, and made oath that the foregoing certificate by (him or her) signed is true to the best of (his or her) knowledge and belief. I hereby approve the foregoing certificate of (name of minor) ———, height (feet and inches) ———, complexion (fair or dark), hair (color) ———, having no sufficient reason to doubt that (he or she) is of the age therein certified. I hereby certify that (he or she) (can or can not) read at sight and (can or can not) write legibly simple sentences in the English language.

This certificate belongs to (name of minor in whose behalf it is drawn) ———, and is to be surrendered to (him or her) whenever (he or she) leaves the service of the corporation or employer holding the same; but if not claimed by said minor within thirty days from such time, it shall be returned to the superintendent of schools, or, if there is no superintendent of schools, to the school committee.

(Signature of person authorized to approve and sign, with official character or authority.)

(City or town and date.)

In the case of a minor who can not read at sight and write legibly simple sentences in the English language the certificate shall continue as follows after the word "language:"

I hereby certify that (he or she) is regularly attending the (name) ——— public evening school. This certificate shall continue in force only so long as the regular attendance of said minor at the evening school is indorsed weekly by a teacher thereof.

Whoever, being authorized to sign the foregoing certificate, knowingly certifies to any materially false statement therein shall be punished by a fine of not more than $50.

[Chapter 106, Revised Laws, sec. 35, as amended by chapter 183 of the acts of 1902.]

SEC. 35. While a public evening school is maintained in the city or town in which any minor who is over 14 years of age and who does not have a certificate signed by the superintendent of schools, or by the school committee, or by some person acting under authority thereof, certifying to the minor's ability to read at sight and write legibly simple sentences in the English language resides, no person shall employ him, and no parent, guardian, or custodian shall permit him to be employed unless he is a regular attendant at such evening school or at a day school; but upon presentation by such minor of a certificate signed by a registered practicing physician and satisfactory to the superintendent of schools, or, if there is no such superintendent, to the school committee, showing that his physical condition would render such attendance in addition to daily labor prejudicial to his health, said superintendent or school committee shall issue a permit authorizing the employment of such minor for such period as said superintendent or school committee may determine. Said superintendent or school committee, or teachers acting under authority thereof, may excuse any absence from such evening school which arises from justifiable cause. Any minor not holding the certificate described above shall furnish to his employer a record of his school attendance each week while the evening school is in session, and when this record shows unexcused absences from the sessions his attendance shall be deemed irregular according to this act. Whoever employs a minor in violation of the provisions of this section shall forfeit not more than $100 for each offense to the use of the evening schools of such city or town. A parent, guardian, or custodian who permits a minor under his control to be employed in violation of the provisions of this section shall forfeit not more than $20 to the use of the evening schools of such city or town.

[Chapter 499, acts of 1906.]

AN ACT RELATIVE TO THE ILLEGAL EMPLOYMENT OF MINORS AND TO THE DUTIES OF TRUANT OFFICERS.

Be it enacted, etc., as follows:

SECTION 1. Whoever employs a minor under the age of 16 years, and whoever procures or, having under his control a minor under such age, permits such minor to be employed in violation of the provisions of sections 28 or 29 of chapter 106 of the revised laws, as amended by chapter 267 of the acts of the year 1905, shall for each offense be punished by a fine of not more than $300, or by imprisonment for not more than six months, or by both such fine and imprisonment; and whoever continues to employ a minor in violation of the provisions of either of said sections as so amended, after being notified thereof by a truant officer or by an inspector of factories and public buildings, shall for every day thereafter while such employment continues be punished by a fine of not less than twenty nor more than one hundred dollars, or by imprisonment for not more than six months.

SEC. 2. Inspectors of factories and public buildings shall visit all factories, workshops, and mercantile establishments within their respective districts, and ascertain whether any minors are employed therein contrary to the provisions of chapter 106 of the revised law and amendments thereof or additions thereto, or contrary to the provisions of this act, and shall enter complaint against whomever is found to have violated any of said provisions. Any inspector of factories and public buildings who knowingly and wilfully violates any provision of this section may be punished by a fine of not more than $100.

SEC. 3. A truant officer may apprehend and take to school, without a warrant, any minor under the age of sixteen years who is employed in any factory, workshop, or mercantile establishment in violation of the provisions of sections twenty-eight or twenty-nine of chapter one hundred and six of the Revised Laws, and of any amendments thereof or additions thereto, and such truant officer shall forthwith report to the police, district, or municipal court, or trial justice within whose judicial district the illegal employment occurs, the evidence in his possession relating to the illegal employment of any child so apprehended, and shall make complaint against whomever the court or trial justice may direct. Any truant officer who knowingly and wilfully violates any provision of this section may be punished by a fine of not more than one hundred dollars for each offence.

SEC. 4. Inspectors of factories and public buildings, and truant officers may require that the age and schooling certificates and lists of minors who are employed in factories, workshops, or mercantile establishments shall be produced for their inspection. A failure to produce to an inspector of factories and public buildings or to a truant officer an age and schooling certificate or list required by law shall be prima facie evidence of the illegal employment of any person whose age and schooling certificate is not produced or whose name is not so listed. A corporation or other employer or any agent or officer thereof who retains an age and schooling certificate in violation of the provisions of said certificate shall be punished by a fine of not less than ten nor more than one hundred dollars.

SEC. 5. Police, district, and municipal courts and trial justices shall have jurisdiction of offences arising under the provisions of this act. A summons or warrant issued by any such court or justice may be served, at the discretion of the court or magistrate, by an inspector of factories and public buildings, or by a truant officer, or by any officer qualified to serve criminal process.

SEC. 6. Section thirty-three of chapter one hundred and six of the Revised Laws, and all other acts and parts of acts inconsistent herewith, are hereby repealed. [Approved June 20, 1906.]

Mr. BACON. Before the Senator from Massachusetts takes his seat, as he is quite familiar with this matter and has given it great thought, I wish to ask a question.

I find that an amendment has been offered by the Senator from Washington [Mr. PILES] to insert on page 7, line 3, after the word "age," the words "who is not wholly dependent upon his own labor or who is not the sole support of a disabled father or a widowed mother or of a younger brother or sister;" so that it would read:

That no child under 14 years of age who is not wholly dependent upon his own labor or who is not the sole support of a disabled father or a widowed mother or of a younger brother or sister shall be employed, etc.

I should like to know, for I suppose the matter has had consideration——

Mr. LODGE. If any exception of that sort is going to be made, it must be very carefully guarded. We have found in practice in Massachusetts that there is a constant effort to evade the provisions of law and to put children into factories by parents who may not be disabled except by their own fault, and I have a great suspicion of exceptions of that kind.

Mr. BACON. Very well.

Mr. LODGE. They ought to be very carefully guarded, and, if they are to be admitted for a moment, they ought to be in the control of some board in this District which will supervise them very carefully. Our law works perfectly well without such exceptions.

Mr. BACON. But what I want to know of the learned Senator is this: If, with the safeguards which he suggests, he recognizes that there may be cases where there ought to be such an exception——

Mr. LODGE. Everybody must recognize that there are such cases.

Mr. BACON. This bill does not make any such exception; and I would ask the Senator if he would not favor an amendment, properly guarded, which would make such an exception?

Mr. LODGE. Allow me to say that I am not in charge of this bill. It is not for me to say what amendments should be accepted or rejected. I have taken time which I ought not to have taken, led on by the debate which has arisen. The bill is in charge of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER], the chairman of the committee, who is thoroughly familiar with the measure, and I do not feel that I have the right to pass upon amendments at all. I am prepared to support the Senator from Iowa in getting his bill through.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. I do not wish the Senator from Massachusetts to understand me as asking him to accept an amendment, because I know the Senator is not in charge of the bill. But the Senator was discussing the subject, and being familiar with the matter generally I wished to direct his attention to a point which I thought very important.

While I am on the floor, without any disposition to occupy the time at length or to discuss the bill generally, I desire to suggest another thing, and this time I will suggest to the Senator who is in charge of the bill. There ought to be a distinction made between the prohibition of the employment of children in factories and other occupations deleterious to health and the employment of children in outdoor occupations which are contributory to health. It seems to me there is a very wide difference. While the subject generally must commend itself to the favorable consideration of Senators, at the same time there are very important details which ought to be most carefully looked into; and unless there is going to be a very careful and elaborate discussion of the question, in which there will be a full interchange of opinions and a careful arrangement of details, I should very much prefer the suggestion of the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] that this matter have further consideration from the committee, in view of the suggestions which have been made and which will be made in the progress of this debate.

Mr. DOLLIVER obtained the floor.

Mr. SCOTT. Before the Senator from Iowa starts on his argument——

Mr. DOLLIVER. I am not going to make an argument.

Mr. SCOTT. Will he yield to me for a moment?

Mr. DOLLIVER. Certainly.

Mr. SCOTT. With the suggestion of the Senator from Georgia, if we could bring about the adoption of such an amendment, I would certainly agree most heartily. Before the Senator from Iowa starts, I ask the Secretary to read a short article as a part of what I wish to say.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested by the Senator from West Virginia.

The Secretary read from the New York Sun of Saturday, December 8, 1906, as follows:

BLIND BILLY IS IN HARD LUCK—NO ONE NOW TO HELP HIM SELL HIS DAILY PAPERS—POLICE SWOOP DOWN ON HIS STAND AND CART AWAY THE TWO LITTLE GIRLS WHO HAD LONG LOOKED OUT FOR THE BUSINESS—FEARS HE WILL HAVE TO GO TO POORHOUSE.

Blind Billy was sad of heart last night. In the many years he has kept the little news stand at Mulberry and Bleecker streets, right in the shadow of police headquarters, he has heard the clanging of the patrol-wagon bells until the sound is to-day the most familiar thing that strikes Billy's ears. Year in and year out he has heard the patrol wagons go by.

But when the Mercer street police station patrol came to a stop right near Billy's stand last night something told the blind newsvender that trouble was at hand. He couldn't explain the feeling that came over him; he just knew that something was going to happen.

Two bluecoats sprang out of the patrol—bluecoats who have known Billy for nigh on to ten years—and although they hated to do it, they went up and told him he was violating the law in having girls under 16 years of age working for him. They told Billy they wouldn't arrest him, but they would have to take Annie Fagan, 10 years old, who has been his assistant for the past two years, and her sister Tina, 12 years, who helps during the evening rush hours.

Some citizen had complained to the police that the two girls who helped Billy to make a living were under age, and that it must be stopped. The police had no alternative; they had to stop it.

Annie, whom all the officials and attachés at police headquarters call "Merry Yom Kippur," thought the police were playing a joke on Billy, but she and Lena soon learned that the officers were in dead earnest. Yom Kip and Lena had to go to the station house.

Billy pleaded that he be arrested instead of the girls, but the police wouldn't hear of it—the children were the real offenders. And off the wagon rolled with the tiny prisoners, leaving the sightless Bill sad and alone. As best he could he locked the stand for the night and slowly picked his way through the street to his home at 324 Bowery. The little girls, after being arraigned in the Mercer street station, were sent to the rooms of the Children's Society for the night, and to-day will be arraigned before Justice Olmsted in the children's court.

Blind Billy was having a streak of bad luck when Merry Yom Kippur came into his life. Twice his stand was burned down by mischievous lads in the neighborhood, and it took all his savings to build new ones. Unscrupulous persons, taking advantage of the plight of the sightless vender, took papers without leaving the money on the stand, and Billy often found his stock depleted and no money to pay for the next day's wares. The youngsters, too, lurked near the stand, and when change was deposited by patrons they would snatch it up and run off.

One day two years ago Merry Yom Kippur was on her way home from school when she saw three boys steal money from the stand. The little girl's heart was touched. She knew Blind Billy was powerless to prevent such things and she walked up boldly and offered to help him. From that day on Yom's face had protruded from the window of the stand and thousands are familiar with her cry, "Uxtree! uxtree! Blind Billy keeps this stand, and this stand helps to keep Blind Billy."

With Yom on the job Billy prospered. There were no more thefts and no unscrupulous patron could go off without paying for his or her paper. And soon Billy was able to pay Merry Yom a stipend. The Fagins were poor and the $2 a week which Billy has been able to pay has helped the Fagins. The father is sickly and unable to work most of the time, so very often Yom is the mainstay of the household. For weeks at a time they have lived in a tenement at 234 East Tenth street on Yom's earnings and tips alone. The father has been sick since cold weather set in, but Yom has kept the wolf from the door.

She and her sisters attend the Houston Street School, and early every morning and in the afternoon and evening Yom was at the stand crying her wares.

Blind Billy—Highley is his last name—is an old circus performer and for many years traveled with the G. F. Bailey and the Barnum & Bailey shows. At one time he was the best clown in the circus world. He was stricken blind about twelve years ago. He has supported his aged mother despite his affliction, and last night had saved up $10.70 with which he planned to buy her a fine Christmas present.

While Billy is not inclined to be pessimistic, he said last night he feared that he and his mother will wind up in the poorhouse if the authorities take Merry Yom Kippur away from him.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. President, it is no purpose of mine to make any elaborate speech or to indulge in any elaborate discussion of this bill, although I have toward it a sort of parental relation in the sense that the committee of which I am chairman considered it and directed me to make a report in favor of it. And that circumstance makes me just a little sensitive when it is calmly suggested by brethren who have given their attention to the bill for the first time to-day that it ought to be redrafted by the committee in the interest of clear phraseology.

I do not think, either, that I ought to allow the suggestion to go unquestioned that the first section of the bill is hard to understand. It may be hard to approve, but it certainly is plain enough to understand. It prohibits in certain occupations named the labor of children under 14 years of age, and it allows in occupations not named the employment of such children out of school hours in the daytime.

Now, it is agreed by everybody that the labor of children in mines and in factories is bad and ought to be prevented. The Committee on Education and Labor listened with very great patience to some of the most intelligent men and women interested in philanthropic work in the District of Columbia and elsewhere in the United States, and this was drawn in strict accordance with their counsel and in conformity to the testimony which they bore.

It is true that, as a rule, the labor of children in factories and in mines is the worst of all possible child labor, but in the District of Columbia, to which this bill is applicable, there are places in which children labor where the injury to them is more fatal than it would be in any mine or in any factory. It was the testimony of these philanthropic women—and this, I may say, is largely, from the humane standpoint, a woman's question, a question which enlists of the interest of every mother in the United States—and their unanimous opinion that the labor of children in the District of Columbia in carrying messages and in selling newspapers at nighttime, and in restaurants and in theaters and in hotels and in bowling alleys was more detrimental not only to their intellectual, but to their moral, welfare than the labor of children in well-regulated factories or even in mines; and I am disposed to believe that these women who have studied this question profoundly told the exact truth.

Therefore there need be no misunderstanding among us. It is the object of this bill, applicable to the District of Columbia, where Congress has complete jurisdiction, to prevent the labor of children under 14 years of age in any of these prohibited occupations. As to occupations not specifically mentioned, their labor is also prohibited except out of school hours in the daytime; and I venture to say that when the Congress of the United States fully discusses the child-labor question, as it will before very long, it will not adopt a standard very far from the prohibitions of section 1 of this proposed statute.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. DOLLIVER. Certainly.

Mr. CARMACK. I understand the first sentence of section 1 to prohibit the employment at any hour of children under 14 years of age in certain enumerated occupations.

Mr. DOLLIVER. That is correct.

Mr. CARMACK. Now, why does that include the selling of newspapers out of school hours?

Mr. DOLLIVER. It was the testimony of charitably disposed persons and of practical students of this question that the employment of little children on the streets selling newspapers, especially in the nighttime, was the most demoralizing of all the possible pursuits of these children. That was the testimony.

Mr. CARMACK. I can understand it as it relates to the nighttime, but within the hours prescribed in the second part of section 1——

Mr. DOLLIVER. It was their testimony that newspapers were put into the hands of children of very tender years in this town, and that they run a fearful risk of developing not into business men, but into beggars and criminals. Testimony was presented before our committee that of 700 children eligible to the night schools in this city, in a single quarter 300 of them, nearly one-half, passed through these occupations to the criminal courts and to the reform school of the District of Columbia. The showing was so tragical that not a member of the committee doubted the wisdom of preventing the employment of children of tender years in these occupations that bring them into contact with the rough and dangerous aspects of life upon the streets of great cities. It is a sad and humiliating thing to see these little ones dodging into saloons and into places of evil resort, engaged in what appears to the public to be a business, but is, in fact, a trap for their moral character and a reckless waste of their innocent lives.

Mr. CARMACK. I did not mean to express an objection of my own. I wanted to hear the Senator upon that point and to know if it had been carefully considered by the committee. I really think the Senator is right about it.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I confess I was prejudiced against the prohibition of the sale of newspapers by children—interesting little fellows in all cities, they have seemed to me. But I have lately, going home from this Capitol, encountered child after child from 6 to 10 years of age who was mingling the business of selling newspapers with the degradation of street beggary; children who ought to grow up into the stature of good citizenship of the United States.

Mr. BACON. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa a question.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. I understand the Senator to be now contending that the employment of these children in the selling of newspapers and kindred occupations is destructive of their moral character, a trap really for their destruction. The question I wish to ask the Senator is this: If such is the fact, why is it that the bill does not entirely prohibit it rather than simply limit it? Why is it, if it is thus destructive, that the prohibition extends only to school hours, and that such employment is permitted without limit outside of school hours?

Mr. DOLLIVER. It distinctly extends to all hours. It is an absolute prohibition of children under 14 years of age selling newspapers.

Mr. BACON. It is not the first section that the Senator is on, then?

Mr. DOLLIVER. Yes. As to the occupations enumerated, the prohibition is without any qualification.

Mr. BACON. I did not so read it.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. DOLLIVER. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. I agree with very much that the Senator from Iowa says, especially as to the contaminating influence of certain places upon boys of a tender age. But since the subject has been brought up by another Senator, I wish to ask the Senator from Iowa if he is prepared to say that section 1, in its second portion, does not preclude the employment by the Senate during school hours of pages who are now with us? I assume, of course, that he will not contend that there are any contaminating influences surrounding the boys here. I want to know whether, under the bill as it now stands, these boys can be employed for such work during school hours in the District of Columbia?

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. President, as the bill came to the committee it contained an express prohibition of child labor in the Senate and in the House of Representatives. It was the opinion of the committee—and I will say that that opinion was shared by some of the most intelligent of the men and women who gave their attention to the subject before our committee—that the employment of these children in the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States was a distinct advantage to them and not a detriment, and it was with the full consent, I think, of nearly all the good people who bore testimony before the committee that the employment of our pages here in the Senate and in the House of Representatives was left out of the prohibitions of the proposed law.

Mr. WARREN. Then, I ask the Senator again, does he not undertake positively to prohibit them?

Mr. DOLLIVER. I will say in answer that it was not the understanding of the committee that such a prohibition was made. But if there is any doubt about it, it will be perfectly easy in three words to save the pages of the Senate and House of Representatives from the operation of this proposed statute.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator does not answer the question. Does the bill prohibit their employment or not?

Mr. DOLLIVER. I have said that there is an ambiguity in the matter which might enable a man to take either side of the question, and I am perfectly willing to relieve it by a plain amendment, because it was not the purpose of the committee to prevent the employment of children in the two Houses of Congress.

Now, Mr. President, just a word or two more. It is obvious that the Government of the United States is face to face with a universal discussion of the child-labor question. I do not know whether it has impressed you as it has me, but the whole outlook of our public opinion in the United States has undergone a noticeable change amounting to a revolution within the last few years. There are good people, and wise people, too, who believe that the most important question now pending at the bar of the American public opinion is the rescue of these children, in number amounting, it may be, to millions, from the heavy burdens and hardships of life in their tender years, that they may be left in the schoolhouses where they belong in the daytime and in their beds at night under the protection of their fathers and mothers.

Now, the District of Columbia is a favored spot on the map of this country. It constitutes a model for the States of the Union throughout the breadth of our national domain. It appears to me a strange negligence of Congress, which has the sole authority here, that not a line has been put upon the statute books of the United States in keeping with the philanthropic spirit of our States in respect to the employment of child labor in the District.

This proposed bill intends to correct that oversight, for it can hardly be more than a negligence and an oversight of Congress. In drawing the bill the committee has been careful to make what appears to it at least to be an approved statute upon this subject. We had recourse to the most enlightened legislation in England and in New England, and in Ohio, in New York, and in other States of the Union, and we have produced here a simple measure providing that in certain occupations prejudicial to children the labor of our boys and girls under 14 years of age shall be absolutely prohibited. In all other occupations their employment is prohibited except out of school hours in the daytime, and as to children more than 14 years of age and less than 16 a certificate is required from the school authorities.

I count the bill as important, first, because the welfare of nearly a thousand children in the District of Columbia is directly involved. I confess to you, Mr. President, that when it was stated before our committee in cold blood that practically half of the children employed in the District under 14 years of age in the course of a single year make their way through the police court to the reform school, it filled my heart with a good deal of sadness and anxiety for the future of the District of Columbia. That state of things ought to be corrected, and it ought to be done now. It is not a sound public policy to maintain a system of public schools as costly as we have here in the District of Columbia and then send our children to night schools. Children who work in the daytime, according to the testimony of all teachers, can not study at night in any proper sense of the word. The body is weary, the energies are overtaxed, and study at night schools is an addition to the burdens of these struggling young lives that ought to be avoided.

I have as much sympathy as anybody has with the gospel of hard work. I believe that the work which men do in this world is their salvation, physically, intellectually, and morally. I shall not say a word here to disparage that. And yet there is in the good providence of God a little respite from labor given to the very young and to the very old. It is given to the young in order that they may mature their bodies and train their minds to the labors of life, and that little respite we ought not to deny to the children who live under the shadow of the Dome of the Capitol of the United States.

Mr. PROCTOR. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. DOLLIVER. Certainly.

Mr. PROCTOR. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee that reported the bill whether under the bill children up to the age of 14 are denied the right to work in the summer, in the long vacation?

Mr. DOLLIVER. No, sir; they are not, except in certain enumerated occupations.

Mr. PROCTOR. Does not that enumeration cover practically everything?

Mr. DOLLIVER. Oh, no; the labor incident to agriculture is not included.

Mr. PROCTOR. Agriculture in the District of Columbia is not a matter of general occupation of the people, I believe——

Mr. DOLLIVER. It is ahead of mining.

Mr. PROCTOR. Except as far as mending fences may go. [Laughter.]

Mr. CLAY. With the Senator's permission——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. DOLLIVER. Certainly.

Mr. CLAY. I will ask the Senator this question: Is it not true that under the bill children below 14 years of age could not work at all at any time during the year in factories, workshops, mercantile establishments, stores, telegraph offices, restaurants, apartment houses, or in taking messages or selling papers? They could not work after school was out in those hours at all?

Mr. DOLLIVER. No, sir; not under 14 years of age.

Mr. CLAY. Then, as I understand the Senator, there is intended to be a total prohibition of all children before arriving at the age of 14 as to those classifications which I have mentioned.

Mr. DOLLIVER. That is correct.

Mr. CLAY. If I understand the Senator further, the next provision of the bill provides that as to all other occupations except those enumerated above they can work either in the vacation or after school hours, except before the hour of 6 o'clock in the morning or after the hour of 7 o'clock in the evening. The Senator intends to allow children under 14 years of age to work during the hours named in all occupations except those which are specified in the first part of the section?

Mr. DOLLIVER. That is correct.

Mr. CLAY. And the Senator does not intend that they shall engage in any kind of work before 6 o'clock in the morning and after 7 o'clock in the evening?

Mr. DOLLIVER. That is exactly the idea. Those who testified before our committee thought that the children ought to be in school at that age in the daytime and at home at night.

Now, Mr. President, just a word further.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. DOLLIVER. Certainly.

Mr. FORAKER. If the Senator will allow me to interrupt him, I rise only to get information. I am not on the committee and I do not know what was presented to the committee. The Senator has told us what the testimony was before the committee as to the effect of the employment of children under 14 years of age in factories and workshops and in some other kinds of employment. But I should like to ask the Senator what the opinion was as to the employment in mercantile establishments, in stores, in business offices, in telegraph offices, and in places that are presumed to be places where there is a good, wholesome atmosphere. Was there any testimony to the effect that it was prejudicial to a child simply because under the age of 14 years of age to be employed in an office, for instance, as a messenger boy or as a boy to receive a card at the door?

Mr. DOLLIVER. There was. The most interesting part of the testimony that was taken by the committee was that which related to the total wreck of moral character of children in messenger-boy service in the United States.

Mr. FORAKER. I understand there was testimony as to some of these employments, and I can understand why there might be such testimony; but I am a little bit surprised to hear that kind of a statement made as to the character of employment I have called attention to.

According to my experience (and I have had occasion to be a pretty close observer of that), while it is bad to have a child employed in some of these occupations, there is only one thing worse, and that is absolute idleness. It seems to me as between a boy 13 years of age, for instance—and that would be under 14—being absolutely idle and being employed in a business office or in a store where there is a good, healthful atmosphere, I should think he would be better off if employed. But, of course, I do not know what the testimony was. I ask simply for information.

Mr. PROCTOR. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. DOLLIVER. Certainly.

Mr. PROCTOR. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa, as the report does not show what that testimony was, by whom it was offered on what authority it comes to us?

Mr. FORAKER. There is another question I should like to ask the Senator, if he will allow me further to interrupt him. Does the testimony show how many of those about whom this testimony was given, who made a failure of life, so to speak, and drifted into the criminal court, would have drifted there anyhow if they had not been employed? That is to say, was it the employment that led to it? I do not think that result would follow employment in a dry goods store as a cash boy, if there are still stores with cash boys. I believe that work is now done by machinery or some kind of apparatus that one hears when he goes into a store. But in any employment of that kind it never occurred to me that there was any danger to a boy being destroyed there—not half as much as if he were out in an alley playing marbles for keeps with some other boy.

Mr. PROCTOR. The chairman says that the testimony in regard to the ill effects of this labor of boys as messengers, etc., was given by Doctor Harris. I see from the report that Dr. Henry J. Harris is the secretary of the Citizens' Child-Labor Committee of the District of Columbia. He stated before the committee that in the last three months 300 children less than 16 years of age have graduated in this city from the care of employers to the guardianship of the criminal courts. He does not say how many children who had been attending school have graduated from schools to the criminal courts. I do not like to discredit his testimony, but I should like something a little more accurate from the record. Doctor Harris is evidently the secretary of an association, and to justify his employment he must make a report that will arouse and startle the sentiment of the community on this subject. I myself, like the Senator from Ohio, am a believer in the saving ordinance of work, and I know a great many boys who, I think, have been saved from harm by work, even at a comparatively early age. I believe many more are saved than are harmed, and in this city especially. It is one where there is a great official population, and there is employment for many boys as messengers, servants, etc. There are many families who I know would suffer seriously if this employment was cut off. If it is a question between the family starving and the child going to school, and at the same time having a chance to work outside in some decent employment, I should say give the child a chance to work.

Mr. FORAKER. Will the Senator from Iowa allow me to ask the Senator from Vermont a question before he takes his seat?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield?

Mr. DOLLIVER. Certainly.

Mr. FORAKER. The Senator from Vermont read from some report, which I have not had the fortune to see, as to how many children have graduated from employment into crime.

Mr. PROCTOR. It is at the end of the report.

Mr. FORAKER. I have not time now, but I will ask the Senator to look over it and see whether the report states how many have graduated from idleness into crime. I have always heard all my life that the danger to youth is idleness beyond almost anything else. I know there are employments that children should not be allowed to engage in. I would exclude factories, mines, and workshops. The Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] reminds me of the lines in the primer:

> Satan finds some mischief still
> For idle hands to do.

That has been the experience of the whole world.

Mr. PROCTOR. Will the Senator from Iowa allow me a moment on another question?

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. President, I dislike to disturb the meditations that are evidently arising in the mind of my honorable friend.

Mr. PROCTOR. For only a moment. The laws of the New England States have been referred to. These child-labor laws fifty years ago in England and in New England in the early days of manufacturing were a necessary protection; but in my somewhat long life—and I believe it is longer than that of any one I see, though I yield a little to my friend from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM]—I have never known any abuse of child labor. Public sentiment would correct it. I have never known an employer but who carefully guarded any violation of what was right. I suppose there is a child-labor law on the statute book of Vermont. I never knew it to be invoked. I have asked my colleague [Mr. DILLINGHAM], who is more familiar with the law, and he says the same thing. Public sentiment takes care of it.

Mr. DOLLIVER. They obey it there.

Mr. PROCTOR. I believe they do very generally. I have known boys employed in mines, and boys under this age, but they were employed as water boys and errand boys. I have never known one to be employed in any capacity or at any time to seriously interfere with the reasonable chance for education or to injure him physically or morally. So far as the moral point is concerned, I believe it is in favor of giving the boy a chance to work rather than to keep him in idleness.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. President, this is a matter which everybody has got to form a conclusion of for himself. It can hardly be that a State like Vermont, full of good, sensible people, would enact child-labor laws unless there were abuses of child labor that required correction. Referring to the observations of the honored Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER], while it is hardly a perfect defense for the committee, it is at least something in the nature of an explanation that the provision of this act in relation to the prohibition of the labor of children in the messenger service is copied from the statutes of Ohio. The arrangement worked well there and has the moral support of that Commonwealth.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. DOLLIVER. Certainly.

Mr. FORAKER. If the Senator will allow me, I am told that the provision is in the statutes of Ohio. I was not aware of that fact. But, Mr. President, that does not change my mind about it. A good many things get into the statutes, when there is discussion about them, that might be better left out. I do not know how it has worked in Ohio. I do not know what the provoking cause was for it. A committee, I suppose, reported on it to the Ohio legislature, and took some testimony, but I have never heard in all my life any complaint of harm coming to any boy who worked in a good, healthy atmosphere, such as stores and business houses and business offices usually are for boys to be employed in. My purpose in interrupting the Senator was only to ask what his information was that was given to the committee which induced them to put such a provision in the bill. I shall move to strike all that out at the proper time.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. President, I do not desire to detain the Senate any longer, except to say that there is running through the literature of the child-labor agitation, both in England and America, a close facsimile of the arguments that have just been so ably submitted by the Senator from Vermont and by the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. PILES. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. DOLLIVER. Certainly.

Mr. PILES. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa, should this bill be enacted into law, if it would not prevent me, if I were practicing law in the District of Columbia, from employing my own son to work in my law office, carrying papers to and from the court, if I saw fit to send him there and educate him in that way?

Mr. DOLLIVER. In the school hours of the daytime you would have to let him go home.

Mr. PILES. Now, if the Senator from Iowa will permit me, I should like to say that I shall urge the amendment which I have proposed to this bill at the proper time.

Mr. DOLLIVER. What is that amendment?

Mr. PILES. It provides that this law shall not have application to a boy who is dependent upon his own labor for his support, or who is the sole dependent of a disabled father or of a widowed mother or of a younger sister or brother. It really should be a dependent sister or brother, as the case might be.

Mr. SCOTT. If the Senator will put that in the bill I think there will be no opposition to it whatever.

Mr. WARREN. I rose to ask the Senator from Washington if he would not put in the word "dependent" in place of "younger," before the words "brother or sister?"

Mr. PILES. Yes; I will. I think it should be amended in that respect.

If I may be permitted just a moment, I believe if a boy desires to fight his own way in the world he should have that opportunity. I believe that the charities should look after those deserving of charity and who claim charity, but I believe a boy who says, "I seek no charity; I wish to make my own way in this world; I wish to support my aged or decrepit father or widowed mother or my dependent sister or brother," should have that opportunity in any healthful, moral employment; and, in my opinion, whenever the Government prevents a youth of that character from working in such employment it will have upon its statute books a law almost as detrimental to the citizenship of our country as the infamous system of working children in mines and factories.

Mr. President, under this bill no lawyer in this city would be permitted to employ his own son in his office, under the age of 14, to carry papers from his office to the court-house during the summer vacation, or to perform any light service in his office which would be, in the opinion of the father, of advantage for his son to perform, and which would have a tendency to educate his son along legal lines; neither could a merchant, during the vacation, employ his own son in his store, giving the boy such work as in the opinion of the father would be to his advantage and aid him in acquiring a thorough knowledge of the mercantile business.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. DOLLIVER. Certainly.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. With the permission of my friend from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER], I should like to ask my friend from Washington [Mr. PILES] a question.

Mr. PILES. Certainly.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Would the Senator from Washington, who is a lawyer and a very excellent one, begin the education of his son in his law office in the practice of the law and in the science of the art of jurisprudence under 14 years of age?

Mr. PILES. As to whether I would or would not, Mr. President, is not the question. I feel, however, that I should have that right, and that my boy should have that privilege. Take, for instance, the case of a young boy but 13 years of age whose father is a successful merchant. That boy is idle in the summer. What objection can there be to his working in his father's business office, or in his father's store, under the direction of his father, who certainly has his best interests at heart?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Just let us take up first the question of the law office.

Mr. PILES. Very well.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I did not ask whether the Senator thought he ought to have the right to put his boy under 14 years of age in his law office for the purpose of teaching him to be a lawyer; I asked him whether he thought, as a matter of wisdom, that any man who expected to make a lawyer out of his son would put him in a law office with that object in view when the boy was under 14 years of age.

Mr. PILES. I may say, for the information of my friend, that I knew a boy who went into his father's office when 13 years of age, and it did not injure him.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Did it help him?

Mr. PILES. In my opinion it did.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Then, I will ask the Senator this question: Would a lawyer practicing in a city like Washington, for instance, and having probably not only means, but also wisdom and humanity, preserve his place at the bar if he did not have his boy in school during the school sessions and on vacation or at play when the sessions were not being held, up to the age of 14 years? I myself have had some slight acquaintance with lawyers, and I confess that I hardly think that any boy would be aided in the mastery of that greatest of sciences by beginning its study before 14 years of age.

Mr. PILES. I am not discussing the advisability of a boy commencing the study of the science of the law at the age of 14; but I do know from my own observation that some of the ablest lawyers of my acquaintance have not thought it improper to employ their sons in their offices in vacation, teaching them some of the routine work of the office, keeping their minds employed, and paying them for their services so as to encourage them in their work; nor did I ever hear of such a course injuriously affecting a lawyer's standing at the bar.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Boys under 14 years of age?

Mr. PILES. Under 14 years of age.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Does the Senator advise that as a course of legal study?

Mr. PILES. I am not advising it; I have no objection to it, and I say that the right as it now exists should remain. I say it can not ordinarily be an injury to a boy, but it may be of great benefit to him.

I do not desire to trespass upon the time of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER], but I wish to say that I am in favor of a law which will prevent children from becoming public messengers, from working in mines, factories, and all other places deleterious to physical and intellectual development; also in all places which have a tendency to degrade or reduce the moral tone of the children of the country. But I believe, Mr. President, that every boy should have the right to fight his way in the world and an opportunity to make a name for himself in all employments which are not harmful to his physical, mental, and moral development; and when a boy to that end desires to engage in any such employment, I do not think he should be restrained by law from so doing and forced to accept public charity in order to attend the public schools. You need not, Mr. President, worry about a boy with the spirit of success in him, for he will find both the way and the means to acquire an education which will be of real and lasting benefit to him and the country in which he lives.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. President, I do not think it necessary for me to go into the matters just referred to by the Senator from Washington [Mr. PILES], because I find nothing in the proposed legislation that would interfere with the parental authority of which he speaks. I am, of course, impressed by what he has said and by what is said by men of such practical wisdom in this world as the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SCOTT] and the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR], and I probably would be entirely persuaded by what they say if I did not find the same arguments as to child labor scattered freely through the entire controversy from the beginning of the agitation more than half a century ago.

There could be no more serious weakening of this proposed law than to amend it in such a way as to allow people to permit their children to work when they are under the pressure of poverty and necessity. It does seem a little hard to let them starve when they might be saved by the labor of a child, but that same hardship appears in the enforcement of our health laws and in the enforcement of many of the schemes that society has adopted for its own preservation.
